PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES OF THE SIXTY-FIFTH CONGRESS SECOND SESSION.

SENATE.

MONDAY, December 3, 1917.

The first Monday of December being the day prescribed by the Constitution of the United States for the annual meeting of Congress, the second session of the Sixty-fifth Congress commenced this day.

The Senate assembled in its Chamber at the Capitol.

The VICE PRESIDENT (THOMAS R. MARSHALL, of Indiana) called the Senate to order at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we worship Thee. We know no sovereign will but Thine. Thy law is supreme in our lives and in our land. We have come together facing the mightiest task that has ever confronted any generation of men. As we stand in the light of Thy Word we thank Thee for the assurance that we have taken our place upon Thy side.

We pray Thy blessing upon all in authority in our land, that they may have a supreme passion for our highest ideals of national life. We pray Thy blessing upon all the people, that they may have a vision splendid of the task that Thou hast committed to us, and that they may count it a glad surrender of anything, a price not too high to pay for the establishment of the end that Thou hast in view—peace among men and the brotherhood of nations. We ask for Christ's sake. Amen.

NOTIFICATION TO THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. MARTIN submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 153), which was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

Resolved, That a committee consisting of two Senators be appointed to join such a committee as may be appointed by the House of Representatives to wait upon the President of the United States and inform him that a quorum of each House is assembled and that Congress is ready to receive any communication he may be pleased to make.

The VICE PRESIDENT appointed as the committee Mr. MARTIN and Mr. GALLINGER.

HOUR OF DAILY MEETING.

Mr. MARTIN submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 154), which was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the hour of daily meeting of the Senate be 12 o'clock meridian until otherwise ordered.

DEATH OF SENATOR PAUL O. HUSTING.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, with great personal sorrow, shared, I am certain, by the Members of this body, it becomes my sad duty to formally announce the death of my late colleague, Senator PAUL O. HUSTING. He died in Wisconsin under tragic circumstances, without precedent and parallel, I believe, in the history of this body.

The present time and occasion do not admit of a suitable testimonial to my late colleague, but hereafter and during the present session I shall ask the Senate to set apart a day when appropriate tribute may be paid to his memory.

Mr. President, I send the following resolutions to the desk and ask for their adoption.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the resolutions.

The resolutions (S. Res. 155) were read, considered by unanimous consent, and unanimously agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow of the death of the Hon. PAUL O. HUSTING, late a Senator from the State of Wisconsin.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, as a further mark of respect to Senator HUSTING's memory, I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was unanimously agreed to; and (at 12 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, December 4, 1917, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, December 3, 1917.

This being the day designated by the Constitution for the annual meeting of Congress, the Members of the House of Representatives assembled in their Hall for the second session of the Sixty-fifth Congress, and at 12 o'clock noon were called to order by the Speaker, who on taking the chair was greeted with general applause.

PRAYER.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father in Heaven, infinite in all Thine attributes, in whom we put our trust, out of the deeps of the soul we cry unto Thee for wisdom, strength, courage, to uphold, sustain and guide us in this, the darkest hour in human history. Help us as a people, from the least to the greatest, to appreciate the gravity of the situation, and unite us in the bonds of patriotism, that we may throw all our intellectual, moral, and physical strength into the contest, with a grim determination to win or perish; that the ideals enunciated by the Master may find their full fruition in liberty, justice and equal rights for all mankind; to the honor and glory of Thy holy name.

Impress each and every Member of the Congress now convened to take up the stupendous tasks which wait upon them, with the great responsibility resting upon them, that with persistent energy and consummate skill they may provide ways and means for a speedy and successful prosecution of the war which has been thrust upon us.

Let Thy blessing descend copiously upon our President and his advisers. Keep him in health, strength, and vigor, and imbue him with wisdom from above, that he may administer the affairs of state with justice and equity to all; and direct our soldiers and sailors in the prosecution of our just cause.

Be graciously near to the men who are called to the colors, that they may speak more eloquently than words, in deeds of heroism and valor, that Old Glory may float on in triumph, and make the world a better and a safer place for men to dwell in. And Thine be the praise, through Him who died that liberty, truth, justice and righteousness might live forever. Amen.

COMMITTEE TO WAIT UPON THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I move the immediate consideration of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read it.

House resolution 174.

Resolved, That a committee of three Members be appointed on the part of the House to join the committee appointed by the Senate to wait upon the President and inform him that a quorum of the two Houses has assembled, and that Congress is ready to receive any communication that he may be pleased to make.

The resolution was agreed to; and the Speaker appointed as the committee on the part of the House Mr. KITCHIN, Mr. FITZGERALD, and Mr. GILLETT.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed the following resolutions:

Resolved, That a committee consisting of two Senators be appointed to join such committee as may be appointed by the House of Representatives to wait upon the President of the United States and inform him that a quorum of each House is assembled, and that Congress is ready to receive any communication he may be pleased to make.

And that in compliance of the foregoing resolution the Vice President had appointed as said committee Mr. MARTIN and Mr. GALLINGER.

Also the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary inform the House of Representatives that a quorum of the Senate is assembled, and that the Senate is ready to proceed to business.

Also the following resolutions:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow of the death of the Hon. PAUL O. HUSTING, late a Senator from the State of Wisconsin.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased the Senate do now adjourn.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I ask leave of absence for an indefinite time for my colleague [Mr. NELSON] on account of important business.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks indefinite leave of absence for his colleague [Mr. NELSON]. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

NOTIFICATION OF THE SENATE.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following resolution.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

House resolution 175.

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House inform the Senate that a quorum of the House of Representatives has appeared and that the House is ready to proceed to business.

The resolution was agreed to.

HOUR OF DAILY MEETING.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I offer the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk, and ask for the immediate consideration thereof.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

House resolution 176.

Resolved, That until otherwise ordered the hour of daily meeting of the House of Representatives shall be 12 o'clock m.

The resolution was agreed to.

SWEARING IN OF MEMBERS ELECT.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask that Mr. WILLFRED W. LUFKIN, Member elect from the sixth district of Massachusetts, be sworn in.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts will bring the Member elect to the bar of the House.

Mr. TILSON. I ask that the Member elect from the fourth district of Connecticut, Mr. SCHUYLER MERRITT, be sworn in.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Connecticut will bring his colleague to the bar of the House. The Chair has examined the credentials of these two gentlemen and finds them correct.

Mr. LUFKIN and Mr. MERRITT appeared at the bar of the House and took the oath of office prescribed by law.

Mr. STERLING of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, the Hon. E. H. BESHLIN, Member elect from the twenty-eighth district of Pennsylvania, is present and would like to be sworn in as a Member at this time. He holds a certificate from the canvassing board of the congressional district, as is provided by the law of the State, and by this congressional canvassing board a certification is made to the State department of the State of Pennsylvania. This certification has been made, but the State department has not yet issued a certificate. Upon the primary evidence which the Member elect holds that certificate is issued. I take it that the entire membership of the House from Pennsylvania will concur in the statement that there is no doubt about the election of Representative BESHLIN, and I ask unanimous consent that he be sworn in at this time, on the primary evidence of his election that he holds.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I shall have to object to that. I do not believe it is wise to establish the precedent of swearing in a man as a Member of the House until the proper authorities have issued a certificate of his election.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, it has been the uniform practice of the House for a number of years to swear in Members if the statement is made that there is no question of the election.

Mr. SIMS. If there is no contest.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It has been done on both sides of the House, and is the practice unless there is some extraordinary reason why it should not be done.

Mr. MADDEN. There is no reason further than the necessary precaution that I believe ought to be taken not to make a man a Member of the House by swearing him in until the certificate of his election has been issued by the proper authorities of his State. I do not remember during my membership of the House of any man being sworn in here until his credentials were furnished.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Let me call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the gentleman from California [Mr. OSBORNE], on that side of the House, was sworn in in the absence of a certificate on the mere statement made here. That has been the universal custom of the House.

Mr. KITCHIN. I think that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] and the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. BOWERS] were both sworn in without a certificate.

Mr. FITZGERALD. And especially when the statement is made that there is no controversy over the election.

Mr. MADDEN. I would like to inquire of the gentleman from Pennsylvania who makes the request, whether the men at the front—the soldiers in the camps—who voted in this case have had their votes counted?

Mr. STERLING of Pennsylvania. In reply to the question by the gentleman from Illinois, the act of the Assembly of Pennsylvania requires a certificate primarily from the canvassing board of the district. The canvassing board counted the entire vote, including the soldiers' vote, and made the certification last Friday to the State department, but the State department has not yet issued the certificate, which it must under the law, based upon the statement of the canvassing board which the gentleman holds. As to there being any doubt about this result, I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that our friends on both sides of the House from Pennsylvania are always on guard as to their rights, and there is no doubt in this case as to the election.

Mr. MADDEN. I have no doubt about the election myself.

Mr. BUTLER. What was the majority?

Mr. STERLING of Pennsylvania. About seventeen hundred.

Mr. MADDEN. I have not any doubt about the election. My only anxiety was to prevent the establishment of a precedent. However, if precedents have already been established and similar cases have been before the House, which I did not recall, and no harm is to come from granting the request made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, of course I am not captious about my attitude and do not intend to object. I think it well enough to know the facts in the case, and as those facts have been stated by the gentleman from Pennsylvania I withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BESHLIN then appeared at the bar of the House and took the oath required by law.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. HICKS, for one week, on account of absence in Europe;

To Mr. BATHRICK, indefinitely, on account of important business;

To Mr. GREGG, for one day, having missed connections;

To Mr. DENISON, for one week, on account of important business;

To Mr. GALLIVAN, for two weeks, on account of important business;

To Mr. PARKER of New Jersey, for one week, on account of absence in Europe;

To Mr. DALE of Vermont, for one week, on account of absence in Europe; and

To Mr. LUNDEEN, on account of absence in the Hawaiian Islands on Government business.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I ask indefinite leave of absence for my colleague, Mr. TINKHAM, on account of absence in Europe.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. NOLAN. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request for my colleague, Mr. CURRY, on account of sickness.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

RECESS.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House stand in recess until 1 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that the House stand in recess until 1 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Accordingly the House stood in recess until 1 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.

AFTER THE RECESS.

The recess having expired, the House was called to order at 1 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.

NOTIFICATION OF THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, your committee appointed to wait upon the President and inform him that a quorum of the two Houses had assembled and that Congress was ready to receive any communication he might wish to make, with a like committee on the part of the Senate, has performed that duty, and the President wishes us to inform the House that he will be pleased to deliver his message in person at a joint session of the two Houses at 12 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m. to-morrow. I send the following resolution to the desk and ask its immediate consideration.

House concurrent resolution 28.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the two Houses of Congress assemble in the Hall of the House of Representatives on Tuesday, the 4th day of December, 1917, at 12 o'clock and 30 minutes in the afternoon, for the purpose of receiving such communication as the President of the United States shall be pleased to make to them.

The resolution was agreed to.

DEATH OF REPRESENTATIVE MARTIN, OF ILLINOIS.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, it is with profound regret that I announce the death of my colleague, the Hon. CHARLES MARTIN, of Illinois. I send to the Clerk's desk a resolution and ask for its present consideration, after which I shall move that the House adjourn out of respect to his memory. At some convenient time in the future I shall ask that a day be set apart for the delivery of eulogies in this House.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 185. *

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we pray for divine illumination that we may discern the measure of those responsibilities thrust upon us that can not be expressed in terms of commercial value, that lie deeper even than the bonds of blood or of national life. Give us the divine inspiration that we may discern God's leadership in this time of testing. Be it enacted, etc., That when an emergency exists or when war is imminent, creating a demand for supplies which can not easily be produced or supplied by privately owned or conducted factories not employing convict labor, the purchasing agents for the departments or bureaus charged with the buying of war or governmental supplies are hereby empowered, subject to the approval of the President, in addition to any method of purchase or procurement now authorized, to place an order for such supplies with the superintendent or other head of any Federal, naval, military, State, county, or municipal governmental penal institution willing to undertake the manufacture, production, and delivery of such supplies.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I introduce a joint resolution for reference to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 108) to provide for a commission to negotiate an international agreement as to the coinage of silver was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I ask that the joint resolution be printed in the RECORD.

The joint resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas the settlement of balances of trade with silver-using countries threatens the depletion of our stock of gold, although such countries prefer that such balances should be paid in silver; and

Whereas to relieve such condition it is necessary that the production of silver be increased; and

Whereas the enormous expansion in world credits during the past three years necessitates the enlargement of the base upon which such credits are founded: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That the President be authorized to appoint a commission of three members to visit our allied and the neutral nations of the world, with a view of making an international agreement as to the coinage of silver, subject to approval by Congress; and

SEC. 2. That the sum of $100,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated to pay the expenses and compensation of such commission.

Whereas the Congress did upon the 6th day of April, 1917, declare that the state of war exists between the United States of America and the Imperial Government of Germany; and

Whereas in the course of the war it has become manifest that the Governments of Austria-Hungary, of Bulgaria, and of Turkey have become and are vassals of the Imperial Government of Germany; and

Whereas the military forces and materials of Austria-Hungary, of Bulgaria, and of Turkey are being exerted and employed by Germany against the United States of America; and

Whereas the defeat of Austria-Hungary, of Bulgaria, and of Turkey is necessary to a military decision against Germany: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, etc., That the state of war exists between the United States of America and the Governments of Austria-Hungary, of Bulgaria, and of Turkey; and that the United States wage and make war against said Governments as and for the vassals of the Imperial Government of Germany.

I give notice that on Thursday, December 6, I will move to amend the standing rules of the Senate by adding the following paragraph to Rules XXVII:

"2. Conferees may not include in their report matters not committed to them by either House, and in case any new matter is included, the same shall be subject to a point of order, and upon such point of order being made by any Senator, if sustained by the Presiding Officer of the Senate, such new matter shall be ruled out and eliminated from the report: Provided, That the elimination of such new matter upon a point of order shall in no way affect the remainder of the conference report."

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS—AMY MAPES.

Mr. NORRIS. I ask permission from the Senate to withdraw all papers relating to the bill S. 6912, Sixty-third Congress, and the bill S. 712, Sixty-fourth Congress. The bills were introduced to obtain a pension for Amy Mapes, and no adverse report was made thereon.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, that action will be taken.

The order was reduced to writing, as follows:

Ordered, That leave be granted to withdraw from the files of the Senate the papers in relation to S. 6912, Sixty-third Congress, and S. 712, Sixty-fourth Congress, no adverse reports having been made thereon.

INDUSTRIAL PREPAREDNESS.

Mr. GALLINGER. I submit a resolution which I ask to have read, printed, and lie on the table subject to call.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 157), as follows:

Whereas the American Federation of Labor, at its recent convention in Buffalo, without a dissenting voice, went on record as favoring a policy of industrial preparedness, and the enactment of laws by Congress that will adequately protect all wage earners of our country against loss of employment through an invasion of our markets by the products of other nations; and

Whereas from the enactment of the Underwood-Simmons tariff law until the commencement of the European war, covering a period of about 10 months, the importations of foreign-made goods into our country reduced our favorable balance of trade by $260,866,122, an average of over $26,000,000 a month, being a reduction of 43 per cent, thus demonstrating conclusively that, if continued, it would have destroyed our industrial system; and

Whereas the total of our imports from all the nations of the world during the fiscal year 1917 was over $850,000,000 greater than for 1913, the year before the commencement of the European war, while the revenue for 1917 was $92,000,000 less than for 1913, conclusively proving that the duty rate of about 8 per cent which now prevails, the lowest in the history of the country, utterly fails to adequately protect either American industry or American labor: Therefore be it

Resolved, That in view of existing conditions, as well as in anticipation of the industrial conditions that will necessarily exist at the close of the war in which we are engaged, it is the duty of the Congress of the United States, without delay or hesitation, to place on the statute books a law that will protect all classes of our people, and especially the laboring and agricultural classes, from the disastrous effects of an inundation of foreign-made goods and products.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will lie on the table and be printed.

LOULA M. WILSON.

Mr. BECKHAM submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 156), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay from the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate to Loula M. Wilson, widow of Charles C. Wilson, late assistant clerk to the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Labor of the United States Senate, a sum equal to six months' salary at the rate he was receiving by law at the time of his death, said sum to be considered as including funeral expenses and all other allowances.

EMPLOYMENT OF ADDITIONAL CLERK.

Mr. POMERENE submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 158), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Privileges and Elections of the United States Senate be, and it is hereby, authorized to employ an additional clerk at the rate of $100 per month, to be paid out of the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate, from December 3, 1917, to the end of the present session of Congress.

FUNERAL OF THE LATE SENATOR HUSTING.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 159), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay, from the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate, the actual and necessary expenses incurred by the committee appointed by the Vice President in arranging for and attending the funeral of the Hon. Paul O. Husting, late a Senator from the State of Wisconsin, upon vouchers to be approved by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

JOINT MEETING OF THE TWO HOUSES.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives, which was read:

House concurrent resolution 28.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the two Houses of Congress assemble in the Hall of the House of Representatives on Tuesday, the 4th day of December, 1917, at 12 o'clock and 30 minutes in the afternoon, for the purpose of receiving such communication as the President of the United States shall be pleased to make to them.

Mr. MARTIN. I move that the Senate concur in the resolution which has just been read.

The motion was agreed to.

IDA COTTRELL HODGSON—ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair desires to call to the attention of the Senate the following state of facts with reference to House bill 5833. It is a bill granting six months' pay to Ida Cottrell Hodgson, widow of Frederick Grady Hodgson, deceased, colonel, United States Army, retired. The records of both the House and the Senate disclose that this bill was passed at the first session of the present Congress. It was signed by the Speaker of the House, but did not arrive at the Senate in time to be signed by the Presiding Officer of the Senate. The Chair believes that he has a right now to attach his signature to the bill. Is there any objection on the part of any Senator? If the question is thought to be of sufficient moment to require an investigation, the Chair will wait.

Mr. WARREN. The bill was within 10 feet of the Presiding Officer when the hour came for final adjournment. The passage of the bill was entirely regular, and I know of no reason why it should not be signed now, as it undoubtedly would have been signed had it reached the Vice President's desk before final adjournment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is nothing in the Constitution of the United States to prevent its being signed and the Chair knows of nothing in the rules of the Senate, and as no attention has been called to any statute the Chair will sign the bill and lay it before the Senate.

The Secretary announced the signature of the Vice President to the enrolled bill (H. R. 5833) granting six months' pay to Ida Cottrell Hodgson, widow of Frederick Grady Hodgson, deceased, colonel, United States Army, retired.

PROMOTION OF EXPORT TRADE.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The morning business is closed, and the calendar under Rule VIII is in order.

The bill (S. 634) to promote export trade, and for other purposes, was announced as first in order on the calendar.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The pending amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. The pending amendment is on page 3, line 23, before the word "competitors" to insert the word "domestic."

Mr. SMOOT. May I ask whether the bill has been read?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It has been read and amended, and there are certain pending amendments, but the time is so near for the convening of the two Houses in joint session that the Chair will assume the responsibility of not submitting the question on the amendment.

JOINT MEETING OF THE TWO HOUSES.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The hour having arrived at which, under the concurrent resolution, the Senate of the United States is to proceed to the Hall of the House of Representatives for the purpose of hearing any communication that the President of the United States may desire to make to the Congress of the United States, the order will now be carried out.

Thereupon the Senate, preceded by its Sergeant at Arms, and headed by the Vice President and the Secretary, proceded to the Hall of the House of Representatives.

At 1 o'clock and 12 minutes p. m. the Senate returned to its Chamber, and the Vice President resumed the chair.

ADDRESS BY THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES (H. DOC. NO. 468).

The address of the President of the United States this day delivered at a joint session of the two Houses of Congress is as follows:

Gentlemen of the Congress, eight months have elapsed since I last had the honour of addressing you. They have been months crowded with events of immense and grave significance for us. I shall not undertake to retail or even to summarize those events. The practical particulars of the part we have played in them will be laid before you in the reports of the Executive Departments. I shall discuss only our present outlook upon these vast affairs, our present duties, and the immediate means of accomplishing the objects we shall hold always in view.

I shall not go back to debate the causes of the war. The intolerable wrongs done and planned against us by the sinister masters of Germany have long since become too grossly obvious and odious to every true American to need to be rehearsed. But I shall ask you to consider again and with a very grave scrutiny our objectives and the measures by which we mean to attain them; for the purpose of discussion here in this place is action, and our action must move straight towards definite ends. Our object is, of course, to win the war; and we shall not slacken or suffer ourselves to be diverted until it is won. But it is worth while asking and answering the question, When shall we consider the war won?

From one point of view it is not necessary to broach this fundamental matter. I do not doubt that the American people know what the war is about and what sort of an outcome they will regard as a realization of their purpose in it. As a nation we are united in spirit and intention. I pay little heed to those who tell me otherwise. I hear the voices of dissent,—who does not? I hear the criticism and the clamour of the noisily thoughtless and troublesome. I also see men here and there fling themselves in impotent disloyalty against the calm, indomitable power of the nation. I hear men debate peace who understand neither its nature nor the way in which we may attain it with uplifted eyes and unbroken spirits. But I know that none of these speaks for the nation. They do not touch the heart of anything. They may safely be left to strut their uneasy hour and be forgotten.

But from another point of view I believe that it is necessary to say plainly what we here at the seat of action consider the war to be for and what part we mean to play in the settlement of its searching issues. We are the spokesmen of the American people and they have a right to know whether their purpose is ours. They desire peace by the overcoming of evil, by the defeat once for all of the sinister forces that interrupt peace and render it impossible, and they wish to know how closely our thought runs with theirs and what action we propose. They are impatient with those who desire peace by any sort of compromise,—deeply and indignantly impatient,—but they will be equally impatient with us if we do not make it plain to them what our objectives are and what we are planning for in seeking to make conquest of peace by arms.

I believe that I speak for them when I say two things: First, that this intolerable Thing of which the masters of Germany have shown us the ugly face, this menace of combined intrigue and force which we now see so clearly as the German power, a Thing without conscience or honour or capacity for covenanted peace, must be crushed and, if it be not utterly brought to an end, at least shut out from the friendly intercourse of the nations; and, second, that when this Thing and its power are indeed defeated and the time comes that we can discuss peace,—when the German people have spokesmen whose word we can believe and when those spokesmen are ready in the name of their people to accept the common judgment of the nations as to what shall henceforth be the bases of law and of covenant for the life of the world,—we shall be willing and glad to pay the full price for peace, and pay it ungrudgingly. We know what that price will be. It will be full, impartial justice,—justice done at every point and to every nation that the final settlement must affect, our enemies as well as our friends.

You catch, with me, the voices of humanity that are in the air. They grow daily more audible, more articulate, more persuasive, and they come from the hearts of men everywhere. They insist that the war shall not end in vindictive action of any kind; that no nation or people shall be robbed or punished because the irresponsible rulers of a single country have themselves done deep and abominable wrong. It is this thought that has been expressed in the formula "No annexations, no contributions, no punitive indemnities." Just because this crude formula expresses the instinctive judgment as to right of plain men everywhere it has been made diligent use of by the masters of German intrigue to lead the people of Russia astray—and the people of every other country their agents could reach, in order that a premature peace might be brought about before autocracy has been taught its final and convincing lesson, and the people of the world put in control of their own destinies.

But the fact that a wrong use has been made of a just idea is no reason why a right use should not be made of it. It ought to be brought under the patronage of its real friends. Let it be said again that autocracy must first be shown the utter futility of its claims to power or leadership in the modern world. It is impossible to apply any standard of justice so long as such forces are unchecked and undefeated as the present masters of Germany command. Not until that has been done can Right be set up as arbiter and peace-maker among the nations. But when that has been done,—as, God willing, it assuredly will be,—we shall at last be free to do an unprecedented thing, and this is the time to avow our purpose to do it. We shall be free to base peace on generosity and justice, to the exclusion of all selfish claims to advantage even on the part of the victors.

Let there be no misunderstanding. Our present and immediate task is to win the war, and nothing shall turn us aside from it until it is accomplished. Every power and resource we possess, whether of men, of money, or of materials, is being devoted and will continue to be devoted to that purpose until it is achieved. Those who desire to bring peace about before that purpose is achieved I counsel to carry their advice elsewhere. We will not entertain it. We shall regard the war as won only when the German people say to us, through properly accredited representatives, that they are ready to agree to a settlement based upon justice and the reparation of the wrongs their rulers have done. They have done a wrong to Belgium which must be repaired. They have established a power over other lands and peoples than their own,—over the great Empire of Austria-Hungary, over hitherto free Balkan states, over Turkey, and within Asia,—which must be relinquished.

Germany's success by skill, by industry, by knowledge, by enterprise we did not grudge or oppose, but admired, rather. She had built up for herself a real empire of trade and influence, secured by the peace of the world. We were content to abide the rivalries of manufacture, science, and commerce that were involved for us in her success and stand or fall as we had or did not have the brains and the initiative to surpass her. But at the moment when she had conspicuously won her triumphs of peace she threw them away, to establish in their stead what the world will no longer permit to be established, military and political domination by arms, by which to oust where she could not excel the rivals she most feared and hated. The peace we make must remedy that wrong. It must deliver the once fair lands and happy peoples of Belgium and northern France from the Prussian conquest and the Prussian menace, but it must also deliver the peoples of Austria-Hungary, the peoples of the Balkans, and the peoples of Turkey, alike in Europe and in Asia, from the impudent and alien dominion of the Prussian military and commercial autocracy.

We owe it, however, to ourselves to say that we do not wish in any way to impair or to rearrange the Austro-Hungarian Empire. It is no affair of ours what they do with their own life, either industrially or politically. We do not purpose or desire to dictate to them in any way. We only desire to see that their affairs are left in their own hands, in all matters, great or small. We shall hope to secure for the peoples of the Balkan peninsula and for the people of the Turkish Empire the right and opportunity to make their own lives safe, their own fortunes secure against oppression or injustice and from the dictation of foreign courts or parties.

And our attitude and purpose with regard to Germany herself are of a like kind. We intend no wrong against the German Empire, no interference with her internal affairs. We should deem either the one or the other absolutely unjustifiable, absolutely contrary to the principles we have professed to live by and to hold most sacred throughout our life as a nation.

The people of Germany are being told by the men whom they now permit to deceive them and to act as their masters that they are fighting for the very life and existence of their Empire, a war of desperate self-defense against deliberate aggression. Nothing could be more grossly or wantonly false, and we must seek by the utmost openness and candour as to our real aims to convince them of its falseness. We are in fact fighting for their emancipation from fear, along with our own,—from the fear as well as from the fact of unjust attack by neighbours or rivals or schemers after world empire. No one is threatening the existence or the independence or the peaceful enterprise of the German Empire.

The worst that can happen to the detriment of the German people is this, that if they should still, after the war is over, continue to be obliged to live under ambitious and intriguing masters interested to disturb the peace of the world, men or classes of men whom the other peoples of the world could not trust, it might be impossible to admit them to the partnership of nations which must henceforth guarantee the world's peace. That partnership must be a partnership of peoples, not a mere partnership of governments. It might be impossible, also, in such untoward circumstances, to admit Germany to the free economic intercourse which must inevitably spring out of the other partnerships of a real peace. But there would be no aggression in that; and such a situation, inevitable because of distrust, would in the very nature of things sooner or later cure itself, by processes which would assuredly set in.

The wrongs, the very deep wrongs, committed in this war will have to be righted. That of course. But they can not and must not be righted by the commission of similar wrongs against Germany and her allies. The world will not permit the commission of similar wrongs as a means of reparation and settlement. Statesmen must by this time have learned that the opinion of the world is everywhere wide awake and fully comprehends the issues involved. No representative of any self-governed nation will dare disregard it by attempting any such covenants of selfishness and compromise as were entered into at the Congress of Vienna. The thought of the plain people here and everywhere throughout the world, the people who enjoy no privilege and have very simple and unsophisticated standards of right and wrong, is the air all governments must henceforth breathe if they would live. It is in the full disclosing light of that thought that all policies must be conceived and executed in this midday hour of the world's life. German rulers have been able to upset the peace of the world only because the German people were not suffered under their tutelage to share the comradeship of the other peoples of the world either in thought or in purpose. They were allowed to have no opinion of their own which might be set up as a rule of conduct for those who exercised authority over them. But the congress that concludes this war will feel the full strength of the tides that run now in the hearts and consciences of free men everywhere. Its conclusions will run with those tides.

All these things have been true from the very beginning of this stupendous war; and I can not help thinking that if they had been made plain at the very outset the sympathy and enthusiasm of the Russian people might have been once for all enlisted on the side of the allies, suspicion and distrust swept away, and a real and lasting union of purpose effected. Had they believed these things at the very moment of their revolution and had they been confirmed in that belief since, the sad reverses which have recently marked the progress of their affairs towards an ordered and stable government of free men might have been avoided. The Russian people have been poisoned by the very same falsehoods that have kept the German people in the dark, and the poison has been administered by the very same hands. The only possible antidote is the truth. It can not be uttered too plainly or too often.

From every point of view, therefore, it has seemed to be my duty to speak these declarations of purpose, to add these specific interpretations to what I took the liberty of saying to the Senate in January. Our entrance into the war has not altered our attitude towards the settlement that must come when it is over. When I said in January that the nations of the world were entitled not only to free pathways upon the sea but also to assured and unmolested access to those pathways I was thinking, and I am thinking now, not of the smaller and weaker nations alone, which need our countenance and support, but also of the great and powerful nations, and of our present enemies as well as our present associates in the war. I was thinking, and am thinking now, of Austria herself, among the rest, as well as of Serbia and of Poland. Justice and equality of rights can be had only at a great price. We are seeking permanent, not temporary, foundations for the peace of the world and must seek them candidly and fearlessly. As always, the right will prove to be the expedient.

What shall we do, then, to push this great war of freedom and justice to its righteous conclusion? We must clear away with a thorough hand all impediments to success and we must make every adjustment of law that will facilitate the full and free use of our whole capacity and force as a fighting unit.

One very embarrassing obstacle that stands in our way is that we are at war with Germany but not with her allies. I therefore very earnestly recommend that the Congress immediately declare the United States in a state of war with Austria-Hungary. Does it seem strange to you that this should be the conclusion of the argument I have just addressed to you? It is not. It is in fact the inevitable logic of what I have said. Austria-Hungary is for the time being not her own mistress but simply the vassal of the German Government. We must face the facts as they are and act upon them without sentiment in this stern business. The government of Austria-Hungary is not acting upon its own initiative or in response to the wishes and feelings of its own peoples but as the instrument of another nation. We must meet its force with our own and regard the Central Powers as but one. The war can be successfully conducted in no other way. The same logic would lead also to a declaration of war against Turkey and Bulgaria. They also are the tools of Germany. But they are mere tools and do not yet stand in the direct path of our necessary action. We shall go wherever the necessities of this war carry us, but it seems to me that we should go only where immediate and practical considerations lead us and not heed any others.

The financial and military measures which must be adopted will suggest themselves as the war and its undertakings develop, but I will take the liberty of proposing to you certain other acts of legislation which seem to me to be needed for the support of the war and for the release of our whole force and energy.

It will be necessary to extend in certain particulars the legislation of the last session with regard to alien enemies; and also necessary, I believe, to create a very definite and particular control over the entrance and departure of all persons into and from the United States.

Legislation should be enacted defining as a criminal offense every wilful violation of the presidential proclamations relating to alien enemies promulgated under section 4067 of the Revised Statutes and providing appropriate punishments; and women as well as men should be included under the terms of the acts placing restraints upon alien enemies. It is likely that as time goes on many alien enemies will be willing to be fed and housed at the expense of the Government in the detention camps and it would be the purpose of the legislation I have suggested to confine offenders among them in penitentiaries and other similar institutions where they could be made to work as other criminals do.

Recent experience has convinced me that the Congress must go further in authorizing the Government to set limits to prices. The law of supply and demand, I am sorry to say, has been replaced by the law of unrestrained selfishness. While we have eliminated profiteering in several branches of industry it still runs impudently rampant in others. The farmers, for example, complain with a great deal of justice that, while the regulation of food prices restricts their incomes, no restraints are placed upon the prices of most of the things they must themselves purchase; and similar inequities obtain on all sides.

It is imperatively necessary that the consideration of the full use of the water power of the country and also the consideration of the systematic and yet economical development of such of the natural resources of the country as are still under the control of the federal government should be immediately resumed and affirmatively and constructively dealt with at the earliest possible moment. The pressing need of such legislation is daily becoming more obvious.

The legislation proposed at the last session with regard to regulated combinations among our exporters, in order to provide for our foreign trade a more effective organization and method of cooperation, ought by all means to be completed at this session.

And I beg that the members of the House of Representatives will permit me to express the opinion that it will be impossible to deal in any but a very wasteful and extravagant fashion with the enormous appropriations of the public moneys which must continue to be made, if the war is to be properly sustained, unless the House will consent to return to its former practice of initiating and preparing all appropriation bills through a single committee, in order that responsibility may be centred, expenditures standardized and made uniform, and waste and duplication as much as possible avoided.

Additional legislation may also become necessary before the present Congress again adjourns in order to effect the most efficient coordination and operation of the railway and other transportation systems of the country; but to that I shall, if circumstances should demand, call the attention of the Congress upon another occasion.

If I have overlooked anything that ought to be done for the more effective conduct of the war, your own counsels will supply the omission. What I am perfectly clear about is that in the present session of the Congress our whole attention and energy should be concentrated on the vigorous, rapid, and successful prosecution of the great task of winning the war.

We can do this with all the greater zeal and enthusiasm because we know that for us this is a war of high principle, debased by no selfish ambition of conquest or spoliation; because we know, and all the world knows, that we have been forced into it to save the very institutions we live under from corruption and destruction. The purposes of the Central Powers strike straight at the very heart of everything we believe in; their methods of warfare outrage every principle of humanity and of knightly honour; their intrigue has corrupted the very thought and spirit of many of our people; their sinister and secret diplomacy has sought to take our very territory away from us and disrupt the Union of the States. Our safety would be at an end, our honour forever sullied and brought into contempt were we to permit their triumph. They are striking at the very existence of democracy and liberty.

It is because it is for us a war of high, disinterested purpose, in which all the free peoples of the world are banded together for the vindication of right, a war for the preservation of our nation and of all that it has held dear of principle and of purpose, that we feel ourselves doubly constrained to propose for its outcome only that which is righteous and of irreproachable intention, for our foes as well as for our friends. The cause being just and holy, the settlement must be of like motive and quality. For this we can fight, but for nothing less noble or less worthy of our traditions. For this cause we entered the war and for this cause will we battle until the last gun is fired.

I have spoken plainly because this seems to me the time when it is most necessary to speak plainly, in order that all the world may know that even in the heat and ardour of the struggle and when our whole thought is of carrying the war through to its end we have not forgotten any ideal or principle for which the name of America has been held in honour among the nations and for which it has been our glory to contend in the great generations that went before us. A supreme moment of history has come. The eyes of the people have been opened and they see. The hand of God is laid upon the nations. He will show them favour, I devoutly believe, only if they rise to the clear heights of His own justice and mercy.

ADJOURNMENT UNTIL FRIDAY.

Mr. MARTIN. I move that the Senate adjourn until noon on Friday.

Mr. POMERENE. Will the Senator from Virginia withhold his motion for just a moment?

Mr. MARTIN. I will do so.

Mr. POMERENE. As Senators are aware, Senate bill 634, the so-called export bill, has been made the unfinished business. I should like to have gone on with it to-day, but at least one of the Senators has said to me that he desires to address the Senate on the subject. I shall ask on Friday, if there is nothing of more importance before us, that the Senate shall proceed with the bill after the morning business has been completed.

Mr. MARTIN. I renew my motion that the Senate adjourn until noon on Friday.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 1 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Friday, December 7, 1917, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, December 4, 1917.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

By Thy grace, O God, our Heavenly Father, we live, conceive, resolve, and aspire. Make us susceptible to the push from within and the pull from without, which are ever leading us onward and upward to larger life, clearer vision, higher resolves, nobler aspirations and achievements. We thank Thee for the beautiful world in which Thou hast placed us, for the homes we live in, for the Government of which we are integral parts, with all its sacred institutions and ever-widening opportunities. We thank Thee that our Republic is in no way responsible for the terrible war now raging. We are in it not by choice, but because we are forced to defend our rights, protect our lives, homes, and all that is dear to our hearts. Hasten the day, we beseech Thee, when peace, not war; hope, not despair; good will, not revenge; love, not hate, shall reign supreme in all the earth, in the Spirit of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

ADDRESS OF THE PRESIDENT (H. DOC. NO. 468).

But I shall ask you to consider again and with a very grave scrutiny our objectives and the measures by which we mean to attain them; for the purpose of discussion here in this place is action, and our action must move straight towards definite ends. Our object is, of course, to win the war; and we shall not slacken or suffer ourselves to be diverted until it is won. [Applause.] But it is worth while asking and answering the question, When shall we consider the war won?

From one point of view it is not necessary to broach this fundamental matter. I do not doubt that the American people know what the war is about and what sort of an outcome they will regard as a realization of their purpose in it. As a nation we are united in spirit and intention. I pay little heed to those who tell me otherwise. I hear the voices of dissent,—who does not? I hear the criticism and the clamour of the noisily thoughtless and troublesome. [Applause.] I also see men here and there fling themselves in impotent disloyalty against the calm, indomitable power of the nation. I hear men debate peace who understand neither its nature nor the way in which we may attain it with uplifted eyes and unbroken spirits. But I know that none of these speaks for the nation. They do not touch the heart of anything. They may safely be left to strut their uneasy hour and be forgotten. [Applause.]

But from another point of view I believe that it is necessary to say plainly what we here at the seat of action consider the war to be for and what part we mean to play in the settlement of its searching issues. We are the spokesmen of the American people and they have a right to know whether their purpose is ours. They desire peace by the overcoming of evil, by the defeat once for all of the sinister forces that interrupt peace and render it impossible, and they wish to know how closely our thought runs with theirs and what action we propose. They are impatient with those who desire peace by any sort of compromise,—deeply and indignantly impatient,—but they will be equally impatient with us if we do not make it plain to them what our objectives are and what we are planning for in seeking to make conquest of peace by arms.

I believe that I speak for them when I say two things: First, that this intolerable Thing of which the masters of Germany have shown us the ugly face, this menace of combined intrigue and force which we now see so clearly as the German power, a Thing without conscience or honour or capacity for covenanted peace, must be crushed [applause] and, if it be not utterly brought to an end, at least shut out from the friendly intercourse of the nations; and, second, that when this Thing and its power are indeed defeated and the time comes that we can discuss peace,—when the German people have spokesmen whose word we can believe and when those spokesmen are ready in the name of their people to accept the common judgment of the nations as to what shall henceforth be the bases of law and of covenant for the life of the world [applause]—we shall be willing and glad to pay the full price for peace, and pay it ungrudgingly. We know what that price will be. It will be full, impartial justice,—justice done at every point and to every nation that the final settlement must affect, our enemies as well as our friends. [Applause.]

You catch, with me, the voices of humanity that are in the air. They grow daily more audible, more articulate, more persuasive, and they come from the hearts of men everywhere. They insist that the war shall not end in vindictive action of any kind [applause]; that no nation or people shall be robbed or punished because the irresponsible rulers of a single country have themselves done deep and abominable wrong. [Applause.] It is this thought that has been expressed in the formula "No annexations, no contributions, no punitive indemnities." Just because this crude formula expresses the instinctive judgment as to right of plain men everywhere it has been made diligent use of by the masters of German intrigue to lead the people of Russia astray—and the people of every other country their agents could reach, in order that a premature peace might be brought about before autocracy has been taught its final and convincing lesson, and the people of the world put in control of their own destinies.

But the fact that a wrong use has been made of a just idea is no reason why a right use should not be made of it. It ought to be brought under the patronage of its real friends. Let it be said again that autocracy must first be shown the utter futility of its claims to power or leadership in the modern world. It is impossible to apply any standard of justice so long as such forces are unchecked and undefeated as the present masters of Germany command. Not until that has been done can Right be set up as arbiter and peace-maker among the nations. But when that has been done,—as, God willing, it assuredly will be,—we shall at last be free to do an unprecedented thing, and this is the time to avow our purpose to do it. [Applause.] We shall be free to base peace on generosity and justice, to the exclusion of all selfish claims to advantage even on the part of the victors. [Applause.]

Let there be no misunderstanding. Our present and immediate task is to win the war, and nothing shall turn us aside from it until it is accomplished. Every power and resource we possess, whether of men, of money, or of materials, is being devoted and will continue to be devoted to that purpose until it is achieved. Those who desire to bring peace about before that purpose is achieved I counsel to carry their advice elsewhere. [Applause.] We will not entertain it. We shall regard the war as won only when the German people say to us, through properly accredited representatives, that they are ready to agree to a settlement based upon justice and the reparation of the wrongs their rulers have done. [Applause.] They have done a wrong to Belgium which must be repaired. They have established a power over other lands and peoples than their own,—over the great Empire of Austria-Hungary, over hitherto free Balkan states, over Turkey, and within Asia,—which must be relinquished. [Applause.]

Germany's success by skill, by industry, by knowledge, by enterprise we did not grudge or oppose, but admired, rather. She had built up for herself a real empire of trade and influence, secured by the peace of the world. We were content to abide the rivalries of manufacture, science, and commerce that were involved for us in her success and stand or fall as we had or did not have the brains and the initiative to surpass her. But at the moment when she had conspicuously won her triumphs of peace she threw them away, to establish in their stead what the world will no longer permit to be established, military and political domination by arms, by which to oust where she could not excel the rivals she most feared and hated. The peace we make must remedy that wrong. It must deliver the once fair lands and happy peoples of Belgium and northern France [applause] from the Prussian conquest and the Prussian menace, but it must also deliver the peoples of Austria-Hungary, the peoples of the Balkans, and the peoples of Turkey, alike in Europe and in Asia, from the impudent and alien domination of the Prussian military and commercial autocracy. [Applause.]

We owe it, however, to ourselves to say that we do not wish in any way to impair or to rearrange the Austro-Hungarian Empire. It is no affair of ours what they do with their own life, either industrially or politically. We do not purpose or desire to dictate to them in any way. We only desire to see that their affairs are left in their own hands, in all matters, great or small. We shall hope to secure for the peoples of the Balkan peninsula and for the people of the Turkish Empire the right and opportunity to make their own lives safe, their own fortunes secure against oppression or injustice and from the dictation of foreign courts or parties.

And our attitude and purpose with regard to Germany herself are of a like kind. We intend no wrong against the German Empire, no interference with her internal affairs. We should deem either the one or the other absolutely unjustifiable, absolutely contrary to the principles we have professed to live by and to hold most sacred throughout our life as a nation.

The people of Germany are being told by the men whom they now permit to deceive them and to act as their masters that they are fighting for the very life and existence of their Empire, a war of desperate self-defense against deliberate aggression. Nothing could be more grossly or wantonly false, and we must seek by the utmost openness and candour as to our real aims to convince them of its falseness. We are in fact fighting for their emancipation from fear, along with our own,—from the fear as well as from the fact of unjust attack by neighbours or rivals or schemers after world empire. No one is threatening the existence or the independence or the peaceful enterprise of the German Empire.

The worst that can happen to the detriment of the German people is this, that if they should still, after the war is over, continue to be obliged to live under ambitious and intriguing masters interested to disturb the peace of the world, men or classes of men whom the other peoples of the world could not trust, it might be impossible to admit them to the partnership of nations which must henceforth guarantee the world's peace. [Applause.] That partnership must be a partnership of peoples, not a mere partnership of governments. It might be impossible, also, in such untoward circumstances, to admit Germany to the free economic intercourse which must inevitably spring out of the other partnerships of a real peace. But there would be no aggression in that; and such a situation, inevitable because of distrust, would in the very nature of things sooner or later cure itself, by processes which would assuredly set in.

The wrongs, the very deep wrongs, committed in this war will have to be righted. That of course. But they cannot and must not be righted by the commission of similar wrongs against Germany and her allies. The world will not permit the commission of similar wrongs as a means of reparation and settlement. Statesmen must by this time have learned that the opinion of the world is everywhere wide awake and fully comprehends the issues involved. No representative of any self-governed nation will dare disregard it by attempting any such covenants of selfishness and compromise as were entered into at the Congress of Vienna. The thought of the plain people here and everywhere throughout the world, the people who enjoy no privilege and have very simple and unsophisticated standards of right and wrong, is the air all governments must henceforth breathe if they would live. It is in the full disclosing light of that thought that all policies must be conceived and executed in this midday hour of the world's life. German rulers have been able to upset the peace of the world only because the German people were not suffered under their tutelage to share the comradeship of the other peoples of the world either in thought or in purpose. They were allowed to have no opinion of their own which might be set up as a rule of conduct for those who exercised authority over them. But the congress that concludes this war will feel the full strength of the tides that run now in the hearts and consciences of free men everywhere. Its conclusions will run with those tides.

All these things have been true from the very beginning of this stupendous war; and I can not help thinking that if they had been made plain at the very outset the sympathy and enthusiasm of the Russian people might have been once for all enlisted on the side of the Allies, suspicion and distrust swept away, and a real and lasting union of purpose effected. Had they believed these things at the very moment of their revolution and had they been confirmed in that belief since, the sad reverses which have recently marked the progress of their affairs towards an ordered and stable government of free men might have been avoided. The Russian people have been poisoned by the very same falsehoods that have kept the German people in the dark, and the poison has been administered by the very same hands. The only possible antidote is the truth. It can not be uttered too plainly or too often.

From every point of view, therefore, it has seemed to be my duty to speak these declarations of purpose, to add these specific interpretations to what I took the liberty of saying to the Senate in January. Our entrance into the war has not altered our attitude towards the settlement that must come when it is over. When I said in January that the nations of the world were entitled not only to free pathways upon the sea but also to assured and unmolested access to those pathways I was thinking, and I am thinking now, not of the smaller and weaker nations alone, which need our countenance and support, but also of the great and powerful nations, and of our present enemies as well as our present associates in the war. I was thinking, and am thinking now, of Austria herself, among the rest, as well as of Serbia and of Poland. Justice and equality of rights can be had only at a great price. We are seeking permanent, not temporary, foundations for the peace of the world and must seek them candidly and fearlessly. As always, the right will prove to be the expedient.

What shall we do, then, to push this great war of freedom and justice to its righteous conclusion? We must clear away with a thorough hand all impediments to success and we must make every adjustment of law that will facilitate the full and free use of our whole capacity and force as a fighting unit.

One very embarrassing obstacle that stands in our way is that we are at war with Germany but not with her allies. I therefore very earnestly recommend that the Congress immediately declare the United States in a state of war with Austria-Hungary. [Applause.] Does it seem strange to you that this should be the conclusion of the argument I have just addressed to you? It is not. It is in fact the inevitable logic of what I have said. Austria-Hungary is for the time being not her own mistress but simply the vassal of the German Government. [Applause.] We must face the facts as they are and act upon them without sentiment in this stern business. The government of Austria-Hungary is not acting upon its own initiative or in response to the wishes and feelings of its own peoples but as the instrument of another nation. We must meet its force with our own and regard the Central Powers as but one. The war can be successfully conducted in no other way. The same logic would lead also to a declaration of war against Turkey and Bulgaria. [Applause.] They also are the tools of Germany. But they are mere tools and do not yet stand in the direct path of our necessary action. We shall go wherever the necessities of this war carry us, but it seems to me that we should go only where immediate and practical considerations lead us and not heed any others.

The financial and military measures which must be adopted will suggest themselves as the war and its undertakings develop, but I will take the liberty of proposing to you certain other acts of legislation which seem to me to be needed for the support of the war and for the release of our whole force and energy.

It will be necessary to extend in certain particulars the legislation of the last session with regard to alien enemies; and also necessary, I believe, to create a very definite and particular control over the entrance and departure of all persons into and from the United States. [Applause.]

Legislation should be enacted defining as a criminal offense every wilful violation of the presidential proclamations relating to alien enemies promulgated under section 4067 of the Revised Statutes and providing appropriate punishments; and women as well as men should be included under the terms of the acts placing restraints upon alien enemies. [Applause.] It is likely that as time goes on many alien enemies will be willing to be fed and housed at the expense of the Government in the detention camps and it would be the purpose of the legislation I have suggested to confine offenders among them in penitentiaries and other similar institutions where they could be made to work as other criminals do. [Applause.]

Recent experience has convinced me that the Congress must go further in authorizing the Government to set limits to prices. The law of supply and demand, I am sorry to say, has been replaced by the law of unrestrained selfishness. While we have eliminated profiteering in several branches of industry it still runs impudently rampant in others. The farmers, for example, complain with a great deal of justice that, while the regulation of food prices restricts their incomes, no restraints are placed upon the prices of most of the things they must themselves purchase; and similar inequities obtain on all sides.

It is imperatively necessary that the consideration of the full use of the water power of the country and also the consideration of the systematic and yet economical development of such of the natural resources of the country as are still under the control of the federal government should be immediately resumed and affirmatively and constructively dealt with at the earliest possible moment. The pressing need of such legislation is daily becoming more obvious.

The legislation proposed at the last session with regard to regulated combinations among our exporters, in order to provide for our foreign trade a more effective organization and method of cooperation, ought by all means to be completed at this session.

And I beg that the members of the House of Representatives will permit me to express the opinion that it will be impossible to deal in any but a very wasteful and extravagant fashion with the enormous appropriations of the public moneys which must continue to be made, if the war is to be properly sustained, unless the House will consent to return to its former practice of initiating and preparing all appropriation bills through a single committee, in order that responsibility may be centred, expenditures standardized and made uniform, and waste and duplication as much as possible avoided. [Applause.]

Additional legislation may also become necessary before the present Congress again adjourns in order to effect the most efficient coordination and operation of the railway and other transportation systems of the country; but to that I shall, if circumstances should demand, call the attention of the Congress upon another occasion.

If I have overlooked anything that ought to be done for the more effective conduct of the war, your own counsels will supply the omission. What I am perfectly clear about is that in the present session of the Congress our whole attention and energy should be concentrated on the vigorous, rapid, and successful prosecution of the great task of winning the war. [Applause.]

We can do this with all the greater zeal and enthusiasm because we know that for us this is a war of high principle, debased by no selfish ambition of conquest or spoliation; because we know, and all the world knows, that we have been forced into it to save the very institutions we live under from corruption and destruction. The purposes of the Central Powers strike straight at the very heart of everything we believe in; their methods of warfare outrage every principle of humanity and of knightly honour; their intrigue has corrupted the very thought and spirit of many of our people; their sinister and secret diplomacy has sought to take our very territory away from us and disrupt the Union of the States. Our safety would be at an end, our honour forever sullied and brought into contempt were we to permit their triumph. They are striking at the very existence of democracy and liberty.

It is because it is for us a war of high, disinterested purpose, in which all the free peoples of the world are banded together for the vindication of right, a war for the preservation of our nation and of all that it has held dear of principle and of purpose, that we feel ourselves doubly constrained to propose for its outcome only that which is righteous and of irreproachable intention, for our foes as well as for our friends. The cause being just and holy, the settlement must be of like motive and quality. For this we can fight, but for nothing less noble or less worthy of our traditions. For this cause we entered the war and for this cause will we battle until the last gun is fired. [Applause.]

I have spoken plainly because this seems to me the time when it is most necessary to speak plainly, in order that all the world may know that even in the heat and ardour of the struggle and when our whole thought is of carrying the war through to its end we have not forgotten any ideal or principle for which the name of America has been held in honour among the nations and for which it has been our glory to contend in the great generations that went before us. A supreme moment of history has come. The eyes of the people have been opened and they see. The hand of God is laid upon the nations. He will show them favour, I devoutly believe, only if they rise to the clear heights of His own justice and mercy. [Prolonged applause.]

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, December 5, 1917.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father in Heaven, help us to worship Thee in spirit and in truth, that we may praise and magnify Thy Holy Name, in thought and deed. For it is written:

"Blessed is the man that walketh not in the counsel of the ungodly, nor standeth in the way of sinners, nor sitteth in the seat of the scornful:

"But his delight is in the law of the Lord; and in His law doth he meditate day and night.

"And he shall be like a tree planted by the rivers of water, that bringeth forth his fruit in his season; his leaf also shall not wither; and whatsoever he doeth shall prosper."

May we seek Thy counsels and walk worthy of the vocation whereunto we are called, that our work may be well pleasing in Thy sight, as individuals and as a Nation, in these days which try men's souls; and thus prove ourselves worthy of the dignity Thou hast conferred upon us. In Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House the following personal request, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, U. S.,
Washington, D. C., December 5, 1917.

DEAR MR. SPEAKER: I respectfully request leave of absence for Mr. BROWNE of Wisconsin for one week on account of illness.

Yours,

I. L. LENROOT.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the request will be granted. There was no objection.

The SPEAKER laid before the House two letters from the Doorkeeper of the House of Representatives, which were referred to the Committee on Accounts and ordered to be printed, one transmitting a statement of money received from sale of waste paper from December 1, 1916, to December 1, 1917 (H. CALENDAR WEDNESDAY.

The SPEAKER. This is Calendar Wednesday, and the Clerk will call the roster of committees.

The Clerk proceeded to call the roll of committees.

REQUISITION OF SHIPS BY THE GOVERNMENT.

Mr. PADGETT (when the Committee on Naval Affairs was called). Mr. Speaker, there is a bill on the Union Calendar, H. R. 1770, Calendar No. 6, to authorize the President in time of war or national emergency to requisition or take over ships, boats, and other water craft for the use of the Government. That legislation has already been enacted in other bills, and I ask that this bill be stricken from the calendar.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the bill will lie on the table.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the next committee.

The Clerk resumed the call of committees.

LEAVES OF ABSENCE BY HOMESTEAD ENTRYMEN.

Mr. FERRIS (when the Committee on the Public Lands was called). Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill H. R. 4617.

The SPEAKER. Which calendar is it on?

Mr. FERRIS. It is on the Union Calendar; Union Calendar No. 35, page 9.

The SPEAKER. The House automatically resolves itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill, with the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] in the chair.

Thereupon the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. FITZGERALD in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House for the consideration of the bill H. R. 4617, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 4617) to authorize absence by homestead settlers and entrymen, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That during the pendency of the existing war any homestead settler or entryman shall be entitled to a leave of absence from his land for the purpose of performing farm labor, and such absence, while actually engaged in farm labor, shall, upon compliance with the terms of this act, be counted as constructive residence: Provided, That each settler or entryman leaving his claim for the purpose herein provided shall file notice thereof in the United States Land Office, and at the expiration of the calendar year file in said land office of the district wherein his claim is situated a written statement, under oath and corroborated by two witnesses, giving the date or dates when he left his claim, date or dates of return thereto, and where and for whom he was engaged in farm labor during such period or periods of absence: Provided further, That nothing herein shall excuse any homestead settler or entryman from making improvements or performing the cultivation required by applicable law upon his claim or entry. The Secretary of the Interior is authorized to provide rules and regulations for carrying this act into effect.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I understand we are to have two hours of debate, one hour on a side.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for one hour.

Mr. FERRIS. I will use only a few minutes. This bill, Mr. Chairman, was drawn in the Interior Department and dropped in the basket by myself as chairman of the committee at the request of the department. It is desired by them. It is in all things a proper measure. It is also a necessary one.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield before he proceeds?

Mr. FERRIS. Certainly.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman kindly indicate what number on the calendar the bill is?

Mr. FERRIS. The calendar number is 35. It will be found on page 9. The bill is H. R. 4617. It is on the Union Calendar.

As I have just stated, Mr. Chairman, this bill was drafted in the Interior Department. It is a little bill affecting absences of homesteaders during this war. It allows them to go out and seek employment. It has a twofold purpose. It helps the homesteader. It helps the nonhomesteader to get help. It increases production. It is all right. It carries no appropriation.

As the favorable report of the Interior Department shows, it is necessary for two reasons. First, it is necessary to help the homesteader out by allowing him to absent himself from his claim and earn something on the outside. It is also necessary to secure labor to look after the crops, for, as everyone knows, labor is very scarce. More than a million able-bodied men have just been carried into the service of the Government for the war.

The report of the department is very clear and very emphatic, and I do not think I could do better than to read it to the House. It is just a paragraph. The letter is from Secretary Lane, under date of May 17, 1917. I read:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, May 17, 1917.

MY DEAR MR. FERRIS: I transmit herewith draft of measure designed to aid in the cultivation and harvesting of crops in the public land States during the pending war.

The bill proposes to permit absence of the settler or entryman from his homestead when engaged in farm labor and to credit such periods of absence as residence in meeting the requirements of the homestead laws. This is conditioned on his filing evidence of the number and periods of his absences, and that while so absent he was engaged in farm labor. The bill also requires him to meet the requirements of the homestead law in the cultivation and improvement of his own claim, for it would be of no benefit if he failed to cultivate his own land and spent the time cultivating the land of others.

I believe such legislation as this is timely and desirable, and that if enacted it would help to meet the increasing demand for farm labor.

Cordially, yours,

FRANKLIN K. LANE, Secretary.

The letter is addressed to myself as chairman of the committee.

Mr. SHERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FERRIS. Certainly.

Mr. SHERWOOD. The bill as drawn is approved by the Secretary of the Interior?

Mr. FERRIS. Yes. I have just read the favorable report. He drafted the bill.

Mr. SHERWOOD. And it is approved by a unanimous report of the committee?

Mr. FERRIS. Yes; a unanimous report.

Mr. LENROOT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FERRIS. Certainly.

Mr. LENROOT. I should like to ask the gentleman how much leave of absence an entryman is entitled to under the general homestead law?

Mr. FERRIS. On a showing, I think a man can get six months.

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FERRIS. Certainly.

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman state what the law is in reference to men in the military or naval service?

Mr. FERRIS. We passed a bill in the last session providing that when a man is actually in the service he is given credit for the time he is in the service exactly as if he were residing on his homestead, and his claim is not subject to be homesteaded or contested by anyone else; so it fixes up the man in the Army service all right. This bill merely proposes to let those not in the war go out and work. This relates only to those homesteaders not in the war. Only lasts during the war. I do not think there can be any objection.

Mr. DYER. The time a man is in the service is credited to him the same as if he was residing on the land.

Mr. FERRIS. Yes.

Mr. LENROOT. But this is not a matter of service in the war.

Mr. FERRIS. Oh, no. The gentleman from Wisconsin did not understand my statement. The gentleman from Missouri was asking me about a bill which we passed in the last session, an entirely different bill.

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. In answering a question as to the leave of absence under the general homestead law the gentleman stated that it was six months. I beg to correct that. It is five months.

Mr. FERRIS. The gentleman would know better than I about that, and I gladly accept his statement. It was an error on my part of one month. I guess I was thinking of the six months' period to get on the land at the initiation of the homestead. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. DOWELL. Under this bill it is necessary for a man at the expiration of his leave of absence to return and serve out the rest of his time on his land under the law.

Mr. FERRIS. Oh, precisely; and to carry on the cultivation that is required of him. I do not think it is such a tremendously important bill, but there is a great clamor in the West for farm labor, and the Secretary of the Interior thought this bill would accomplish two things: First, that it would allow a homesteader to get out and earn a little money for himself, and, second, that it would furnish labor which is so much needed in the wheat section. It is almost impossible to get help out there at all. It never was as scarce or high priced in the memory of any of us here.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I want to put a question to the gentleman, so that it may be unnecessary later on, when we are considering other bills. The gentleman is chairman of the Committee on the Public Lands. During the last session of Congress it was the common understanding that no bills would be called up except war bills.

Mr. FERRIS. That is true.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman understand that the action of the majority has changed in that respect?

Mr. FERRIS. I have no information as to the policy of the House. The gentleman knows I am not a leader. I do not pretend to know anything about the general policy of the House.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I regard the gentleman as a leader on that side.

Mr. FERRIS. The gentleman flatters me too much.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman is the chairman of his committee. Does he regard this as a war measure?

Mr. FERRIS. The Secretary of the Interior did regard it as a war measure for two reasons. One is that it allows the homesteader an opportunity to go away from his land and work for other people during harvest time, when there is a scarcity of labor, and in that way to earn a little money for himself, and, second, it helps to furnish labor to harvest the crops. As the gentleman knows, they have had a great deal of trouble about that. More than a million men have been carried away into the war, and it leaves a shortage of farm labor. So the bill serves two purposes, and I feel sure it will do no harm to anyone or to the Government.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It may be a serious matter as affecting the farmers, but it has no direct bearing upon the war.

Mr. FERRIS. Anything which helps the farmers to raise crops helps us to win the war.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. This is the first bill coming up in this new session of Congress. It will establish a precedent with regard to war legislation.

Mr. FERRIS. I would most respectfully refer the gentleman from Pennsylvania to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] about the policy of the House. I certainly know nothing about that, and do not pretend to know anything about it. Mr. KITCHIN is always willing and able to go into those things. I do not pretend to do more than help with them.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman has not consulted with the gentleman from North Carolina?

Mr. FERRIS. I have not. I called the bill up when our committee was unexpectedly called. In the last session the Secretary of the Interior thought this was an emergency measure. I tried to get it through when the calendar was called, but did not succeed in doing so at that time, so I feel it my duty to try and get it through at the first opportunity. It affects some 200,000 homesteaders. It is important. The House I feel sure will be glad to pass it.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman from Oklahoma state when the notice required by the proviso must be filed? It provides that the settler leaving a claim shall file notice with the Land Office. Can he wait until he is ready to go back?

Mr. FERRIS. No; I think he must file his notice when he desires to go.

Mr. WALSH. The next clause requires the filing at the expiration of the calendar year of a written statement of where and for whom and when he worked. Now, might he not think, under the phraseology of the bill, that he could wait and file his notice at the same time?

Mr. FERRIS. If the gentleman believes that there is any doubt about that I would be very glad to have him offer an amendment and to help get it adopted. This bill was drafted by the Interior Department. They thought it important to meet an emergency, or two emergencies; first, to let the homesteader get away from his land and earn a little something for himself and carry on his cultivation on his own claim, and, second, that it would furnish some labor to the farmers in the West and help them harvest their crops. If there is anything wrong with it I shall be glad to assist in putting it in the proper shape. No one wants any provision to creep into the law that is not proper. We are always anxious to obtain help on our bills.

Mr. WALSH. Does not the gentleman think it would be well to have the notice filed at the time the homesteader leaves his claim, so that the department may know where these men are?

Mr. FERRIS. I think so; and if the bill as drawn does not cover it, I will be glad to have the gentleman offer an amendment to correct it in that respect.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FERRIS. Certainly.

Mr. MADDEN. I understood the gentleman from Oklahoma to say that the Secretary of the Interior considered this an emergency measure.

Mr. FERRIS. Yes; he did. His written report shows that. He also had his office confer with me about it several times.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman will recall that he also regarded the building of a railway in Alaska as an emergency measure.

Mr. FERRIS. I know, and the gentleman from Illinois and myself were not in complete accord with him on that occasion, but we were ironed out very flat, and the House of Representatives did not agree with us.

Mr. MADDEN. I still think we were right and the Secretary of the Interior was wrong.

Mr. FERRIS. The gentleman from Illinois and I may cling to our opinions still about that, but that is water that has gone over the wheel. [Laughter.]

Mr. MADDEN. I am inclined to think that the gentleman from Oklahoma is only half-hearted in his support of the Secretary of the Interior on that matter.

Mr. FERRIS. Oh, no; that is not the case at all. I merely said I did not think this was any life-and-death proposition because, as the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] says, they can come in and make a formal application for leave of absence, which has to come up through the Land Office, and takes three or four months, and then has to be finally acted upon by the Interior Department. They can get a leave of absence, but it has to be acted upon by the Commissioner of the General Land Office and the Secretary of the Interior, and the harvest is over before they can get the leave of absence. This law will allow them to notify the Land Office that they are going away to labor and when they get back they must file a notice that they did labor on the farm for a certain length of time.

Mr. LENROOT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FERRIS. Yes.

Mr. LENROOT. I think the gentleman is mistaken in saying that this formality is required in the five months' leave of absence.

Mr. FERRIS. I thought that that was the fact. I know I had a tremendous lot of appeals to hurry up the applications.

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FERRIS. Certainly.

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. The five months' leave of absence under the provisions of the law is granted without having to make an application. They simply notify the local land office that they intend to leave, and at the end of five months they must file a notice that they have returned to the claim, and it is not necessary to have it acted upon by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. FERRIS. Well, the gentleman has been the register of a land office and knows more about it than I do; but I say that I have had numbers of appeals to hurry up the approval of the leave of absence, and I wonder if the gentleman is not mistaken.

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. I will say to the gentleman that if the leave of absence is wanted beyond the five months provided by the law it must be procured as the gentleman from Oklahoma has stated—it must be acted upon by the local office and transmitted to the Interior Department for final action.

Mr. FERRIS. I gladly accept the gentleman's explanation. I have had trouble in years gone by getting them approved. It may be better now.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FERRIS. I will.

Mr. TILSON. Did I understand the gentleman to state that there were two hours' debate on each side on this question?

Mr. FERRIS. No; one hour on each side, and I am not going to consume any more time.

Mr. TILSON. I wondered why this measure required so much time.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If the gentleman from Oklahoma will yield, I think I can get the attention of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] at this time.

Mr. FERRIS. I will yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, who wants to ask the gentleman from North Carolina a question.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I desire to ask the gentleman from North Carolina whether there is to be any change in policy in regard to war legislation at this session? At the last session it was decided that we would consider nothing but war legislation. It would be interesting and important to know if at this session new bills are to be taken up.

Mr. KITCHIN. I will say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that I hope, after we get rid of the bills now on the calendar, our legislation will be confined to the supply bills, to war measures, and I would include in that the conservation bills that we have been discussing for the last year or two.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. But at the present time it is not the intention of the majority to take up general legislation?

Mr. KITCHIN. That is my idea, and I hope that the sentiment of the House will be with me. I think, too, the questions of woman suffrage and prohibition should be considered. My judgment is that we can consider them before Christmas and get those two questions behind us, one way or the other.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If prohibition and woman suffrage are to be considered they will come up early?

Mr. KITCHIN. Before Christmas; and I have no doubt that a day will be fixed and that at least a week's notice will be given.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will pension legislation be included?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes; I imagine that it will.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. If the gentleman from Oklahoma will yield, I will ask the gentleman from North Carolina a question. Does he not think it would be a good thing to abolish the Christmas holidays?

Mr. KITCHIN. No; I do not think so, and I will tell the gentleman from Missouri why. [Applause.] Many of us have our homes away from Washington, and I reckon that about two-thirds of the membership of the House are in my fix. I am bound to go home for a week or two to attend to my business—arrange with my creditors for the next year. [Laughter.]

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Let me make this suggestion——

Mr. KITCHIN. Before the gentleman makes his suggestion let me say that if we stay here through the Christmas holidays it will not facilitate legislation one minute or hasten the adjournment one minute, because this House can get through all of its necessary legislation if it makes up its mind—and it will make up its mind—by the 1st of June. [Applause.] But we can not make up the mind of gentlemen at the other end of the Capitol. We can not control them. Take the last session; this House would have got through every bit of its work certainly by June 1, and if we had known that the Senate would cooperate with us we could have got through by May 15. We were adjourning a week at a time with a gentlemen's agreement for three weeks, waiting on the Senate, but we could not hurry them. I do not think by our staying in session or keeping the Senate in session during the holidays we will quicken adjournment one day.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. They may improve as time goes on in the Senate. [Laughter.]

Mr. KITCHIN. I shall not agree with our distinguished Speaker to that extent, but I do agree with him that there is a great deal of room for improvement.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. My idea about this is that if we went to work and got rid of these bills we could get away from here some time before election next fall, but if we go on at the same gait at which we have been going we shall not get away from here until away along in November.

Mr. KITCHIN. I presume our Speaker in using the term "we" is representing the Senate.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Oh, no—God forbid! [Laughter.]

Mr. KITCHIN. The Speaker knows that no House or Senate in any Congress in this country or any legislative body in any other country ever facilitated work more or was more prompt and diligent in legislation than was the House during the last session of Congress.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. That is true.

Mr. KITCHIN. Of course, there was more harmonious, concerted action in this body during the last session than in any other Congress. I am quite sure that the House can get through its work by taking a good recess at Christmas.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I have felt out the temper of the House, and that is all I was trying to do.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Oklahoma yield to me for a moment?

Mr. FERRIS. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. I understood the gentleman from North Carolina to say there would be no legislation considered except such legislation as is along the lines he enumerated.

Mr. KITCHIN. I said I hoped so. I can not tell definitely, but I hope the House will confine itself to such legislation, and I believe the sentiment and thought of the House will be along those lines, will conclude that that is the wisest and best course to take.

Mr. MADDEN. I desire to call the attention of the gentleman from North Carolina to the fact that there is a very widespread sentiment throughout the country in favor of an increase in compensation for the men who are engaged in the Postal Service of the United States, and legislation will probably be reported from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads in favor of that sort of increase.

Mr. KITCHIN. Such things will come from the different committees who have charge of the supply bills. I spoke particularly of the passage of the supply bills.

Mr. MADDEN. Such legislation as that would probably not come in the supply bill.

Mr. KITCHIN. It would come in the supply bill like any other legislation relative to the Post Office. Of course, a Member could make a point of order, and then we might obtain a rule, just as we have done heretofore.

Mr. MADDEN. But it is not contemplated to shut out that kind of legislation?

Mr. KITCHIN. Oh, no—whatever would naturally come in the Post Office bill. Sometimes new legislation is put on the bill or we have a special rule. Sometimes no point of order is made.

Mr. MADDEN. But the legislation could be brought in outside of the bill?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes; and I will say to the gentleman if you could get it in outside you could get it in under the rule right on the bill.

Mr. NOLAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. NOLAN. Is it the gentleman's intention that this suggestion should apply to general legislation on Calendar Wednesday?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes; I would say so, except as to those bills already on the calendar.

Mr. NOLAN. I mean legislation considered by the various committees and reported, which goes on the calendar. Is it the gentleman's idea that general legislation should be interfered with that would come up on Calendar Wednesday?

Mr. KITCHIN. I hope the House will conclude that the only things we should take up are the matters designated.

Mr. NOLAN. Under the general rules of the House, legislation of the kind I have in mind is in order on Calendar Wednesday. Is it the gentleman's idea that we should dispense with Calendar Wednesday?

Mr. KITCHIN. No. My idea is that if a majority of the House does not want to take up certain legislation, it ought not to be taken up.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Referring to the suggestion of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] that we will not expedite business because we will anticipate the Senate, in my judgment the best way to expedite the public business is for each body to do its own business as expeditiously as practicable.

Mr. KITCHIN. Just as we have been doing.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I shall not argue that with the gentleman. I think we have done very well, but I think we could have done better, and I am not imputing any delay to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] in making that allusion; but if the House is through with its business ahead of the Senate, or if the Senate is through with its business in advance of the House, then the body that is tardy will have focused upon it the influence and criticism of the people of the country, and that is the power that will expedite the business of the American Congress.

Mr. KITCHIN. I wish to say to the gentleman that I can assure him that we will get through all of the business of the House many days, many weeks, and, I believe, several months before the other end will.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I appreciate the gentleman's assurance, but I desire to renew this suggestion, and I submit it to the consideration of the House. We could have gotten through our business last session much sooner than we did.

Mr. KITCHIN. I doubt it——

Mr. MONTAGUE. One minute——

Mr. KITCHIN. I doubt it. We had all the time on hand—if the gentleman will recall, and I assume he was here——

Mr. MONTAGUE. I was here all the time.

Mr. KITCHIN. I assume so, and I am going to assume everybody was here—he will recall that we had to adjourn for lack of business. We had all our bills passed and over in the Senate, and we adjourned for weeks at a time under a gentleman's agreement.

Mr. MONTAGUE. And I will say to the gentleman that it was that agreement, in my opinion, that expedited the adjournment of Congress.

Mr. KITCHIN. But we had dispatched our business.

Mr. MONTAGUE. That is the argument I am making, and I will say to the gentleman that the quicker we dispatch our business the quicker business will be dispatched at the other end of the Capitol.

Mr. KITCHIN. Do I understand the gentleman to be arguing that we should take no recess for the holidays?

Mr. MONTAGUE. I was not speaking of that. I was throwing out the general suggestion that we should not determine the pace of our business at this end of the Capitol by the fact that we move faster than at the other end of the Capitol.

Mr. KITCHIN. I agree with the gentleman that the faster we move here there will be some impetus on the other end of the Capitol to move faster.

Mr. MONTAGUE. But the public at large does not make a distinction between the two branches of the Congress, and if there is a delay it imputes it to both branches of the Congress indiscriminately, and therefore if we desire to get through before the election is held next year—and I have doubts of our getting through before that time—the quicker we perform our duties at this end of the Capitol the quicker will it be done at the other end of the Capitol. An adjournment of the House under a "gentleman's agreement" relieves us of censure, and quickens the movement of the other branch of the Congress, and vice versa.

Mr. KITCHIN. The gentleman is right, but I see no reason for complaining. We are at work here with bills on the calendar set apart for this day, and gentlemen interrupt us for quite a length of time in talking about what we ought to do when we are already doing it, and in that way they are stopping business.

Mr. LENROOT. Will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. The time is in the control of the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. FERRIS. I yield.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from North Carolina if the House takes a Christmas recess would that interfere with the consideration of the appropriation bills by the various committees having those bills in charge during the Christmas recess?

Mr. KITCHIN. I think not; I had that in mind. There are no appropriation bills ready now, and none will be ready before Christmas. It is impossible for them to do it with the greatest amount of work they have to do. These several committees are now at work, but it will be after Christmas before their bills will be ready.

Mr. LENROOT. Will they work during the Christmas recess?

Mr. KITCHIN. I imagine so as well as if we were in session.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FERRIS. I yield.

Mr. STAFFORD. By what authority does the gentleman say the committees having appropriation bills in charge will work during the Christmas holidays?

Mr. KITCHIN. They are already working upon them through their subcommittees.

Mr. STAFFORD. A year ago the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations having the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill in charge, was convened a week before the regular session and worked during that entire week in order to have the bill in readiness before the holidays. And I question whether the members of the Committee on Appropriations are going to work during the Christmas holidays.

Mr. KITCHIN. I imagine that some members of those committees will remain here during the holidays as they have always done.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FERRIS. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. Does not the gentleman think we had better proceed with the discussion of this bill and stop worrying about the election next fall?

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I hope now these gentlemen who are so anxious for business will stop delaying the business of the House and let us proceed with what is on the calendar. [Applause.]

SEVERAL MEMBERS. Amen!

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, unless somebody else has a question, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] has an amendment which he desires to offer.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, I desire some time.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, coming back to the consideration of the bill that is before the committee, it is a bill that authorizes, in addition to the five months' leave of absence now authorized by law, leave of absence for the entire year if engaged in farm labor, to be credited to the entryman as if he had remained upon his homestead.

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes.

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman state why they include only farm labor? There are many other industrial occupations that a man can give his time to for the benefit of the war. Why not include any labor?

Mr. LENROOT. I can not give the gentleman the reason for that because I am opposed to the entire bill. I suppose this bill will pass. It has, I suppose, the solid support of the West. It has, I suppose, the support of the administration, inasmuch as it is favorably recommended by the Secretary of the Interior. During the last session it was sought to enact this bill as a war measure. No one would think of acting favorably upon a bill of this kind as a peace measure; but there would be much more reason for its passage in time of peace than there is now when we are in war. We all know that the greatest efforts are being made to cultivate every acre of land possible and produce the maximum amount of food to support ourselves and our allies. And yet, strangely enough, this bill if enacted into law, instead of increasing the production of food, will actually decrease its production. It offers a premium to a homesteader to not plant his land with crops, but to leave it and engage in farm labor.

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes.

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. I would like to call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that there is nothing in this bill which would relieve the homestead entryman from the cultivation required under the homestead law—that is, that at least 20 acres shall be cultivated and planted with crops each year.

Mr. LENROOT. Now, that is entirely consistent with the statement I have made. If a homestead entryman has 160 acres, it is true that under this bill he still would be required to cultivate 20 acres; but under this bill, where he might be cultivating the other 140 acres, it will lie idle and raise not one pound of food or one bushel of grain. Is not that correct?

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. That is correct, and I would like to add this to it: That in many cases the homestead entrymen are now cultivating all of the available land upon their 160 acres or 320 acres. The rest is fit for nothing except for grazing purposes, and therefore they have done all that is within their power.

Mr. LENROOT. I want to ask the gentleman a question, then. If any homestead entryman is cultivating 160 acres and produces crops from it, how much time has he got to leave that entry and work for somebody else in farm labor?

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. Permit me to say that that character of homestead entryman would never make the application for this.

Mr. LENROOT. That is the point I am making. So the observation the gentleman makes does not apply at all to any man who would take advantage of this bill.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Does not the gentleman realize that there are many homesteaders that have no means to cultivate more than 20 acres, and that in order to get the means with which to do it they must go away and work to secure the money for that purpose?

Mr. LENROOT. No; I do not.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Well, it is an actual fact that there are thousands of homesteaders in the western country who have no capital beyond possibly a team of horses and who are unable to buy seed to plant or implements to cultivate the land.

Mr. LENROOT. The gentleman understands that under the present law they can have an absence of five months in which to earn money and provide means to cultivate their crops. Now, if you are going to permit him to have 7 months in addition, or 12 months, cultivating only the minimum required by law, any intelligent man will see that it does not mean increased production of food in this country, but that it means a decreased production of food.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Would it not mean an increased production of food if this man were engaged in farm labor for some other entryman, if he does not have the means to cultivate his own land?

Mr. LENROOT. Oh, yes; but as between a man working for wages for some one else and cultivating his own land, the gentleman will see that the increased production of food will be greater upon the land cultivated by the homestead entryman than if he be working for some one else. And in that connection let me say that the five months' leave of absence now granted the entryman is sufficient to provide that labor, so far as planting crops is concerned, in addition to his own, and, so far as harvesting crops is concerned, in addition to his own. Two months of planting, three months of harvesting, mean all that is necessary in either the planting or harvesting of the crop. So, Mr. Chairman, we have this strange condition of affairs, that in this crying need for a greater food production we have the Secretary of the Interior indorsing a bill and a committee bringing before this House a bill that invites homestead entrymen in the West not to cultivate to the utmost their entry but to cultivate the very least that the law requires.

Mr. JUUL and Mr. SINNOTT rose.

Mr. LENROOT. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. JUUL].

Mr. JUUL. Is it not a fact that in line 5 the bill specially provides that in order to gain this leave of absence he must be engaged in farm labor?

Mr. LENROOT. Certainly.

Mr. JUUL. And is it not a further fact that in line 5, on page 2, it provides that nothing therein shall excuse any homestead settler or entryman from making improvements or performing the cultivation required by applicable law upon his claim or entry?

Mr. LENROOT. I have just answered that, that in one case the law requires 20 acres, and he would cultivate 20, whereas if he stayed on his land he might be cultivating 40 or 60 or 80 or 100, or even 160. He will not be doing it under this bill.

Mr. JUUL. Is it not a fact that he might go on a neighboring farm supplied with horses and plows and other material, and that he may not himself have such materials with which to work?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes; but as I stated a while ago, a man working for $2 or $2.50 a day for some one else—where that other man would get some labor and still cultivate his land—and letting his own go uncultivated, does not mean an increased production of food, but a decrease.

Mr. JUUL. But if he has machinery in the one case and not in the other case, would it not be an increase?

Mr. LENROOT. No; not at all, because that man will get labor to cultivate and gather his crop.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes; I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. SINNOTT. Does not the gentleman know that, with reference to five months' leave of absence granted under the present law, that the five months' leave of absence as a rule—at least, in my State, where the homesteads are taken at an elevation of something like 3,000 feet above the sea level—is taken during the winter months, so that the homesteader may leave his own homestead in the inclement weather, when there is very little need of his presence, whereas this proposed additional leave of absence would enable a man to take that leave of absence during the growing and crop-gathering season, and therefore would enable him to assist in the production of crops.

Mr. LENROOT. I will say in reply to that, that if a man is situated as the gentleman from Oregon says he is situated—I take it that he is speaking of a timbered country now——

Mr. SINNOTT. No; a nontimbered country, bordering on the timbered country.

Mr. LENROOT. Well, it is not necessary for that man to take his leave of absence for the five months. The gentleman will admit that.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Even there he would starve to death absolutely.

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes.

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. I just want to state to the gentleman with reference to the statement he has made, that most of the entrymen would refuse this privilege if allowed. I want to say that a very small percentage of the homestead entrymen in the West, so far as I am acquainted with them, even now avail of this privilege of a five months' leave of absence, and it is only availed of where the parties are not in sufficiently strong financial circumstances to enable them to cultivate their full entry. If they were able financially to cultivate their full entry, they would be engaged in that work at the prices they are receiving for farm products to-day. It is only to relieve the very small percentage that are not able to do this that this bill is drawn, and it would enable them to go out and help other people, and in that sense it is an emergency war measure. Just now in the West it is absolutely necessary on account of the labor situation that something of this kind be granted.

Mr. LENROOT. The gentleman evidently speaks of work on the beet crop. Is not five months' absence sufficient for a man to engage in farm labor, both in the planting of the crop and in the harvesting of the same?

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. No; it is not. In my judgment, there are many instances where it is not.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LENROOT. Not now. I want to get through. In some instances what the gentleman says may be true. I will grant that. But here is what your practical situation is: Here is a farmer who has a son. Under the law, without the passage of this bill—assume that he has taken an entry—he will cultivate it and live upon it. He will cultivate it to the fullest extent, but the son will go back to the home after this bill is passed. He will be able to make a showing of being engaged in farm labor, helping his father; and in that kind of a case you would have 20 acres cultivated, whereas without this bill he would have 160 acres.

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. The son goes back to help his father put in 50 or maybe 500 acres. Is not that preferable?

Mr. LENROOT. Oh, no. The gentleman assumes that if the son will not go back to the farm the farmer will get no help on his farm.

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. That is true.

Mr. LENROOT. I do not believe it is true, because men may be engaged in farm labor under supervision and direction without previous experience, and such men may enable the farmer to cultivate the full amount of his crop, whereas if you take a man away from the land which he is cultivating you will not increase the crop on the one hand but have decreased it on the other.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes.

Mr. WHEELER. Perhaps 75 per cent of the homesteaders will cultivate 20 acres and no more, simply what is required under the law.

Mr. LENROOT. That is true under this bill.

Mr. WHEELER. If that is true, if a large portion of that 75 per cent is employed elsewhere, don't you think that perhaps they will cultivate 40 acres instead of 20 acres?

Mr. LENROOT. No; not elsewhere, and for this reason: If the law as it stands were complied with as now, with the present high prices of farm products, the man on his land will cultivate every acre he can cultivate. But under this law, where he can work for wages somewhere, he will be content with 20 acres being cultivated and the balance of the entry lying idle.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. At the present price of farm products a man can earn more money in cultivating his own land and selling his products than by working for somebody else, and as soon as he gets enough money to enable him to cultivate his own land he will not need this.

Mr. LENROOT. That is the condition in time of peace.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. That situation does exist in time of peace.

Mr. LENROOT. The whole question resolves itself into this: Will you get a greater amount of production if this bill is passed, or will you get a less amount?

I have no question but that you will have a less amount of production if this bill is passed; and if that is true, then in this crisis, in this time of war, when every ounce of food production is needed, this bill ought not to pass. Congress ought not to enact legislation that is going to decrease food production. It ought to enact legislation that will increase food production.

Miss RANKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LENROOT. I yield to the lady from Montana.

Miss RANKIN. Does not the gentleman realize that the homesteaders are going to leave their own land and work on other land if it is so much more profitable to do so, as the gentleman assumes, and that it will merely mean that they will take their five months in the summer which they have under the existing law, and it will force them to live on their claims during the winter months when there is nothing that they can do on their own claims, whereas this will release their labor in the winter months. If it is so much more profitable to work on other land, they are going to do it anyway.

Mr. LENROOT. I would like to ask the lady from Montana, if a man can do nothing on his own farm in the winter months, what work will there be for him to do for some other farmer in the winter months?

Mr. SINNOTT. Some of them work in lumber camps during the winter.

Mr. LENROOT. Ah, but this bill does not provide for that. This bill proposes to give entrymen leave of absence for the purpose of performing farm labor.

Mr. KINKAID. Is the gentleman not aware of the fact that the practice now is for homesteaders to work by the day, especially in the haying season and during harvest, and in general, for other farmers, and for that reason they are absent more or less from their claims under the existing law?

Mr. LENROOT. Certainly.

Mr. KINKAID. And this is well known to the General Land Office, which sanctions the practice.

Mr. LENROOT. That has been stated time and again. I have stated it. The gentleman need not restate it.

Mr. KINKAID. I was not in the Hall at the time the gentleman must have stated it. Then does the gentleman not recognize this fact, that many entrymen during the first year or two after making their filings have not enough land broken and under cultivation to occupy their time during the growing season, and that therefore they have time to spare to go and help near-by farmers who have large farms and with whom labor is very scarce? And does not the gentleman know that the labor question upon the farms has become a very serious problem? Now, why not allow them to utilize the homesteading element?

Mr. LENROOT. I can not yield further. I thought the gentleman wanted to ask me a question.

Mr. KINKAID. Why not allow them to utilize the help which they can get near at hand from the more recent homestead entrymen?

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Nebraska very strongly corroborates the argument I have just been making. He states that many of them have not sufficient land broken to cultivate it, and so they desire to work for other people. Why, of course, that is just the trouble. If they are not given this permission, they will break that additional land and cultivate it and raise crops upon it, while the gentleman evidently desires that that unbroken land shall remain unbroken and uncultivated during this time of war when food production is so necessary.

Mr. KINKAID. Just one question. Does not the gentleman know that they can not break it all in the first season?

Mr. LENROOT. Why?

Mr. KINKAID. It is sod the first season, and they can not cultivate it, except to put in a sod crop.

Mr. LENROOT. Why can they not break it the first season?

Mr. KINKAID. When they have broken it they can not cultivate it the first season. It has to lie for a season to let the sod rot.

Mr. LENROOT. Do they not cultivate the first breaking?

Mr. KINKAID. No, sir.

Mr. LENROOT. Not at all?

Miss RANKIN. No.

Mr. KINKAID. No, sir.

Mr. LENROOT. The gentleman stated a moment ago that they did not have enough broken so that they could go on and cultivate their own farms.

Mr. KINKAID. Certainly. The law recognizes that they will break only a portion of it the first year.

Mr. LENROOT. Why do they not break more?

Mr. KINKAID. They have not the means; they have not the teams; they have not the time to break it all the first year. The law recognizes that.

Mr. LENROOT. Now, let us see. The gentleman says they have not the means, the teams, nor the time. So far as means are concerned, if they have a team to break 20 acres the same team will break 20 acres more, will it not?

Mr. LOBECK. Provided they can get feed for the team.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Where will the man get the feed for his team?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Did my friend ever do any breaking?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. With his own team?

Mr. LENROOT. No.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. If the gentleman had done that, he might know more about how this thing is done.

Mr. LENROOT. The gentleman from Nebraska says they have not the teams nor the time. If they have not the time, still the gentleman wants to give them more time to get away so that they will have less time to farm their own claims.

Mr. KINKAID. The Interior Department for years has recognized that they will not break all their land the first season. The homesteader as a rule is a poor man, and his teams can not break all his land in one season. He has to plow several seasons in order to do that.

Mr. LENROOT. I can not yield further, but I want to ask the gentleman a question. The gentleman has occupied a very conspicuous and honorable position, a most commendable position with reference to homestead entrymen, and he has done a world of good for the homestead entrymen of his State. I want to ask him whether the homestead entrymen of his State have not been fairly successful under the present homestead law?

Mr. KINKAID. Thanking the gentleman from Wisconsin for his very generous compliment, they have succeeded well, but they have broken only a small portion of their land the first year, and the Interior Department has recognized that that is the way to do, and that that is the way they must do.

Mr. LENROOT. I want to ask the gentleman another question, because we all want information. What did they do in the meantime under the old law, when they could not break any more land the first year?

Mr. KINKAID. They worked for their neighbors who had money to spare to pay for farm labor.

Mr. LENROOT. That was under existing law?

Mr. KINKAID. Yes.

Mr. LENROOT. Why could not that be continued?

Mr. KINKAID. Sometimes the question of absence and abandonment was raised by a fellow who wanted the other man's claim, and he contested the claim on the ground of abandonment. I have received hundreds of inquiries from homesteaders saying that they wanted to go to work for their neighbors, and they wanted to be assured from the Interior Department that they would not lose their claims. I also received letters from farmers and ranchmen who wanted to employ them, and I submitted the matter to the General Land Office and received a written reply that entrymen might be absent for the purpose of helping to harvest hay and save crops, and they went on and did the work and were saved from a contest.

Mr. SINNOTT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LENROOT. In a moment. Now, my good friend from Nebraska has raised another question concerning this bill that I had not thought of. He intimates that it was dangerous for a homestead entryman to leave his homestead under existing law; that he ran great danger of losing it. I want to call attention to the fact that if that condition exists under the present law it is increased 100 per cent under this bill, because under this bill he is required to be engaged in farm labor, and whether or not a sufficient showing can be made of those facts, he must take the chances and have that difficulty added to the present difficulties. Under existing law there is no such requirement, and he is given leave of absence for five months. Now I will yield to the gentleman from Oregon.

Mr. SINNOTT. The gentleman was speaking about the cultivation of homesteads under existing law, and he referred to the State of Nebraska. Is it not true that the remaining homestead lands do not at all compare with the rich Nebraska lands; that those Nebraska lands were settled under existing law with the interpretation applied to it that one was conforming to the law when he went upon his homestead once in six months? That is the way the majority of the homesteads were proved up in the past—that the presence of a homesteader once in six months was sufficient compliance with the law. That interpretation enabled the homesteader to work elsewhere and earn enough money to cultivate his land, and were it not for that interpretation many of the homesteads in the country would not be settled as they now are.

Mr. LENROOT. The gentleman from Oregon has not been here quite as long as some of us. He speaks of the rich lands of Nebraska. That is true of some parts of Nebraska, but I do not believe the gentleman from Oregon could have been here when the distinguished gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. KINKAID] convinced this House that they needed a very much larger area of land in homesteads in Nebraska because of the very arid character of the Nebraska land.

Mr. SINNOTT. Well, they have a sandy, arid section in Nebraska.

Mr. LENROOT. And that is what we were discussing. So, as a matter of fact, the gentleman's case not being a typical case, it is much less favorable to the homesteader than the homesteader in the gentleman's own State.

Mr. TILSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes.

Mr. TILSON. I want to ask the gentleman two questions. Criticism has been made by the gentleman from Oklahoma as to the difficulty of getting the five months' leave of absence.

Mr. LENROOT. The gentleman from Oklahoma was mistaken. There are certain cases where the law allows an additional leave of absence, and in those cases where the leave of absence is wanted beyond five months they must pursue the procedure detailed by the gentleman from Oklahoma. But the five months' leave of absence only requires a notice in the local land office.

Mr. TILSON. Does not the gentleman think that the intelligent self-interest of the homesteader will guide him to do that which will produce the most, so that the public will get the benefit of it if more freedom of movement is given to him, as is contemplated in this law; whether that will not cause them to produce more for themselves and, in so doing, for the public good?

Mr. LENROOT. No; and I will tell the gentleman why. Assume, if you please, that the homestead entryman has the chance to go out to work and get $5 a day, and that if he did not go some other man would take his place. But if he was compelled to work on his farm and cultivate the land he would make only $4 a day. The gentleman will readily see that in one case, where he was making $5 a day, there would be less food production than in the case where he would cultivate his own land and making only $4 a day.

Mr. TILSON. I can not quite follow the gentleman. If he can produce more food by staying at home, he would have more food.

Mr. LENROOT. If he goes out and works on a farm; if he did not go there some man from Chicago—some city man, perhaps—would do that work. There is just as much food production on the farm that he is going to, but less on the farm that he comes from. It is very plain; it is not a question of which will be the most profitable to the man, but when we are considering the questions of public lands and homesteads we have the right to expect that the primary consideration in this time of war shall not be profit to the homesteader but shall be food production under existing law.

Mr. OSBORNE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes.

Mr. OSBORNE. Is the gentleman aware that of the public lands of the United States, all of the most valuable have long ago been entered?

Mr. LENROOT. Of course, we are all aware of that.

Mr. OSBORNE. And that the lands which people go on these days are rough and, as a rule, unproductive lands, that the friends of these men who go on the land often have to support them, in order that they may pay for them, for the five years, and that it is absolutely impossible for the men on much of this land to earn a living off the land itself, because it is rough, desert land, with very little timber, difficult to get water on, and all those things, so that he must of necessity earn something or somebody must contribute something to his relief.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, that is merely stating what has been stated over and over again. The law now permits him five months leave of absence to earn money with which to support himself upon this land, but my whole contention is that there should be just one test applied to all of this. Is this going to mean greater or less production? I can not see how any intelligent man can come to the conclusion otherwise than that when you offer a premium to a man to not cultivate any more land than the law requires, you are going to get less food production instead of more. I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SLOAN], in order that he may cite a case where it works both ways, where it helps to supply labor to the man actually farming, and where the homesteader himself really needs to be away from the homestead. I think he can give us a "cow" case, as the lawyers would say.

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Chairman, we all know that surplus food is not produced upon the homesteads, nor will it be produced upon the homesteads. The surplus food is being produced on the large farms and large ranches of the country. The chairman of the committee has asked me to give a particular case. I never saw this bill, and did not know that is was in existence until to-day. But I have a case that especially applies. The situation I find myself in is this: I have a little farm adjoining my home town. We raise enough food there to feed from two to three companies. This war has taken my superintendent. A good many of the ambitious young men have been trying to obtain homesteads. This homestead law that we have now will take my foreman. That foreman would be of great value in food production for the coming year. Much more than he could possibly be upon any homestead.

I accept the challenge of the ranking member of the Committee on the Public Lands that it is a question of the production of food measured up against the labor problem. If we want to produce a large amount of food, then the farmers and the ranchmen should have men to work upon the large farms and the large ranches. They will produce more surplus than many homesteaders could produce because the homesteader seldom produces enough to satisfy his own family demands during the period of his occupancy as a homesteader.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me there, and I shall yield one minute of my time to him?

Mr. SLOAN. Yes.

Mr. LENROOT. Does the gentleman agree that food production is primarily the paramount consideration?

Mr. SLOAN. I do in this connection.

Mr. LENROOT. Then if the statement be correct, I want to ask the gentleman whether he thinks it would not be wise, from his standpoint, to suspend the homestead laws entirely during the existence of the war?

Mr. SLOAN. I do not. The homestead law is a means of developing this country. It has been an effective means of developing the country in the past, and it should not be suspended; but it should be, like every other process of our growth and development, regulated, and I assume that this bill will have that effect.

Mr. LENROOT. One more question. I agree with the gentleman that it should not be suspended, but according to the gentleman's theory the more homesteads we have now during the war the less food will be produced. Is that correct?

Mr. SLOAN. If you hold the homesteaders to full time upon those homesteads, it will have that effect. Those of us who live out there know the problems that we have. We know what a drain continued occupancy of the homesteads will be upon the farm-labor market. We feel that the more men you keep upon those homesteads and the longer you compel them to be there the less amount of production there will be of food in this country. Especially is that true if you are trying to produce in that great Northwest a surplus of food for the people of this country and the other countries who are cooperating with us in the great war. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. KEATING].

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, in common with all the Members of this House, I have the utmost respect for the views of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT], especially when he is discussing a subject with which he is familiar; but no man who has lived in the West could have listened to the speech the gentleman has just delivered without feeling that he has never spent very much time west of the Missouri River. The bill now before the House has the support, I believe, of every Member of Congress from the Western States. It is being supported by the men who are familiar with local conditions.

I have in my congressional district probably ten or fifteen thousand homesteaders. Their claims are located in the vicinity of irrigated lands. In these irrigated sections the labor problem is a very serious one. When the gentleman from Wisconsin tells you that if the homesteader is not released to work upon the farm, then some other man is there ready to take his place, he again demonstrates that he knows nothing about conditions in the West. The other man is not there and the homesteader is needed.

If the homesteader can make a success of his homestead he will not go to work on the irrigated farm, because he can earn more on his homestead than he possibly could on the irrigated farm.

Climatic conditions may render it necessary for him to seek employment away from his homestead. After he has put in his crop it may be apparent to him and to everyone else that he can not make his crop that year because of lack of rainfall, and then he should be at liberty to go off his claim into the irrigated section and help make the crop there. It will result, as the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SLOAN] has stated, in an increase of food production. The men of the West are interested in this; the Members of Congress from the West are interested in it, and they come before this House and present a problem which vitally affects their section of the country, and when they come here with this unanimity of feeling and report to you upon local conditions their statement should be considered. Personally I have lived in that section all my life. I know hundreds and thousands of homesteaders, I am intimately familiar with their condition, and I say to you as a Member of this House, just as my colleagues from the West say to you, that this legislation is urgently needed, that it will increase food production, and I hope that the other Members will take our word for it and pass the bill. [Applause.]

Mr. LENROOT. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. KEATING. I will.

Mr. LENROOT. I would like to ask the gentleman the same question I did the gentleman from Nebraska. Does the gentleman think during the existence of this war the fewer homesteads taken the greater the production of food?

Mr. KEATING. No; I do not. I do not believe that, and the gentleman from Wisconsin has misunderstood my argument. I stated a few moments ago that if the homesteader could make good on his homestead he would not go to work elsewhere.

Mr. LENROOT. But if the homesteader takes a new homestead to-morrow, and has the ability to cultivate 20 acres that might be engaged in food production, according to the gentleman's theory, it will virtually decrease food production.

Mr. KEATING. If he is not able to produce anything on the 20 acres he is to that extent decreasing production, but the gentleman is splitting hairs, because he is not familiar with western conditions. That is the difficulty with the gentleman. The gentleman is very earnest, very sincere in discussing this question of food conservation, but the difficulty with the gentleman is that he has not spent sufficient time west of the Missouri River to familiarize himself with local conditions.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN].

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I come from a large center of population, and we are interested primarily in the reduction of the cost of food raised in the country and to be consumed by our people, and I realize, as a representative of that great center of population, that labor is going to be scarce on all the farms of the country, because of the number of men taken into the war. But I can see, I think, that the men in the arid regions of the country who are homesteaders, endeavoring to establish farms on which to raise food supplies, may well find themselves unable to raise the crops which they have planted and find it necessary as a result of that to find employment on farms where labor is required, and thus be able to earn enough money to go back to the arid homestead and develop it to the extent that they may be required under the law. If this bill results in any such condition as that, it ought to be passed. If the establishment of an opportunity is afforded for men who can not engage themselves in the arid regions successfully to raise food to go on other farms where food can be raised, we ought to facilitate that movement, and if this bill accomplishes that purpose it is a movement in the right direction. We will find ourselves short of food, many varieties of food, before the war is over. It ought to be our purpose not only to facilitate the operation of the farm but to give every opportunity for those who are endeavoring to establish farms to find sufficient employment at some period of the year to enable them to finance their work. This bill proposes that, and I am in favor of it for that reason, and I know of no better method that can be employed to conserve the food supply than to enact some such legislation as this bill proposes. [Applause.]

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER].

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, my view of this bill is that it is conservation and will add to the food supply 50 per cent of what can be raised from the homestead claims that are in existence at the present time. There are possibly 250,000 homestead claimants who will be affected by this legislation. Anyone who is familiar with the Western States knows that the homesteader has not only one year but two, three, four, and sometimes five years to get into shape so that he can successfully cultivate 10 acres or more of land that will yield him a profitable return. Talk about cultivation! He has not the horses; he has not the wagon; he has not the plows; he has not the machinery; he has not the money to buy those things; and to-day when you buy the necessary machinery, the necessary horses, and the necessary seeds you can not get them because you do not have the money, and therefore, even if your land was in shape to cultivate, you can not get those things that are absolutely necessary to give you a crop without the money.

Now, from personal observation I have seen many men who could have done much better had it been so that in former years they could have left their home and gone to other places to work. The five months' leave of absence is used primarily now in the winter, when they can do but little on the farm. The family is taken to town, where the children can go to school, and the man goes to the sawmills or to other places where he can earn money to assist him in the improvement of his farm. This bill will have this effect: It will give the man a chance to cultivate every acre of his land and improve every bit of it up to the extent of his ability, and he will not neglect to cultivate one acre that he would have cultivated before. Very often the wife and children stay upon the farm and assist him to cultivate it while he is gone, if he is given the opportunity to get away. In most of the cases he can not get outside work close by. He has to go 10, 15, 20, or 25 miles in many, many cases. This bill will give him an opportunity, after he has placed his own farm in cultivation as far as his ability financially will permit—the wife and children are looking after it in his absence—and he can then go to his neighbor 10 or 15 miles away and grant assistance in harvesting the crop that could not possibly be otherwise harvested. This will enable him to do that. The man is familiar with the history of the country and knows that without this leave of absence somebody might want his place and file a contest upon it and he would be in litigation, and therefore would not cultivate, would not improve his farm until the litigation was ended. There are thousands of cases of that kind.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FERRIS. I yield one minute more to the gentleman.

Mr. RAKER. So, as a matter of fact, I believe candidly, that of, say, 250,000 farmers now in the Western States that will be compelled, of course, to give their time to their own farms, we will have relieved 100,000 of those men who will have tilled their own farms to the very utmost and given them an opportunity to offer their labor and their ability to assist in increasing the food supply by helping their neighbors and at the same time protecting their own homesteads.

This bill is in favor of increasing the food supply. The Government will not be injured, and when we can advance the food supply and increase it by not doing away with any proper laws in regard to the improvement of the homestead we ought to do it, because it is a general advancement for all concerned. And the bill ought to pass, beyond all question, without a dissenting vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LITTLE].

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, the argument against this bill, it seems to me, is founded on the fallacious theory that a man will go off and work for wages for somebody else when he can stay at home on his own farm and produce more crops and personally make more money. Any farmer who is so feeble-minded as to arrive at such a conclusion is not of sufficient mental equipment as to be of much help in either place, in my judgment. Any farmer who has land of his own to develop and equipment to run that farm in days like these, when the crops he raises call for present prices, is going to stay there and raise them and not go to wandering around the country working for somebody else.

The argument against this bill is encumbered with another difficulty, and that is that the men in the older, settled communities fail to realize the conditions under which men labor who have homestead properties in the Far West. The new system in regard to homesteads includes many bad lands, and many will find only perhaps 20 acres that they can cultivate. This will not interfere with that. The law requires him to cultivate as much as that law intends him to cultivate. He can not avoid that. A large proportion of these homesteads is only available as grazing lands. They put a little under cultivation that is arable, and then they go to work somewhere and make a living while they are getting some stock together to put into the pasture and fencing the pasture. They will not lose anything by this absence. You take the lands that are good, cultivatable, and arable, and any man with any common sense is going to cultivate them as far as he is able in the present situation. Men here ask what the settler does the first year that prevents more than 20 acres of breaking. The first thing that they do is to build a house, and then they build a barn, and then they dig a well, and if they do not strike water in the first well they dig another. My cousin Tom Meade dug a well 100 feet deep and found no water, and then went down in the valley in order to get another one. My brother Will's house in Oklahoma blew away, and he had to turn in and build another. The prairie fire swept away his hay. Those are some of the difficulties those fellows meet. You can not think of all of them in a moment.

Mr. FERRIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LITTLE. In just a minute. Then these people have to break the land. As has been suggested, that can not be cultivated the first season. You can not raise anything but a little sod corn, with no ears on it. The first year a man has no income, and you must understand that most of them come without money and have to make a living. Therefore they are allowed to go away in the winter and make a living while they hold the farm. The second year, as a matter of fact, they do not raise much of anything on a homestead. It is pretty much of a failure. Several years go by before the settler becomes a farmer. Everybody who has been there knows that. Then he must pay off the debts he has made. It takes two or three years to get a farm under way.

The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] asked if you ever saw them break very much or very rapidly with one little team. The men on these claims do not have the big horses found in Wisconsin; they do the best they can with bronchos. They follow hungry oxen along barren furrows for thousands of miles, the grasshoppers hanging on their flanks and the drought at their heels, to make homes and schools and civilization on the plains. A Government homestead is simply a slippery tail hold on the prospect of making a good living by hard work at some future day. Men do not speculate on a chance to hang on by their eyebrows.

The chance to defraud the Government is purely nominal. The opportunity for speculation is simply infinitesimal. The prospects of starving to death are good. The chance of being frozen out is the biggest one the settler has. The menace of speculation is as imaginary as a pipe dream in Chinatown. The serious danger to the West is that families who have eked out an existence on those claims will now be driven from them by the increase in the price of their supplies, and whole sections will be deserted. Their aid on big farms in neighboring counties will take the place of those gone to war and will enable many a family to keep a home for which they are now striving. Their labor transferred from undeveloped claims to old farms will help to feed a threatened world.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia). The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. LITTLE. I would like to have one minute more.

Mr. FERRIS. I yield the gentleman one minute more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for one more minute.

Mr. LITTLE. I loaned a man, for example, on a homestead $150 on a pair of mules. The law did not allow him to leave the State with those mortgaged mules. Some months later I found he was just back from Colorado. He came to see me, and I said to him, "Where have you been?" He said, "I was over in Colorado." My mortgage was no good while that team was in Colorado. He was liable to go to the penitentiary. He had been over on the Missouri Pacific, working on their grades. He was violating the law, but I did not say a word to him about that. He had to get some money somehow.

You say, "Would we have this homestead law abrogated during the war?" We would not if you pass this bill. Otherwise I would favor the abrogation of it. These men are seeking to found homes and family seats. They go with nothing in their hands, and they must be allowed to make a living in some way while they are trying to do that.

Mr. RAKER. These men must have the money to buy plows and other implements, and they can not buy them without credit, and ordinarily they are without credit.

Mr. LITTLE. No; they have no credit. They can not get $50 in credit when they take their claims.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LITTLE. Yes.

Mr. FIELDS. What would it cost a man to equip himself to go out on a homestead? Suppose he is now without a team; what would it cost him?

Mr. LITTLE. I loaned my brother $400 to start with. He came back for some more, even then. At the present time, to buy a team, a plow, a cow, and to buy machinery and to build a home, it will take at least four years' work to lay the foundation that he has to make in the first year. You should not object, gentlemen, to his working away from home for a few months and thus keeping a hold on his only prospect for a home.

Mr. FIELDS. Under the present prices those things would cost fifteen hundred dollars, would they not?

Mr. LITTLE. I think that is correct.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has again expired.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, several Members have asked for time, but I would be glad if they would dispense with further debate and allow us to get through with this bill.

Mr. KREIDER. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the chairman of the committee a question?

Mr. FERRIS. Yes; I yield for that; certainly.

Mr. KREIDER. As it is now, an entryman can leave his homestead and go elsewhere and work for a period of five months, can he not?

Mr. FERRIS. Yes; that is the law. He can get a leave of absence and go.

Mr. KREIDER. He can get a leave of absence and leave now for five months under the present law without this proposed law?

Mr. FERRIS. That is true.

Mr. KREIDER. Now, then, is it true that, as it is provided here, when he leaves his homestead and works on a farm elsewhere, that time is to be counted as constructive residence on the entry?

Mr. FERRIS. That is true under this bill.

Mr. KREIDER. Do I understand from that that a man could go there and enter a claim and make, possibly, a few little improvements, and then hire out under this law and work elsewhere without invalidating his homestead entry and get title to it under the law?

Mr. FERRIS. This does not relieve him from making any improvements for the breaking. He has to plant 40 acres if he has 160, or 80 acres if he has 320, or 120 if he has 640. I think I am right as to that. But he must go on with the cultivation. This gives him a chance to steal away from his own entry and work for somebody else.

Mr. KREIDER. But did he not have the right to do that before for five months?

Mr. FERRIS. Yes; but if he stayed over a day somebody would contest his entry. Let me call the gentleman's attention to this fact: In that semiarid country, where these lands are entered, they quite often do not raise anything on account of the drought. This past year in a part of my State corn never got high enough to tassel, and even the sunflowers were not even knee-high. The entryman must go out and work for somebody. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SLOAN] has a farm in the humid belt, where it rains, and even there, where they need farm help, they can not get a colored person to rake their yard or shock their corn or do any work at any price. There is no one to do any of that work. Under the new 640-acre law that we passed there are 70,000 applications pending for homesteads. We appropriated at the last session $150,000,000 and then seventeen and one-half million dollars—for what? For propaganda to teach somebody how to farm. Let us pass this bill and let the man who is struggling to get a home for his family go away and work for somebody who needs his assistance. This costs nothing from the Treasury. These people are making a brave fight to succeed.

Mr. KREIDER. I do not say that I am opposed to this legislation, but I notice this in legislation, that there is a Representative from one section of the country who proposes legislation, and for his particular section certain legislation is just and proper, and yet when you pass such legislation in a general way, applying all over the country in other sections, it opens up a proposition which may lead to land grabbing, and the law may be put to a purpose which it was never intended it should be. I insist that this legislation should be considered from every viewpoint. It occurred to me that if an entryman had now the privilege of leaving the farm for a period of five months, either for the purpose of helping a neighbor to farm or for the purpose of working in a mine or in a lumber camp, he already has an opportunity to do that which is sought to be given him by the passage of this bill. If I am wrong about that I am perfectly willing to be corrected, but it occurred to me that such would be the case if he were allowed to leave, as is now provided by law, for five months.

Mr. FERRIS. The gentleman is not wrong. He is right in nearly everything he says. Let me make this statement. There are 17 States in the West having some public lands. All these Eastern States have no public lands. The scattered public land that is left unsettled is mostly poor, gravely, arid land. That is the character of most of it. Some of it can be cultivated in a ravine, for example, where there is a little soil and a little water, but the rest must be used for pasture. Men are now going out there trying to reduce portions of that West to a real productive area. I do not know whether they can do it or not. Corn chops are $4.50 a hundred. Hay is $45 a ton. Everything else is in proportion. I do not know whether they can go out and reduce that wild prairie or not. Most of it, I fear, can not be reduced. This bill gives the entryman more than the five months the gentleman from Pennsylvania refers to. It gives him an opportunity to go out and husk corn and help other farmers produce on productive farms and earn some money for himself to return to his own barren claim. He is put to the bitterest test. His is the hardest part. He has few of the comforts, most of the hardships. He asks but little. He gets but little. There should be no controversy about this bill. It gives them a chance in dry years to go and plow for somebody else after they have failed on their own land, and then to return again and keep the home fires burning.

Mr. LITTLE. Has not the gentleman seen thousands of them starved out from these little places that they could not hold?

Mr. FERRIS. Precisely. That happens every year.

Mr. KREIDER. The gentleman is pleading a cause which is very just and proper, but the homesteader is not denied that privilege now. He can go and shuck Mr. SLOAN'S corn now. He can go and plant his seed. But, my dear sir, if he is to raise a crop on 20 acres of ground on his homestead he can not go away and leave it for seven or eight months.

Mr. FERRIS. In that semiarid country, where the land is nonirrigable, nonmineral, and nontimber, just the poor, bald, arid prairie land, for many years they do not raise enough on the land to feed a hen and chickens.

Mr. KREIDER. I have no objection to the homesteader getting away and earning a little money on the outside, but he can do that under existing law.

Mr. LENROOT. How is a man going to make a living in the winter if he is away in the summer?

Mr. KNUTSON. Is it not a fact that no homesteader is going to leave his homestead to go to work on some one else's farm if he can make more money raising crops on his own homestead?

Mr. FERRIS. Of course not, and I am not in favor of offering lavish inducements to the homesteader to leave his homestead for any purpose; but out in that semiarid country, when a man goes on a homestead claim it is the acid test whether he can stay there at all or not. It is a case of hustle from the day he goes on the land until he goes away. I myself have been a homesteader on better land than this within the last 15 years, and I know what the rattle of chain harness means. I know what it is to live in a cabin made of rough pine boards standing on end. I know what it is to hear the music of the wind whistling through it. I know what it means to have a barrel of water that you have hauled out of some frog pond sitting in the back end of the wagon. I know what the norther and the north wind mean, and these people who go out onto these homesteads have a tremendous tussle to know whether or not they can stay there until Christmas. We are appropriating in a single session $21,000,000,000 of the people's money. Now, this bill takes not one cent out of the Treasury, but merely gives the homesteader a little additional chance. I am willing to do this little for him. Last year we appropriated in one bill $150,000,000 and in another bill $17,500,000 to hire spindle-legged dudes to go out and teach the broad-shouldered farmer how to hitch up a team of mules. We at least ought to be content to give the real homesteader a chance when he appears at the Land Office and pays his $14 and goes out and struggles with the unbroken and unsubdued sod of a homestead claim. We at least ought to give him a chance to go away and shuck corn for his neighbor when his neighbor can not even get a corn shucker. [Applause.]

Mr. KREIDER. I want it understood that I am not making the slightest objection to that.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That during the pendency of the existing war any homestead settler or entryman shall be entitled to a leave of absence from his land for the purpose of performing farm labor, and such absence, while actually engaged in farm labor, shall, upon compliance with the terms of this act, be counted as constructive residence: Provided, That each settler or entryman leaving his claim for the purpose herein provided shall file notice thereof in the United States Land Office, and at the expiration of the calendar year file in said land office of the district wherein his claim is situated a written statement, under oath and corroborated by two witnesses, giving the date or dates when he left his claim, date or dates of return thereto, and where and for whom he was engaged in farm labor during such period or periods of absence: Provided further, That nothing herein shall excuse any homestead settler or entryman from making improvements or performing the cultivation required by applicable law upon his claim or entry. The Secretary of the Interior is authorized to provide rules and regulations for carrying this act into effect.

Mr. FERRIS. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] has a little amendment that he wishes to offer, and I hope the Committee of the Whole will agree to it.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WALSH: Page 1, line 9, before the word "leaving," insert the words "within 15 days after," so that it will read: "Provided, That each settler or entryman within 15 days after leaving his claim for the purpose herein provided shall file notice thereof," etc.

Mr. FERRIS. I think the committee has no objection to that. It was the intent of the committee to have the homesteader give notice if he left his claim, and the gentleman from Massachusetts wants him to do it within 15 days. I hope the amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. LENROOT. May we have the amendment reported again?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection the Clerk will again report the amendment.

The amendment was again read.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, judging from the temper of the House I recognize that there is an overwhelming sentiment in favor of this bill. Yet I believe if it is passed it will encourage speculation so far as the occupation of our western lands is concerned. We are throwing the doors wide open to speculators if this bill becomes a law. No permanent location will be required. Nothing except the tilling of 20 acres each year. What is necessary more than anything else for the development of the West, in time of peace and in time of war, is permanent location of these entrymen on their homesteads.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Not at present. Permit me to pursue my argument, and then I will yield. This bill will not require the establishment of any permanent home on a homestead. Considerable of the legislation that has been reported by the Public Lands Committee in the past Congress and in prior Congresses has been for the benefit, not of the dwellers in our large cities who really wish to go West and build up bona fide homesteads, but it has been for the benefit of those who have already obtained homesteads and who wish to obtain additional lands. This bill is primarily for the benefit of those who have made entries under the homestead law, and who wish to be relieved from the burden that the Government has required from the enactment of the first homestead laws, namely, that homesteaders shall reside on their homesteads. Pass this bill and you waive that requirement entirely. This is to the disadvantage of those bona fide homesteaders who go West and make an entry of 160 acres and who wish a settlement of the community for the building of schools and churches. You take away from the bona fide settler the benefit of the association and the settlement that is the natural result of our homestead policy. But this bill puts a premium on subsequent entrymen merely to make entry to obtain a patent without any intention of building a home. Now I yield to the gentleman from Idaho.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. During the last 10 years we have heard a great deal about speculation in public lands. Will the gentleman please enlighten the House how it will be possible for anyone to speculate in a homestead entry such as is proposed?

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, a person does not have to live in the western country to know that there are large quantities of vacant public lands open to entry, lands in our forest reserves which are partially agricultural and partially timbered. A man has settled in that country, and his sons who have grown up want to make entries. Under this bill they can go and enter upon the land, because it is tributary to the land that they own. They know about it. They preempt it, and under this bill they will not be required to do anything except merely till 20 acres.

They may live 100 miles, or 20 miles, or any distance whatever from the new land and still obtain the homestead right without any improvement whatever. I am informed by those coming from the western country that the real homestead settlers are opposed to this character of legislation. They want bona fide settlers and not squatters on the lands; they do not want men who when the time has expired will get a patent and then sell out to large ranchmen without any improvement whatever.

Mr. KNUTSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. KNUTSON. What is this land for if it is not to be entered upon?

Mr. STAFFORD. The land under the homestead law is not only for the entry of the settler but it is for the building of homes; that is the primary object and has been ever since the homestead laws were established. We have been lessening the requirement, I know; the time has been diminished from five to three years, but still we ought not to relinquish all the necessary requirements in order to compel a man to build a home for himself.

Mr. KREIDER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. KREIDER. Would it not be possible under this law to have men employed by a corporation file on the lands and cultivate the first 20 acres without having any bona fide residence there?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes; there is nothing in this law that requires any bona fide residence.

Mr. FERRIS. Oh, my friend, there is under the general law.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. STAFFORD. I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that his time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. The gentleman makes the statement that no residence is required, that a man could absent himself after entry and comply with the law. I think the gentleman did not intend to make the statement quite so broad. Before the homestead entryman can avail himself of the five months' leave of absence he must have established a bona fide residence on the land by taking his family there. The residence must be bona fide before he can avail himself of the five months' leave of absence. Then he can get the additional term only when he has complied with the law.

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, the gentleman says "if" and "so." The language of the bill is so broad that any entryman, any homestead settler will be entitled to a leave of absence. He may go on the land, and after he has once entered on the land and makes his filing he is relieved of the requirements of residence and is only obliged to till 20 acres of land in gaining a homestead.

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. This bill does not dispense with the requirement——

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, the gentleman reads into the bill something that is not there. This bill reads:

That during the pendency of the existing war any homestead settler or entryman shall be entitled to a leave of absence from his land for the purpose of performing farm labor, and such absence, while actually engaged in farm labor, shall—

He can come on the land, make his filing at the register's office, and as soon as he makes the filing all that is necessary for him to do is to cultivate 20 acres of land. If this bill passes, it is capable of the most gross abuse ever charged against the entry on our public lands.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. How long does it take to break up the 20 acres?

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, the gentleman from Washington lives in a timber country, and it is for his interest and those gentlemen who live in that country and have sons to have this bill passed in this way. I am not against building up the western country, but I want it built up by real homesteaders who will live on the land.

Mr. McKENZIE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. McKENZIE. I desire to ask the gentleman whether he ever traveled through this section of the country he is discussing in daylight; and if so, in his judgment, would it not require more than five months to find 20 acres of land that could be tilled? [Laughter.]

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, the gentleman is facetious. Yes; I have traveled through this country on foot more than the gentleman will ever travel on foot. I have just recently been tramping in the northern Wisconsin woods and have seen the condition of that land under our land laws, and I want to protect this large public domain, not only for the benefit of the settlers who live tributary to the land, but for the large number of men in the cities who are demanding public lands, and after the war closes will continue increasingly to demand land, to make the lands available for settlement. I am not in favor of allowing these persons to gain 320 acres of land of a homestead character without the requirement of building a home there and making it really his home.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I want to offer an amendment.

Mr. FERRIS. Let us first vote on the pending amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

"Provided further, That the provisions of this act shall apply only to homestead settlers and entrymen who may have filed their claims prior to the passage of this act."

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I am in sympathy with the provisions of the bill. I believe a great many of these entrymen and settlers, if required to build homes, to break up the land, and make a farm out of raw land, will spend a great deal of time that might more profitably be expended on agricultural lands already subject to cultivation; but I do not believe that we ought to permit by the passage of this act a man to go out and file a claim and do little or nothing more and have the advantage over the boys who are in the trenches, over men who are now engaged on the farm and can not go and file a claim, by simply filing a claim without doing much work and at the same time be given the same advantages given to one on the land.

I have no objection myself to the provisions of this bill, but, it seems to me, we ought not to throw down the bars entirely and permit men simply to file a claim and not go near it, if this war should last for three years, and still have all of the privileges of the men who now live upon their claims.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman in his amendment has used the word "claims." I think that introduces into the law a new term. Would the gentleman have objection to changing that to the word "applications"?

Mr. GOOD. No.

Mr. FERRIS. Because by application is the way one initiates a homestead. I think the gentleman is on the right track.

Mr. GOOD. I ask unanimous consent to modify my amendment by striking out the word "claims" and inserting in lieu thereof the word "applications."

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be so modified.

There was no objection.

Mr. LITTLE. Do I understand that all of the entries from now on will be subject to the present law and would have none of the advantages under the amendment?

Mr. GOOD. That is true, if this amendment is adopted.

Mr. LITTLE. Does the gentleman not think that would be an injustice?

Mr. GOOD. That is the reason I am offering the amendment.

Mr. LITTLE. There is a lot of bare-legged speculators who would try to take advantage of this.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman please explain how you can speculate in this land under existing law?

Mr. GOOD. I do not know whether any of this land has a speculative value.

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman has raised the question, and it has been raised before, and it is the bugaboo of Members. Tell me how you can speculate in homestead lands under existing law?

Mr. LENROOT. This law does permit speculation.

Mr. WINGO. How will this bill permit speculation?

Mr. LITTLE. It is a penitentiary offense to attempt to hold homestead lands for speculation.

Mr. WINGO. You can not have speculation. If the gentleman is familiar with the present situation not only in the West, but I am sure also in many of the States, as it is in mine, he will recognize that the restrictions now are so great that the homestead lands are not being opened up, and that men have ceased opening them because they would rather go and buy deeded lands. That is what every man advises his friends. Long ago I ceased advising men to take up Government homesteads. You can not have any speculation under this bill; you can not have any speculation in homestead lands now at all.

Mr. GOOD. My object in offering the amendment was not to prevent speculation but to prevent a person who now wants to go out there and make his entry being credited with constructive residence when he does not intend to do the required work upon the claim or to reside upon the claim as now required by law.

As the gentleman knows, the law giving a man the right to enter the public land was predicated upon the very thought that they would go there and improve it and make it their home, at least for a period. This bill, without my amendment, would give a resident the right to go and file his claim and then without doing any work be counted as a constructive residence.

Mr. FERRIS. Oh, no.

Mr. GOOD. This amendment provides that persons who want to go there in the future even under this law must go there and live upon the land according to the terms of the present law and at the same time people who are desirous of taking up agricultural pursuits, who have already taken up land, will be given the relief the Secretary wants.

Mr. WINGO. I think the gentleman is wrong; but, assuming that he is right, does he think it wise to have two classes of homesteaders under the same law? Assume you are correct, can the gentleman see anything except a theoretical objection?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. Is not the primary purpose in the homestead law to increase the number of home owners and increase the productivity of the farms by opening up additional lands?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. Anything that makes a start within the provisions of the act so that the land is ultimately used for the purposes of the act. Is not that the fact?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that at the expiration of six minutes' debate on this amendment be closed.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield before the Chair puts that? I desire to know whether the chairman is for or against the amendment?

Mr. FERRIS. I am for the amendment, and I intend to state my reasons why in the one minute reserved.

Mr. LENROOT. I would like to have two minutes.

Mr. FERRIS. Then I ask unanimous consent that at the expiration of eight minutes of debate debate upon the amendment close, five minutes of that time to be controlled by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO], two minutes by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT], and one minute by myself.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I have no particular interest in the matter and I should not have taken the floor except that the discussion has disclosed a certain amount of misinformation as to present conditions that exist with reference to homesteads. My experience and observation have been that we have gone to an extreme. A great many years ago we did have frauds in homestead entries. We have so tightened up on the matter now that, to my mind, it is impracticable for a man to enter a homestead. I would not advise a man to do it. The hardships are too great, because the restrictions thrown around homestead entries are so great that not only is it reasonably impossible for frauds to be perpetrated but men are harassed by the vigilance of the agents of the Government in being sure that there is no fraud.

Now, as I take it, the proposed amendment here will not let down the bars. It simply proposes, as I understand, to give during the war a greater leave of absence than the present law permits while actually engaged in farm labor. We all recognize the fact that we need an increased production of foodstuffs in this country and will for many years after the war is over. Now, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] is afraid a man may come in under this law and claim the benefit of constructive possession or occupation of this land and not comply with the spirit of the law. I think it would be to the public good if we could induce men now to start making homestead entries even if they did not progress as rapidly in the development or improvement of those homesteads as in ordinary times, because after the war is over, when the benefits of this act will expire, he then must come in and carry out the law and develop and improve it, and there will be an incentive to him not to commit a fraud, so that the benefit of constructive possession and occupation is to make him ultimately pursue the homestead entry and comply with the law for actual occupation and for development and cultivation as required. What other benefits can he get? He can get none whatever. And this act, as I understand it, is simply for the purpose of permitting a man to go out and engage in some productive enterprise upon a farm. We know this much, that during the first one or two years a man upon a homestead does not produce in quantity or even in quality the amount of crops he does after it has been put in a high state of cultivation which is only possible after several years residence and labor upon a new piece of ground. The very first year when he goes to plant what is commonly known in my part of the country as "new ground" it is impossible to produce as much stuff that year as upon old ground. Under this act a man may go and rent a piece of old ground and produce possibly three or four times as much as the new land on the homestead——

Mr. RUCKER. He can not produce and he can not cultivate.

Mr. WINGO. No; he can not cultivate as much new ground and can not produce per acre as much as he can on old ground, and I see nothing in this act for a man to be afraid of for fear abuses will creep in or that straw entries will be made because there will be no incentive for a man to make a straw entry because he could not profit by it after the war is over. I am afraid it will not be sufficient inducement for the homesteader to help relieve the situation with respect to farm labor that now exists.

Mr. RUCKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINGO. I will.

Mr. RUCKER. Under the amendment now being considered, would not that make a discrimination against the very class of men who ought not to be discriminated against?

Mr. WINGO. Surely, I think.

Mr. RUCKER. Is it not true that perhaps there may be to-day thousands, many thousands of men who after a while may want a homestead who would have to be dealt with entirely differently from those who have heretofore been fortunate enough——

Mr. WINGO. Oh, my objection to the amendment is largely theoretical, and it is this, that you do not want to inject a new classification. In other words, you do not want any additional classes under the homestead laws unless they are absolutely necessary. It is largely theoretical.

Mr. RUCKER. They have to file a declaration, but the men who are engaged during the war can not file an application, and they will have to be dealt with differently.

Mr. FERRIS. Suppose a man wants to tie up a large area of land, and suppose he has a lot of hired men, cowboys, to enter, to make application. These men may go to the land office and file entries. That might open up a fraud and might retard the development of that community, and I rather think there is considerable merit in the suggestion of the gentleman from Iowa. Suppose a case like this: Suppose now the cattleman had 50 men working for him—I do not know there is any such. I feel like in an abundance of safety we had better adopt the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa. It may not be necessary, but it will do no harm.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Arkansas has expired.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, I believe I have two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has two minutes.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO] inquires how there can be speculation under this bill, and I grant with this amendment there can not be; but without it, it is framed so that it opens the door wide for speculation. Under existing law it is true that one must establish his residence, but without the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa speculation will come about in this way: A cowboy, as suggested by the gentleman from Oklahoma, makes entry upon 320 acres of land, never needs to establish a residence upon it at all. When the minimum amount of cultivation required by law is satisfied, he sells to the man who owns a ranch. Is not that a speculation pure and simple?

Mr. WINGO. I deny that you can do that under the working of this bill.

Mr. LENROOT. You certainly can, because under the law after a man makes an entry he has, I think, six months within which to establish residence; and without the gentleman's amendment no residence is necessary to be established at all.

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman overlooks some other provisions of law that this does not repeal.

Mr. LENROOT. It does, in this sense: It permits a constructive residence to take the place of actual residence during the time of his absence.

Mr. LITTLE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LENROOT. I will.

Mr. LITTLE. Does not the gentleman realize that the transaction he speaks of would lay the man liable to be sent to the penitentiary?

Mr. LENROOT. No; I do not know that. Not if this bill passes permitting constructive residence to a man who works upon a farm.

Mr. WINGO. How long is the constructive residence?

Mr. LENROOT. During the entire period of his absence.

Mr. WINGO. During the period of the war.

Mr. LENROOT. During the period of his absence if that is during the period of the war, and if this war should last three years he may get a patent to that land without having a home upon it at all.

Mr. WINGO. Does the gentleman think he could make final proof?

Mr. LENROOT. Certainly, he can. But with the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa that can not be done, because then it will only apply to those who prior to this time have actually established residence upon the land.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I am going to vote for the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD]. Of course, this bill does not repeal existing law which requires actual, bona fide residence. But there is a possibility that they might creep in there and take up a lot of land and not move on it and carry it along under this law, which no one wants to do and which no one on the committee or anyone else advocated. And to avoid any doubt about it I am going to vote for the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. WINGO. The amendment does not change the proviso on the second page of the bill?

Mr. FERRIS. The amendment provides a payment and bona fide residence.

Mr. WINGO. Does the gentleman know of anything to prevent his staying one day and then moving off?

Mr. FERRIS. It is expected to apply to those who move into a community and expect to become a part of it.

Mr. WINGO. Even if you pass this act without the amendment of the gentleman, a man could not make final proof under the present existing law without showing actual, bona fide residence?

Mr. FERRIS. That is true; but suppose he carried it along three years? Mr. Chairman, I ask for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DYER: Page 1, line 5, after the word "farm," insert the words "or industrial"; also the same thing in line 6, same page, and line 4, page 2.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman from Oklahoma, the chairman of the committee, will not object to that amendment. He knows, of course, and we all know, that men are needed as badly in the industrial pursuits—in manufacturing munitions of war and making the things that are of need to the Army and Navy—as on the farm, and I think all men ought to be dealt with fairly and equally.

Mr. FERRIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DYER. I yield.

Mr. FERRIS. I rather hope the gentleman will not insist upon that amendment. The industrial area is far removed from the agricultural area as a rule. This is a proposition to increase the production of the homestead area.

Mr. DYER. The gentleman will realize that men have been called from the farms and from their businesses to go and help in manufacturing lines, in which the labor is awfully scarce at this time. The Government itself is crippled in the production of the things that are needed for the war itself because of scarcity of labor. And we ought to give every opportunity and advantage to the men who have these claims and who are willing and can obtain employment where they will do more good at this time—during the winter months—in working in the industrial pursuits in the big cities.

Mr. KINKAID. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DYER. I will.

Mr. KINKAID. Is the gentleman not aware of the fact that there is a greater and more serious problem now existing on account of the scarcity of farm labor than there is as to industrial labor? Even if he is not, I feel very confident that such is the fact.

Mr. DYER. I think the gentleman——

Mr. KINKAID. Just a further question. And this homestead labor is adapted to the farm. It is experienced farm labor, and that is the kind of labor that farmers need.

Mr. DYER. I will say to the gentleman that a great many of the homestead claims have been taken up by men from the cities, from the industrial centers, and that they can now be ill spared from that work to go and prove up these claims. And unless they are included it will necessarily mean that many of these men, thousands of them, will be taken away from pursuits in which they are now absolutely needed. The gentleman ought not, in my judgment, to oppose this amendment, and I hope that he will not do so.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. FITZGERALD). The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DYER].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill favorably to the House with amendments.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma moves that the committee do now rise and report the bill favorably to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. FITZGERALD, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 4617) to authorize absence by homestead settlers and entrymen, and for other purposes, had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them in gross. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill as amended.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. FERRIS, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House the following personal request, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

BOSTON, MASS., December 4, 1917.

Hon. CHAMP CLARK,
Speaker House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

I respectfully request that I be given leave of absence from my duties as a Member of Congress for two weeks on account of personal business.

PETER F. TAGUE.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Has the Committee on Public Lands any further business?

Mr. FERRIS. There is nothing further, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will proceed with the call of committees.

The Clerk resumed the call of committees.

COAL AND ASPHALT, CHOCTAW AND CHICKASAW NATIONS.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma (when the Committee on Indian Affairs was called). Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill H. R. 195, Union Calendar No. 67.

The SPEAKER. Which calendar did the gentleman say it is on?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. The Union Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The House automatically resolves itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 195, with the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU] in the chair.

Thereupon the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 195, with Mr. POU in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 195, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 195) providing for the sale of the coal and asphalt deposits in the segregated mineral land in the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations, Oklahoma.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER] is recognized for one hour.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, a question of order. The bill must be first read. There has not been any reading of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to sell the coal and asphalt deposits, leased and unleased, in the segregated mineral area of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations, in Oklahoma, in the manner hereinafter set forth.

Before offering such coal and asphalt deposits for sale the Secretary of the Interior, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, shall cause the same to be appraised by a board of appraisers, consisting of three members, to be appointed by the President, one upon the recommendation of the Secretary of the Interior, one upon the recommendation of the principal chief of the Choctaw Nation, and one upon the recommendation of the governor of the Chickasaw Nation, the compensation of each to be uniform and fixed by the President of the United States, and such appointments shall be made within 60 days after the passage of this act. Such appraisement, both as to leased and unleased lands, shall be described in tracts to conform to the descriptions of the legal subdivisions heretofore designated by the Secretary of the Interior, and shall be completed, sworn to by such appraisers, and final report made to the Secretary of the Interior within six months from the date of the appointment of the appraisers.

SEC. 2. That the sale of such deposits shall be thoroughly advertised, and shall at the end of 90 days from the final report of such appraisers be offered for sale in tracts to conform with the report of such appraisers at not less than the appraised value so fixed, except that isolated tracts of less than 960 acres may be sold separately under like provisions: Provided, That 20 per cent of the purchase price shall be paid in cash, and the remainder shall be paid in four equal annual payments from the date of the sale, and all deferred payments on all deposits sold under the provisions of this act shall bear interest at the rate of 5 per cent per annum, and shall mature and become due before the expiration of four years after the date of such sale.

SEC. 3. That immediately after the expiration of one year after the coal and asphalt deposits shall have been offered for sale, or forfeited for nonpayment under the terms of the sale, the Secretary of the Interior, under rules and regulations to be prescribed by him, shall readvertise and cause to be sold to the highest bidder at public auction all coal and asphalt deposits remaining unsold and all coal and asphalt deposits forfeited by reason of such nonpayment of any part of the purchase price: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior, in his discretion, may reject any or all bids which he does not consider adequate, but at the expiration of six months thereafter the Secretary of the Interior may again readvertise and offer the same for final sale to the highest bidder at public auction, upon such terms as he may prescribe and at such valuation, independent of the appraised value, as he may fix.

SEC. 4. Provided, That such deposits of coal or asphalt on the leased lands shall be sold subject to all rights of the lessee, and that any person acquiring said deposits of coal or asphalt shall take the same subject to said rights and acquire the same under the express understanding and agreement that the Department of the Interior will cancel and withdraw all rules and regulations and relinquish all authority heretofore exercised over the operation of said mines by reason of the Indian ownership of said property, and that said properties thereafter shall be operated under and in conformity with such laws as may be applicable thereto, and that advance royalty paid by any lessee and standing to the credit of said lessee shall be credited by said purchaser to the extent of the amount thereof, and that no royalties shall be paid by said lessee to said purchaser until the credit so given shall be exhausted at the rate of 8 cents per ton mine run, and that the royalty to be paid thereafter by said lessee to said purchaser shall be 8 cents per ton mine run of coal, and that any lessee may, at any time after completion of such sale, transfer or dispose of his leasehold interest without any restriction whatever; and that any lessee shall have the preferential right, provided the same is exercised within 90 days after the approval of the completion of the appraisement of the minerals as herein provided, to purchase at the appraised value any or all of the surface of the lands lying within such lease held by him and heretofore reserved by order of the Secretary of the Interior and upon the terms as above provided, and shall also have the preferential right to purchase the coal deposits embraced in any lease held by such lessee by taking same at the highest price offered by any responsible bidder at public auction; and if any lessee becomes the purchaser of any coal deposits on any undeveloped lease owned by him, then one-half of the advance royalties paid by any lessee on such lease shall be credited on the purchase price thereof, and the advance royalties heretofore paid by any lessee shall be credited to such lessee on account of any production of coal on any other lease which he may own and operate: And provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed as limiting or curtailing the rights of any lessee from acquiring additional surface lands for mining operations as provided by the act of Congress of February 19, 1912.

SEC. 5. That the surface of any segregated coal and asphalt lands in the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations, in the State of Oklahoma, which may have been, or may be, condemned under the laws of the State of Oklahoma for State penal institutions or for county or municipal purposes, as authorized by the Indian appropriation act approved March 3, 1909, shall be construed to include the entire estate, save the coal and asphalt reserved: Provided, That the State of Oklahoma shall have the preferential right of purchase, at the appraised value thereof, upon the same terms applying to other coal and asphalt deposit sales under this act, all coal and asphalt deposits underlying the surface heretofore purchased by the said State of Oklahoma, and more particularly described as follows: Southeast quarter and south half of the northeast quarter of section 33; south half of and northeast quarter and south half of northwest quarter, and northeast quarter of northwest quarter of section 34; all of section 35, and southeast quarter of southwest quarter of section 26; and south half of southeast quarter of section 26; and south half of southwest quarter of section 25; and northwest quarter and west half of southwest quarter and west half of east half of southwest quarter and northeast quarter of northeast quarter of southwest quarter and west half of southeast quarter of northeast quarter of southwest quarter and west half of east half of southeast quarter of southwest quarter of section 36, township 6 north, range 14 east.

SEC. 6. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to prescribe such rules, regulations, terms, and conditions, not inconsistent with this act, as he may deem necessary to carry out its provisions, and shall establish an office for such purpose at McAlester, Pittsburg County, Okla.

SEC. 7. That when the full purchase price for any property sold hereunder is paid, the chief executives of the two tribes shall execute and deliver, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, to each purchaser an appropriate patent conveying to the purchaser the property so sold: Provided, That the purchaser of any coal or asphalt deposits shall have the right at any time before final payment is due to pay the full purchase price on said coal and asphalt deposits, with accrued interest, and shall thereupon be entitled to a patent therefor as herein provided.

SEC. 8. That there is hereby appropriated, out of any Choctaw and Chickasaw funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $50,000 to pay the expenses of appraisement, advertisement, and sale herein provided for, and the proceeds derived from the sales hereunder shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the Choctaws and Chickasaws.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma is recognized.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, this bill not only provides for the carrying out of a delayed pledge with the Choctaw and Chickasaw Indians, which was entered into between their representatives and the representatives of the Federal Government in 1902, but it opens up to development and production some 300,000 acres of coal lands which now lie dormant and bottled up, so that coal can not be produced on that area.

It will be necessary for me to go back just a little and explain. In 1893 the conditions had become so chaotic in Indian Territory and such a demand was made by the white people in that portion of our present State for statehood that the Indian appropriation bill carried an item providing for the creation of a commission to settle the affairs of the Five Civilized Tribes. This commission afterwards became known as the Dawes Commission. That commission attempted to negotiate agreements with the different tribes, and the Choctaws and the Chickasaws were the first to come to terms. The irony of fate has willed that their affairs are still unsettled.

One of the concessions made to the Indians was that these coal deposits should be sold and the money divided per capita among them. I think it is fair to say that the United States Government undertook to carry out that contract in good faith. An appraisement of the land was made, and the lands were offered for sale. While some of the bids may have reached the appraised value, the bulk of them did not bring the price which the Secretary of the Interior deemed at that time sufficient, so that the lands were not sold within the time provided by the act, which, as I recall, was three years.

Prior to this time a system of leasing had been entered into by the Federal Government for the Indians. Some 100,000 acres of this area was leased, and coal production has been going on upon that portion since that time. The testimony of the lessees in the hearing before our subcommittee, as I recall now, set forth that much of the coal under this 100,000 acres had been mined, but leaving considerable of the mineral under lease still unmined. The other 345,000 acres have had no mining operations whatever, because the system of leasing was stopped when the sale was provided for. Then when the time expired in which the sale should be made there was no way left for these lands to be developed.

The purpose of this bill is to provide for the sale of those lands in tracts of 960 acres at public auction to the highest bidder on terms of four years, reserving all the rights of the present lessees in the leased lands. Now, when I say that this land is to be sold to the highest bidder at public auction, I call attention to the fact that the provision for the first sale in the bill does not contain that language. My recollection is that as originally introduced and agreed upon the bill did contain that provision, but it was sent to the department for a report. The department rewrote the bill, and in rewriting it by some inadvertence the words "at public auction to the highest bidder" were left out. I have since consulted department officials about that, and they tell me it was not the intention of the department to leave out those words; that they wanted them in the bill; and at the proper time I shall offer an amendment to insert the necessary language. The two subsequent sales carry that language, as I now recall.

This is about all the statement I care to make, unless some Member desires to ask me a question.

Mr. LENROOT. Will the gentleman yield for two or three questions?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Yes.

Mr. LENROOT. I should like to ask the gentleman why there is no report on this bill.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. By the Secretary of the Interior?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. There was a report made on an identical bill in the last session of Congress, and when the new bill was sent to the Secretary the Commissioner of Indian Affairs told me he thought as long as they had reported on a similar bill it was unnecessary to make any other report.

Mr. LENROOT. Was the other bill identical?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Identical.

Mr. LENROOT. There is some language in the report of the Secretary upon the previous bill in which he seems to refer to some things that do not seem to be included in this bill.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. His recommendations have been included in the present bill.

Mr. LENROOT. I could not find that. I may find it later.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I think I can explain that to the gentleman's satisfaction.

Mr. LENROOT. On page 3 of the report, about the fourth paragraph from the bottom, I find this language:

The Secretary of the Interior has never affirmatively accepted their joint valuation of $12,238,189 as his own, and therefore I suggest that the bill be amended at the end of line 12, page 1, by inserting the words "which shall be" in lieu of the words "as heretofore," sufficient data being on file in the records of this department to determine on an appraised value to be accepted.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. On what page of the report is that?

Mr. LENROOT. On page 3, about the fourth paragraph from the bottom. The gentleman will see that the amendment suggested by the Secretary of the Interior can not be traced in this bill at all, being applicable to another bill.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. That is true. Those words ought to be in there if they are not.

Mr. LENROOT. I do not know what they apply to, and I can not tell from the bill.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. They apply to the appraisement.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. In just a moment, if the gentleman will permit me. If the gentleman will read line 9, on page 1 of the bill, he will see that it reads—

Shall cause the same to be appraised.

Mr. LENROOT. Yes; by a board of appraisers.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. That covers the Secretary's recommendations. It may not be in the same language, but it covers his idea.

Mr. LENROOT. Then the bills are not identical? Is that true?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. The bill that was sent to the Secretary was not identical with this, but the bill was amended to conform to the Secretary's request. That was done in the session before the present Congress, and the present bill is identical with that bill as amended in accordance with the Secretary's recommendation.

Mr. LENROOT. Where are the words "which shall be" in lieu of the words "as heretofore"?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. The old bill contained the words "as heretofore appraised," and the Secretary of the Interior wanted the lands reappraised. The original bill did not provide for the reappraisement but provided for the sale of the land on the old appraisal. The bill was amended to conform to the Secretary's recommendation.

Mr. LENROOT. That was the information I was asking for.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Now I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. STAFFORD. The bill now before the House was reported on the day before the adjournment of the last session?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. The Committee on Indian Affairs reported three bills on that day, as I recall.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. They were not privileged under the understanding then in force, to be considered at that session.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I am not so sure about that.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman now brings in a bill that is of vast importance, one that has never been submitted to the Secretary of the Interior in its present form. The bill which was referred to the Secretary of the Interior for his consideration was, in form at least, entirely different, whether it is substantially the same or not, I have not been able to ascertain, that being House bill 12544, which was introduced on March 1, 1916. I wish to inquire whether the gentleman contemplates passing this bill this afternoon?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I want to pass it as quickly as I can, but I do not want to pass it until the House is thoroughly satisfied with it.

Mr. STAFFORD. It is a most important bill, as the gentleman will acknowledge.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. It is important to my people. I know that.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman has the right of way on next Calendar Wednesday. There are some provisions in here that have not been digested by a large membership of the House. Here is one that relates to the rights of present lessees of the coal lands to be credited on the purchase price with the royalties that they have heretofore paid for coal already mined.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Oh, no. I can explain to the gentleman about that.

Mr. STAFFORD. On a hurried reading of the bill I got the idea that they were to be credited with royalties on coal already mined.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. No. When the leases were made certain advanced royalties were required before the coal would be mined. Certain operators undertook to work two leases under one opening and have taken it out of one lease and on the other there was none. They have paid the department the royalty on both leases.

Now, that advanced royalty is to be credited when the coal is mined, but it is not on coal already mined. This bill provides that the lessee shall get credit for royalties paid on coal that has not been mined, but not upon coal that has been mined. It is on the advance royalty that the law gives them credit for at 8 cents a ton when mined.

Mr. STAFFORD. In view of the importance of the bill, I question whether the bill should be taken up when reported so recently as this. Considering the fact that no one has considered the bills reported the day before we adjourned, this bill might as well be considered as having been reported into the House first on yesterday.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. The gentleman's statement is correct, as far as this one report is concerned, but the bill had been gone into by the committee and reported during the Sixty-fourth Congress, but was not reached on the calendar. There were three different hearings in the 64th Congress, and the report was made on it to the House, but it was not reached on the calendar. On the day before the last session adjourned this bill was reported out. It was reported for two reasons. The first reason was that it was providing for the mining of coal which was greatly in demand, and it was thought by some of us that this would bring it within the war-measure rule. In order to keep the calendar from being congested we held it back until the day before the session adjourned and reported it. The committee went into it thoroughly, and this is the second report.

Mr. STAFFORD. But the bill has never been considered in the House before?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. We never had an opportunity to consider it.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does not the gentleman think that all his rights would be preserved if we allowed it to go over until next calendar Wednesday?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I think we might consider it a little bit right now. I want everybody to be satisfied about it, but I think if it goes over to next calendar Wednesday we had better not displace it on the calendar.

Mr. STAFFORD. It would not be displaced on the calendar.

Mr. LENROOT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Yes.

Mr. LENROOT. Reading from the report of the committee on this bill, I find, under date of March 10, 1916, the Secretary reported favorably upon H. R. 12544, a bill similar in text and substance to H. R. 195, which is this bill. I have had placed before me a copy of the old bill, and in that bill there was no provision whatever concerning the relinquishment of all control by the Department of the Interior over these leases.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. There was not. Is the gentleman reading from the bill as reported?

Mr. LENROOT. I am reading from the report of the Secretary on the bill 12544, which stated that it is similar to the bill now pending.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. It is similar in text and substance. After the bill was taken up and, as I recall now, before it was reported, there came certain people, attorneys and others, who were interested in seeing that no violence was done to any person having vested rights under the leases. These leases had been made some 15 years before. The tribal authorities, citizens on the land, and a representative of the department got together and these additions were made. They were not changes, but additions.

Mr. LENROOT. They were substantial additions.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Yes; and very necessary.

Mr. LENROOT. Does not the gentleman think the Department of the Interior should report to the committee and to this House upon so vital a question as the relinquishment of control over the leases?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Let me ask the gentleman from Wisconsin this question: After the lands pass out of the hands of the Indians into the hands of the purchasers, does the gentleman think the department should then have any control over them?

Mr. LENROOT. Provided the land on which the leases are existing can be sold for as high a price to the purchaser as if the lease did not exist, I would agree with the gentleman; but if that is not true, I do not agree with the gentleman.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I think if this language is placed in the bill they can be sold for as high a price.

Mr. LENROOT. That is another question. There is another difference in the bills. In the old bill there is no reference whatever to the granting to the State of Oklahoma of the entire estate except the coal and asphalt, nor do I find any reference in the old bill for the granting of the right to the State of Oklahoma to purchase the coal and asphalt deposits lying under the surface. Does the gentleman think that it is entirely a fair statement to say that this bill is similar in text and substance to that bill?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. That only authorizes the sale of some fifteen hundred acres of coal to the State. The bill is similar; those were additions to it.

Mr. LENROOT. I will say this to my friend, that we had a right to rely upon the report of the committee without sending for the old bill. We had a right to rely upon the assumption that these things were in the old bill, which is not true.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. The principal difference is that the additions made here is in relation to the title to the lands after they have passed to the purchaser, to define the rights between the lessee and the purchaser of the land. They all refer to these relations, except the provision giving Oklahoma the right to purchase coal deposits on certain lands. That gives the right to Oklahoma to purchase 1,580 acres lying adjacent to the penitentiary, to use for State penitentiary purposes. There is another provision to which the gentleman calls attention about the condemnation proceedings conferring upon the State all rights except the coal and asphalt. Condemnation proceedings for the State were carried out under the Indian appropriation act of 1909. The bill for the sale of the surface of the coal lands was not passed until February 19, 1912, some three years thereafter. When the bill for the sale of the surface was passed it carried practically, almost identically, the language that is carried here with relation to the sale of the surface. It provided that the surface therein described should constitute the entire estate, save the coal and the asphalt. I can read the exact language:

> The surface herein referred to shall include the entire estate save the coal and asphalt reserve.

This simply makes the State's title conform to surface-sale provision.

Mr. LENROOT. Getting back to the original question as to whether or not the purchaser, being subrogated in every way to the Interior Department so far as being landlord is concerned, the gentleman assumes that the Indian would be just as well off because the entire estate would be sold, and he would get the entire proceeds in cash. Section 4 provides that such deposits shall be sold subject to all rights of the lessees, and so forth, and then goes on and provides that all control over operation now exercised by the Department of the Interior shall be reliquished and that there shall be no control over the operations of the lessee so far as the Government is concerned. Is it not possible that a purchaser bidding upon two tracts of coal land, one upon which there is no lease and the other upon which there is one of these leases at 8 cents a ton—is that the correct amount?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Yes.

Mr. LENROOT. That a purchaser, believing that it is worth to him 16 cents a ton royalty, is going to bid as much for that tract under lease as he is for the other tract?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. In reply to that I will say that a vein of coal contains about 1,000 tons of coal to the foot thickness per acre. These veins will probably average 3 or 4 feet—hardly 4 feet, but we will call it 4 feet for a basis. A 4-foot vein, then, would contain 4,000 tons of coal, and the royalty on that at 8 cents would amount to $320 per acre—a great deal more than you will ever be able to realize from any of these lands. I have not any idea that these lands will bring over ten to eighteen million dollars when sold, because some of them are barren of coal and in some of them the coal veins are too narrow to ever produce a profit.

Mr. LENROOT. Do I gather from the gentleman that the Indian would actually receive much more money by going on under this system?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Yes; no doubt of it; but he would not receive it for the next seven or eight generations, perhaps, under the present system.

Mr. LENROOT. Why should the lands now under lease be included?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. They should be included because we have made a solemn agreement with the Indians that we would wind that estate up and sell those lands. They should be included because the Federal Government ought to keep its word, just as it requires and expects an individual to keep his word.

Mr. LENROOT. Even if it is to the absolute detriment of the Indian?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. It will not be to the detriment of the Indian, because the present mining output, as I recollect it, now is about 3,000,000 tons a year. That would amount in royalty to about $240,000 per year, scarcely anything when divided among 30,000 people; and if you would sell this land, place it in the hands of people where it can be developed, and pay out the money you sell it for to the Indians, you will do him a substantial good, because you will give him enough to improve the land that he is already allotted and enable him to make a showing—much better than to pay it in driblets of $10.

Mr. LENROOT. I would like to ask the gentleman one other question with reference to these appraisers. One of the appraisers, it seems, is to be appointed by the principal chief of the Choctaw Nation.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Yes.

Mr. LENROOT. I would like to ask the gentleman something about the chief of the Choctaw Nation.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. The chief of the Choctaw Nation is Victor M. Lock, quite a high-class young man. He is now a major in the United States Army and is at one of the training camps. He will probably go to France. The governor of the Chickasaw Nation is Gov. D. H. Johnston, who has been chief of the Chickasaws since 1902, I believe—has he not, Mr. CAMPBELL?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. 1900, I think.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. A high-class, educated man.

Mr. LENROOT. Is he an Indian?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Yes, a Chickasaw Indian; and the chief of the Choctaws is a Choctaw Indian.

Mr. LENROOT. That is all I care to inquire about at this time.

Mr. HASTINGS. And if my colleague will permit, these appraisers are to be appointed by the President upon the recommendations, one of the governor of the Chickasaw Nation and one of the governor of the Choctaw Nation and one upon the recommendation of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Yes.

Mr. HASTINGS. All to be appointed by the President of the United States.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. All to be appointed by the President, and the appraisement must be sworn to within a stipulated time before the sale is made.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Were these lands appraised some seven or eight years ago?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Yes; longer than that, I think it was.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. About eight years ago?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. About eight or nine years ago.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. And offered for sale at that time?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Yes. They were offered for sale in 1905; that is about 12 years ago.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. And there was a considerable portion of the land sold at that time?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. None, not an acre.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The surface was sold.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. No. The land offered in 1905 was the entire estate, surface and mineral, and none of that was sold. Since that time, under the act of February 19, 1912, there have been sold probably all the surface, and I think the surface has brought more money than was offered for surface and mineral at that time.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Has the coal ever been surveyed separate from the surface?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Yes.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Is that survey the one under which estimates were made that there were so many billions of dollars worth of coal?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Two of them, one of them ran almost to a billion dollars. Then an estimate was made after that under the supervision of J. George Wright and the then mining inspector of the Indian Territory, William Cameron. They appraised the coal at something over $12,000,000.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The next question I desire to ask is, What was the expense of that appraisement?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Fifty thousand dollars.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Now it is proposed to expend $50,000 for another appraisement?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Fifty thousand dollars for an appraisement and the expenses incident to sale and advertising.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The other appraisement cost $50,000. Is there any reason to believe that a subsequent appraisement now could be made cheaper than the former appraisement was made?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. The gentleman means a billion dollars?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I think so. There has been an appraisement made since of something over $12,000,000.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. No; I mean the cost of the appraisement.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Yes; I think it could be made much cheaper because the Secretary of the Interior has all the data filed in his office upon which to make the appraisement.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Why make the appraisement at all? There has been a pretty thorough estimate of the amount of coal that was there at the time the former appraisement was made. They know the amount of coal that has been mined since then and why spend $50,000 more in making another appraisement?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. A very small portion of the $50,000, I take it, will be spent for the appraisement, but most of it will be spent for advertising and sale of the mineral.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The language of the bill provides for the appraisement.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. The language of the bill provides—

That there is hereby appropriated, out of any Choctaw and Chickasaw funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $50,000 to pay the expenses of appraisement, advertisement, and sale herein provided for.

It is for all three of those purposes. I will say to the gentleman that when this bill was introduced, in view of the fact that two appraisements had already been made of the land, no appraisement was provided, but, as I said in the discussion with the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] awhile ago, we provided that it should be sold upon the appraisement heretofore made, or some language to that effect. When the bill was sent to the Secretary, he insisted that there should be another appraisement, and that was put in out of deference to his request. He had the land to sell, and he did not believe he ought to take the responsibility of the sale without having the reappraisement.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. That is what I was getting at. We have been endeavoring for years and years to get some adjustment of the Indian affairs among the Five Civilized Tribes that would close up that estate and separate from it a lot of men who have been living off of the Five Civilized Tribes for many years, and it occurred to me at the time the Secretary returned the bill asking for this $50,000 that it was done by somebody in the office who simply wanted to provide additional jobs and get additional money out of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nation for doing work that is absolutely unnecessary, because there is now on file in the office of the Secretary of the Interior a thorough appraisement of all the coal underlying this estate. They can not deduct from that coal; they can not add to it, except that which has been mined since the appraisement was made, and they know the amount that has been mined, so there is absolutely no necessity for appropriating any amount of money for another appraisement of that property, and it can only be done to provide jobs for somebody who may better be employed in raising wheat, corn, or potatoes.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I do not believe there is anybody in the world more concerned in having these affairs closed up than I am, for the bane of my existence from the time I reach the Oklahoma line until I get back here is some fellow asking me when we are going to get the tribal affairs closed up. Now, there is a difference between tribal affairs and individual Indian affairs. The tribal affairs can be wound up and still the individual Indian can be amply protected. I want to emphasize the fact that there is no one more anxious to get these affairs closed up and expenses stopped than I am. Every step I have made in Congress has been toward that goal. Now, those affairs can not be closed up until this property is sold. When that is done, then they can be closed up and wound up, and that accounts for my anxiety to pass this bill as soon as possible. I agree with the gentleman perhaps that it may not have been necessary to have another appraisement, but the Secretary said the other two appraisements had been so widely apart—one $12,000,000 and the other almost a billion dollars—that he did not feel safe in relying upon them, and he thought, since he had the responsibility of selling these 400,000 acres of coal lands, that he ought to be permitted to have a reappraisement.

Now, I do not know just what jobs——

Mr. LENROOT. I think the gentleman is mistaken somewhat in that statement.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I think not.

Mr. LENROOT. May I read a paragraph from the report of the Secretary?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Yes.

Mr. LENROOT. It says:

The Secretary of the Interior has never affirmatively accepted their joint valuation of $12,238,189 as his own, and therefore I suggest that the bill be amended at the end of line 12, page 1, by inserting the words "which shall be" in lieu of the words "as heretofore," sufficient data being on file in the records of this department to determine on an appraised value to be accepted.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. That is exactly what I said.

Mr. LENROOT. You said "a new appraisement to be made." He said in this report that nothing more was necessary except to enable them from their own record——

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I am glad the gentleman called my attention to that. I shall be willing to have the appraisers stricken out and have the Secretary make the appraisement in his own way.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. It has been my contention from the time this matter first came before this committee that there was sufficient data on file now to enable the Secretary of the Interior to ascertain about the amount of the coal and its value.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I think the only reason this appraisement proposition was put in as it is was that the Choctaw Tribe and the Chickasaw Tribe wanted to have representatives present when the price of these deposits was finally passed upon.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Could not that be done in the office of the Secretary of the Interior by the Secretary?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I think so.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. And by the governors of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I think so.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Without all this formality?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. There is not very much formality, I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Than the informality of placing the hands of some appraisers in the pockets of the Choctaw people and taking out this amount of money.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I am perfectly willing to let that go out. It was out of deference to the Choctaw and Chickasaw Tribes that that was put in.

Mr. LENROOT. That the appraisement should be made by the Secretary?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Exactly.

Mr. LENROOT. Simply to authorize him to go through the formality of appraisement?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I think he would do that, anyway. I think he would consult the Choctaw and Chickasaw chiefs anyway.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. How much coal was taken out since the last appraisement was made?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I have not the data on how much was taken out then. I might be able to tell how much was taken out during the last year, although I am not sure of that. I have not the total production here. My friend from New York [Mr. SNYDER] calls my attention to the fact that there were about 4,000,000 tons taken out last year, and I assume it is about the same this year.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. At the time the first bill was introduced to sell this coal, as I recall it, the coal production had fallen to a very low ebb?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Yes.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. And the producers were having considerable difficulty in selling even the small quantity that they were producing?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. That is true.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. On account of the large use of oil?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Yes.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. And that condition has only changed since the beginning of the war?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Well, the gentleman knows, of course, a great deal more about the price of oil than I do, but if he will only refresh his memory he will recall that the price of oil began to rise about six or seven years ago, and it went up continually until some two or three years ago, when it became too high to be used in place of fuel. The Sante Fe Railroad and other railroads that had been using oil began to take out oil burners and restore coal burners. So the oil is not a competitor now at all. It is worth $2 to $3.50 a barrel, and is not a competitor as fuel.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Not at this time?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. No.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. And so far as the price of coal is concerned, this would be a much better time to sell than three years ago, when there was such an insistent demand for the sale of the coal property?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Much better.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I have forgotten just how much longer those leases run.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. The last one expires in 1932, 15 years from now. The others begin expiring one or two years before that.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Has there been a recent estimate as to how long it would take the present lessees to remove the coal under their leases?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I have not seen the estimates at all, and if I am wrong the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNYDER] will correct me, as I think he was present when the operators stated that perhaps one-half or two-thirds of the mineable coal had been taken out of the leases then being operated. The leased land only amounts to 100,000 acres, and there are 445,000 acres all told. So that leaves 345,000 acres of land which is not complicated by leases at all and which at this time is dormant and can not be mined under the present law.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Has this unleased land been tested?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Yes; with diamond drills.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. So that it is known just how much coal is there?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I think it is known as well as it could be known without actual development.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Do you know in a general way how many tests have been made on a quarter section?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I could not give any accurate information on that. A great many drill holes were made with this $50,000.

Mr. BUTLER. How many seams are there?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. The hearings show 52 drill holes were made on the entire leased area.

Mr. BUTLER. How many seams are there on it?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. There is a light vein, and then this particular vein running from 3 feet 8 inches to 4 feet?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Yes; the vein varies. In the McAlester field the veins are about 3 feet thick, and when you get toward Hartshorn, as I recall, the coal thickens. In some places the McAlester vein west of Hartshorn is only about 2 feet 6 inches. That is the best coal that there is in the field—what is known as the two McAlester veins. Then you get to another coal field of a different character of coal when you reach the Colgate field. There the veins are thicker, but the coal is less valuable.

Mr. BUTLER. How many veins are there?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. From one to three, but the third vein is too small to be profitable and considerable of the second vein is very thin. The McCurtain field in the northern part of this area contains one vein about 7 feet thick, but it is very erratic. That is to say, it varies greatly and abruptly in thickness, pitch, and other conditions.

Mr. BUTLER. In normal times what would this coal sell for per ton at the mine?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. You mean the coal itself?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes; the coal at the mine.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. The coal at the mine would sell now for about——

Mr. BUTLER. No; I mean at normal times.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. It would sell for about $2.50 or $3.

Mr. BUTLER. The royalty is what?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Eight cents a ton.

Mr. CHANDLER of Oklahoma. I wish to say that that price of $2.50 or $3 is for lump coal. The mine run would be about $2.60 or $2.65.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. The average would run about $2.50. I want to say further, in reply to the gentleman, that these veins of coal stand at a very acute pitch, and it is a very expensive coal to mine—the most expensive, as I understand, in the United States. It costs sometimes $2.75 or $3 a ton to mine it.

Mr. BUTLER. Did not the gentleman say it is worth only $2.60?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. That is the lump coal that is worth $3. In normal times it is worth $2.50 or $3 a ton.

Mr. BUTLER. I would like to know what the profit is.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. The cost of operating the mine, including overhead expenses and all, is about what the coal brings. As evidence of that fact, nearly all the mines closed up except a few that undertook to furnish coal to the railroad.

Mr. BUTLER. It is the same old story—no profit.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Certainly.

Mr. LENROOT. What is the present law with reference to the disposition of the surface? Is it on sale at an appraised value?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Practically all of it is sold.

Mr. LENROOT. I call the attention of the gentleman to page 4, beginning with line 16 of the bill, to this language:

That any lessee shall have the preferential right, provided the same is exercised within 90 days after the approval of the completion of the appraisement of the minerals as herein provided, to purchase at the appraised value any and all of the surface of the land lying within such lease—

And so forth.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. When I answered the gentleman's question I meant all had been sold that was subject to sale. There was some set aside which the operator might need for the operation of the mines.

Mr. LENROOT. They were appraised, but not sold?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. They were not offered for sale.

Mr. LENROOT. Is the appraised value here—the old appraised value?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. No. It was the appraisement made in 1912.

Mr. LENROOT. Under the surface act?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Yes. This appraised value was made at the same appraisement as that at which the land had recently been sold.

Mr. LENROOT. The only reason why the lessee could not purchase it was that it had been withdrawn?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. The law gave him the right to purchase it at the appraised value, but he evidently thought it had been appraised too high. This continues the right to purchase at the appraised value given in the act of 1912.

Mr. LENROOT. It does not change the existing law in any particular?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I do not think so.

Mr. LENROOT. Then what was the purpose of putting it in?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. It was put in there as a matter of abundant caution, so that nothing in this law would repeal the right of the lessee to purchase that land.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. I assume that these 445,000 acres of coal lands are in a compact territory?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. No. If the gentleman will think a moment he will know that they run in narrow strips. Wherever the anticlinal comes up it pushes the coal out. You may have one anticlinal here and another in another place.

Mr. STAFFORD. But it is in a well-defined district?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Yes; but it is not compact.

Mr. STAFFORD. What is the entire area?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. It is 445,000 acres.

Mr. STAFFORD. Can the gentleman describe it in a rectangular area?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. It runs northeast and southwest something over 100 miles.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is it tributary to railroad properties?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Yes; the most of it is—not right on the railroad, but by building spurs out 8 or 10 miles you could reach practically all of it.

Mr. STAFFORD. I assume that the land that is now operated under lease is on the direct line of some railroad.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Yes; most of the lands that have been leased are along the main trunk lines.

Mr. STAFFORD. In the law that we passed authorizing the disposition of the surface rights, was any provision made that the purchasers of the mineral deposits would have a right to enter upon the surface?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Not to enter upon the surface. This is Indian land and not public land. But they were given the preferential right to purchase whatever surface was necessary for the mining operations, not to exceed a certain amount, at the appraised value.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am referring to the land of which the surface rights only were sold, with the reservation of the coal and asphaltum rights.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Practically all the surface has been sold except that part that was reserved to the operators. You see, the operators had certain rights under their leases. They had the right to so much of the surface of the land as was necessary for their mining operations. So when we passed the bill for the sale of the surface we provided for the setting aside of this amount of land reserved for the mining operations, to let them purchase it at the appraised value. About all the balance, except this reservation, was to be sold. Now, the operators have universally refused to purchase this land, because they said it was appraised at too high a price. This provision here simply attempts to continue that long enough to see if the operators want to change their minds after the deposits are placed on sale.

Mr. STAFFORD. Am I right in my assumption that as to the coal lands that have not been leased the surface rights have already been disposed of?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. All disposed of.

Mr. STAFFORD. Then I ask the question whether, as to these surface rights that have been disposed of, there is a reservation to grant to any subsequent purchaser of the coal rights the right to enter upon the surface?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Absolutely. It is given the best protection that the lawyers of this House, including the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL], the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], and the Solicitor for the Department of the Interior, could write. They said it was adequate, the lessees were satisfied with it at the time, and the Indians were satisfied with it. That was done in the act of February 19, 1912. I will say to the gentleman in a word that it gives the owner or lessee the right to enter upon the lands covering his lease and the right of underground ingress and egress without compensation to the surface owner, and the further right to acquire such portions of the surface necessary to mining operations. If the owner and the lessee are unable to agree on the price for the land taken over, then two appraisers may be appointed, one by each party. If these disagree, then the Federal judge of the district may appoint the third arbitrator, and their decision is final. In the meantime the lessee or owner of the deposits has the use of the surface in controversy.

Mr. STAFFORD. Would those privileges extend to the lands which have not been leased?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. They extend to all. As the gentleman will understand, that right is reserved to the Indians. The coal was reserved to the Indians when they sold the surface. These rights were all reserved to the Indians.

Mr. STAFFORD. One further question. On the lands that have been leased are there divers companies that are operating the mines?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Oh, yes; there are some 110 or 111 leases, and I suppose there are 30 or 40 companies operating under them.

Mr. SNYDER. The number of leases is 113.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Some of them have not been operating. I presume most of them are operating now, since we have the high war prices for coal, but, as my friend from Kansas knows, a few years ago they were having a pretty tough time to get by.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman has fixed 8 cents a ton royalty in this bill. My attention was called some time ago to royalties being paid in West Virginia as high as 10 cents a ton. I do not know anything about the quality of this coal as compared with the coal mined in West Virginia.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Mining conditions in West Virginia and mining conditions in Oklahoma are absolutely different. I suppose the coal in West Virginia can be mined for 30 or 40 per cent less than it can in Oklahoma.

Mr. STAFFORD. By reason of the character of the veins?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. By reason of the thickness of the veins, by reason of the fact that a great deal of the coal mined in Oklahoma has a faulty top of shale or other brittle substance, by reason of the fact that the floor of most of the mines is clay, causing bucking, making track conditions bad, and by reason of the gaseous conditions which exist in the mines.

Mr. STAFFORD. I thank the gentleman for the information.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. FOSTER having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. POU, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 195) providing for the sale of the coal and asphalt deposits in the segregated mineral lands in the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations, Oklahoma, and had come to no resolution thereon.

ORDER OF BUSINESS TO-MORROW.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. GILLETT. Will the gentleman yield for one moment?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. GILLETT. I think it would very much add to the convenience of Members if the gentleman could inform the House if he has decided yet whether the declaration of war resolution is to be taken up to-morrow?

Mr. KITCHIN. I have not talked with the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, but I understand from gentlemen who have talked with him that it will probably be reported to-morrow, and that he will ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration. If he can not get that, then it will be taken up on Friday.

Mr. GILLETT. Either to-morrow or Friday?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. GILLETT. That is still uncertain, though?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

ADJOURNMENT.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from North Carolina moves that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 3 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, December 6, 1917, at 12 o'clock noon.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, UNITED STATES,
Washington, D. C., December 6, 1917.

Hon. CHAMP CLARK,
Speaker of the House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SPEAKER: Representative H. J. DRANE, of Florida, desires to be excused from attendance in the House for the remainder of the week. He is very ill at his room in the Congress Hall Hotel, and on the advice of his physician will be compelled to absent himself for several days.

The several requests were granted.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE FOR HOMESTEAD SETTLERS AND ENTRYMEN.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, on yesterday we passed the bill H. R. 4617 with two amendments. I found on consulting the clerk of my committee that the Senate had passed an identical bill, S. 2334, last fall. I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee on the Public Lands of the House from the further consideration of Senate bill 2334 and ask for the present consideration of the same. If that request is granted, I will ask to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the House bill, and also to vacate the proceedings of yesterday.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent to discharge the Committee on the Public Lands from the further consideration of the bill S. 2334 and the present consideration of the same. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

An act (S. 2334) to authorize absence by homestead settlers and entrymen, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That during the pendency of the existing war any homestead settler or entryman shall be entitled to a leave of absence from his land for the purpose of performing farm labor, and such absence, while actually engaged in farm labor, shall, upon compliance with the terms of this act, be counted as constructive residence: Provided, That each settler or entryman leaving his claim for the purpose herein provided shall file notice thereof in the United States Land Office, and at the expiration of the calendar year file in said land office of the district wherein his claim is situated a written statement, under oath and corroborated by two witnesses, giving the date or dates when he left his claim, date or dates of return thereto, and where and for whom he was engaged in farm labor during such period or periods of absence: Provided further, That nothing herein shall excuse any homestead settler or entryman from making improvements or performing the cultivation required by applicable law upon his claim or entry. The Secretary of the Interior is authorized to provide rules and regulations for carrying this act into effect.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I now ask unanimous consent to strike out all of the Senate bill after the enacting clause and incorporate the bill H. R. 4617, with the two amendments, that we passed yesterday.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent to strike out all after the enacting clause in the Senate bill just read and substitute the House bill passed yesterday, together with the two amendments that were agreed to. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Senate bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to vacate the proceedings had yesterday with reference to the passage of House bill 4617, and that the bill be laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent to vacate the proceedings of yesterday in the passage of the bill H. R. 4617 and that the bill be laid on the table. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

AUSTRIA-HUNGARY.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Speaker, I have been directed by the Committee on Foreign Affairs to report unanimously a resolution declaring that a state of war exists between this country and the Austria-Hungarian Government and to ask unanimous consent that this resolution be taken up to-morrow immediately after the reading of the Journal.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent that a resolution declaring that a state of war exists between this country and Austria-Hungary be taken up immediately after the reading of the Journal to-morrow.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman from Virginia what debate he expects to allow?

Mr. FLOOD. We were discussing that in committee yesterday, and it was suggested that we have one hour on each side.

Mr. GILLETT. There is not the slightest disposition on this side of the House to protract or delay the passage of the resolution, and I do not know that there is any disposition to protract the debate, but it seems to me that that is a small limit of time.

Mr. FLOOD. I am willing to agree to a longer time, but I think we ought to pass it to-morrow.

Mr. GILLETT. I think that would be desirable.

Mr. KITCHIN. We can fix the time to-morrow.

Mr. BORLAND. Will the gentleman from Virginia yield?

Mr. FLOOD. Certainly.

Mr. BORLAND. Is there a report accompanying the resolution?

Mr. FLOOD. As soon as unanimous consent is given I will state that I am preparing a report and will have it finished in half an hour, and I will ask unanimous consent to file it during the day.

Mr. BORLAND. When will it be available to Members?

Mr. FLOOD. It will be printed to-day.

Mr. FORDNEY. Does the resolution include Turkey and Bulgaria?

Mr. FLOOD. It does not.

Mr. DYER. Will there be an opportunity to offer an amendment including Turkey and Bulgaria?

Mr. GILLETT. I suppose any germane amendment will be in order.

Mr. FLOOD. Of course germane amendments can be offered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent for the consideration of the resolution declaring war against Austria-Hungary immediately after the reading of the Journal to-morrow, and that he may file the report to-day. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 15 minutes on the subject of the war resolution at this time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to address the House for 15 minutes on the war resolution. Is there objection?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Reserving the right to object, which I do not intend to do, in view of the request of the gentleman, I wish to ask the gentleman from Virginia whether the President or the State Department has indicated a desire at this time to have a declaration of war against Bulgaria and Turkey?

Mr. FLOOD. None, except that it would be ill advised at this time to make such a declaration.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER] to address the House at the present time for 15 minutes on this resolution declaring that a state of war exists with Austria-Hungary?

Mr. FOSTER. Reserving the right to object, may I ask the reason the gentleman wishes to address the House at the present time?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I am glad to make the statement. A few days ago I consulted with the chairman of our committee, and it was the opinion that the resolution would come up for consideration to-day. I regret to say that I made an arrangement to leave the city this evening on important public business which will keep me away from the city to-morrow, and I feel that there are a few words which I ought to say in reference to this resolution, and this will be my only opportunity.

Mr. GILLETT. And the gentleman is a member of the committee.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. FOSTER. I think that is satisfactory to me. I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears none, and the gentleman from Minnesota is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I feel that it is somewhat of an imposition to ask that you be detained to-day for 15 minutes to listen to the remarks I feel it my duty to make on this important resolution. My sole excuse is the one I have just given, responding to the inquiry made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER]. I say in justice to myself that if there is one thing that I believe at this hour more strongly than anything else, it is that we must begin to make this war a war of fact and accomplishment and of deadly certainty, and this determination requires that we should declare war against every enemy of our allies, including Bulgaria and Turkey. Yet I am one of those who voted for the resolution as it stands. The resolution reported from the Committee on Foreign Affairs is a unanimous one. I think there is no harm in stating that some of us, perhaps, are strongly of the opinion that the resolution should be extended, but that in deference to the wishes of the President of the United States we have put our private considerations in our pockets, and we are going to stand with him now united. [Applause.] I feel, however, that it is the duty of every Member of Congress to exercise his best thought and to take conscientious action on those things that lie within the line of his duty. The reasoning that causes the President to ask that we declare war on Austria-Hungary is the exact reasoning which should impel us to declare war on Bulgaria and Turkey. He was very adroit, skillful, masterly in the language he used. I marveled at the capacity he displayed. He has reasons to which I am willing to defer now, but I confidently predict that before many weeks have passed he will come and ask that we declare war on Bulgaria and Turkey. We might as well face the truth. The American people are not afraid of any task, however gigantic, and are willing to pay the price demanded in order that a great end be gained. There are some things that have occurred in the past by which our feet to-day can be guided. We do not need to launch out alone on an uncharted sea and in darkness. When this terrible war began three years and more ago, for a time Italy held out. In the end she declared war—against whom? Austria-Hungary alone. She had just concluded a war with Turkey and was still at enmity with the Turkish Empire, as far as their respective interests were concerned in northern Africa and in Asia Minor. Bulgaria loomed up with hostile intent in the Balkans. Italy confined herself to a declaration of war against Austria-Hungary, and she made the fatal mistake of her life.

When you go into this war you must calculate that you are going into it to fight the enemies of your friends, otherwise you are but half in the war, and you are but a weak prop to your friends. The hour may at any time strike when your attitude prevents your friends from coming to your assistance. Little Serbia held out against all the power of the Austrian Government to overrun her land, and when Bulgaria entered the war and struck Serbia on the flank with the German hosts helping the Austrians, Serbia fell in a few weeks. Likewise Montenegro, that little mountainous country whose soil had never felt the tread of hostile foot for more than 600 years. The rest of Europe had resounded to the battle drums and triumph of marching hordes and conquerors, but Montenegro remained sacred to the blood of her ancestors. Ah, why were the allies unable to stop the advancing hosts? Because Italy was not at war with Bulgaria and Germany, and when from Montenegro and Serbia came the Macedonian cry for help Italy could not send the men and guns which, united with the strength of the allies, undoubtedly would have saved Serbia and Montenegro. We have that in the past, but we have more than that. Italy has a good cause against the United States at this hour. There is no secret in Europe, there is no secret in this Chamber, and I venture there is little secret in Washington that the Italian Government has been begging of the United States these many months not for men, because they have millions in their camps, not so much for money, though they needed funds, but, above all, they begged for as they needed, guns, military matériel, and those munitions that would enable those men to be transformed into fighting units, and we failed to answer their repeated call. Why? Because we were not at war with Austria-Hungary!

My friends, when two or three or four men stand in battle array against you, united and strong, with all their power being hurled against you, how in the name of sense can you pick out one man and say, "I will fight him and leave the rest alone"? It can not be done, if you are going to give to your allies that friendly help and strength which they have a right to expect. [Applause.] And, my friends, Italy paid the price and finds that the labor of two years has been wiped away in two days. To-day, instead of conquering on her enemy's soil, she is struggling to hold back an invading host, one that already holds within its greedy clutch a large and splendid area of her land. And the end is not yet. How much of that mistake can be charged up against the United States I do not know, but I do know that they feel much of it should be. Let us not prolong the piecemeal fighting any longer. We are in this war. The President wisely said we are in it to its end, and the only end is victory. The only way victory can come is for all the allies to become united completely and fight together against a common foe. Is there any consideration that should cause us to postpone declaring war against Bulgaria and Turkey? I know of none. The reason we are about to declare war against Austria-Hungary, stripped of its camouflage, is simply military necessity.

Austria-Hungary in effect has been at war with us now these many months. Her ports have been the sally ports from which have come the death-dealing submarine in its ruthless warfare. From her wealth of guns have come cannon that at this hour it may be are hurling shot against our boys in the trenches on the front in France. Her resources are Germany's resources. Germany's enemies are her enemies, and, my friends, at this hour we must not forget that every friend of Germany is our foe. The world is not making war by piecemeal. The whole world practically is in the struggle. That which has caused the German and the Austrian and the Bulgarian and the Turk to perform such prodigies of military achievement on land is not because they are the most numerous, not because in material they surpass, not indeed because they know the art of war better than the allies, but because they have had their strength, solid and uniform, responding to one will, moving wherever that will designs they should go.

And the allies have been entering the war here and there. Ah, at last those who are now in the struggle on our side over yonder realize that this war must be death to the German power. That means death to the Bulgarian and Turkish part of it. Bulgaria, we know, entered this war for a selfish purpose. She counted the silver coin of plunder, weighed them against the blood of her own sons, and decided for war. She has no friend among the allies; she deserves none. She knows that she can not come with them. She knows that live or die her fortunes are irretrievably linked with those of the German-Austrian powers. She has made common cause with their piracy, and together they will hang or together they will plunder the world. My friends, Bulgaria to-day is vigorously in the war. Permit not yourselves to be deceived by the subtle thought that springs from what source I know not but can suspect, that if we withhold our war declaration from Bulgaria and Turkey, we may perhaps wean Bulgaria and Turkey from the central powers. Just as easily think that soft Christian words and repeating the Golden Rule will wean the robber from his plunder. It can not be done. You will separate Bulgaria from Germany in just one way—by the physical might of your armies, bursting the connection in two, and you will do it in no other way.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have 10 minutes more.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Foss] asks unanimous consent that the gentleman may have 10 minutes more. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. What claim has Turkey for our consideration? We are in the midst of horrors and it seems sometimes to us perhaps that the world has never known horrors before. But think of the history of Europe and of a part of Asia in the years that are past. It is a period drenched with the tears of dying Christians and the blood of martyred saints. It is a period when the Turkish power, with blood and savagery, held sway over a part of Europe that should have ended long, long ago. Is it possible for the Ottoman Empire to make common cause with us? No. She is now where she belongs. The Turkish Sultan belongs on the bosom of the German Kaiser to-day. [Applause.] They make good bedfellows. They are animated by the same lust of conquest, power, and blood. Turkey, like Bulgaria, knows she has nothing whatever to hope from the allies. She knows that she must live or die with the central powers of Europe. I hope she will die with them and soon. [Applause.] If this war, undertaken in the noble and lofty way in which we entered it, in its prosecution requiring the death of hundreds of thousands of Americans, because it will; if this war, with its expenditure of blood and treasure, shall end with the Turks still massacring Christians and still putting the blight of their presence on Europe, our money shall have been spent and our boys shall have been given in vain. If there is one thing which Christianity and civilization require it is now, as it has been for a century, that Turkish control in Europe shall cease to exist. [Applause.] I for one am opposed to making any common cause with the Turk. I am willing to meet him, but it must be with the butt end of a rifle in my hand and the bayonet pointed squarely at his heart. [Applause.] We can not hope to separate Bulgaria and Turkey from the central powers unless we do it by force of arms. It is not too much to hope that that very thing can be accomplished. It would not be proper in this public place, although it would give me the utmost pleasure to do so, to state to you some of the military strategy I have learned in recent weeks. I am justified, however, in stating that it contemplates, as it should contemplate, the possible use of the arms and power of the United States against both Bulgaria and Turkey. We must cast aside the shackles. We must throw away our intellectual theories of war. Let us go into it whole-heartedly and fight with our allies to the end. Then another thing, and of great importance. We all know that the German Empire daily receives news of our preparations and our plans that we sitting here in this chamber ourselves often do not know.

Many of us have recently been astounded to find how accurate has been the German information of what we are doing and what we plan to do. Information requires a source. I feel justified in stating to you that many of our friends among the allies feel that the presence in Washington of the representatives of Turkey and Bulgaria constitute an international menace. It may be true that we do exercise pretty close censorship, but there are ways and ways of people finding out and sending information. Ah, it would be indeed a sad moment should we come to realize that we had been harboring in our own country men who had given to our enemy information that resulted in the deaths of our boys. We are none of us dependent upon what others think, but I believe you think as I do, that we are going to see this thing through to the finish, and we are going to undertake the steps necessary to that end. And I want to say to you in that connection this, that if we declare war on all the foes of England, France, and Italy—which lands may Heaven bless, for they are still fighting, and they are about all of the allies that are now on the firing line—if we declare war on all their foes, it will be an inspiration to their men, and with renewed vigor, confidence, and hope they will hurl themselves upon our foes. Oh, my friends, it would tell to them that our cause is a common one. We are willing to make the same sacrifices, willing to perform the same heroic deeds, determined to do our full part, that the world may at last be rid of this military monster in whose living presence they have been forced to live these many, many years.

These are my thoughts and my feelings. I would not be true to myself if I did not express them. But with these thoughts and these feelings I still believe that harmony is the choicest, dearest thing we can achieve to-day, and I am willing under the exigencies of the case to wait a patient hour, until the Chief Executive will come to do that which I feel certain he will do—ask us to declare war against all the foes of our friends and with our friends fight all our foes together. [Loud applause.]

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent that he may proceed for 10 minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. [Applause.]

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Speaker, I have great admiration for my distinguished friend who has just addressed the House, admiration for his character, for his intellect, and for his patriotism. And I heartily indorse the patriotic sentiment he expressed in closing the very interesting speech which he has made to the House, but I dissent from most of the statements and conclusions of his speech.

He is in favor of declaring war against Turkey and Bulgaria, but he is willing to follow the leadership of our great Chief Executive, who has not reached a conclusion that the time has arrived for declaring war against those countries. This is well enough, but his views in reference to Turkey and Bulgaria are entirely wrong. [Applause.]

All of us realize, Mr. Speaker, that to a great extent the burden of the great European war is upon this country, and every Member of this body is willing to assume that burden, and willing to put into that war our man power and our resources, to the end that we may have a complete victory over our enemies of the central governments. [Applause.] And I believe the President is fully apprised of all the military situations in connection with this war, and whenever it becomes necessary for the proper prosecution of the war, for the speediest winning of the war, to declare war upon any nation that is allied with Germany the President will come to Congress and recommend such a declaration, and that declaration will be adopted with a practical unanimity by this body. [Applause.]

The time has come, Mr. Speaker, in the opinion of the President and those who are in closest touch with the situation, to declare war against Austria-Hungary. The Committee on Foreign Affairs has reported unanimously a resolution carrying such declaration, and I hope, and I believe, that to-morrow that declaration will be unanimously adopted by the House of Representatives. [Applause.] But the time has not come, in the opinion of the President and in the judgment of those who are more intimately associated with this matter in all of its details, than the military experts whom my friend from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER] quoted are, to declare war against Bulgaria and Turkey. On the contrary, there are strong reasons why we should not do this now. I will trespass upon the time of this House for a few moments and give the reasons which have occurred to me why this country should not at this time declare war against those two countries. The time may come when we may have to do it; that time has not come yet.

My friend from Minnesota spoke in strong terms of our duty to Italy. Italy or no other one of the allied powers has suggested to this country that the prosecution of this war could be beneficially effected or its termination hastened by a declaration of war against Turkey or Bulgaria.

At the present time there can be no question of any direct military operation by the United States against these countries. Particularly is that true in reference to Turkey. The question of the advisability of declaring war against Turkey therefore must be considered first from the standpoint of the moral effect of such a declaration, and, second, from the standpoint of the indirect damage to Turkey and the United States which would naturally and probably result from such declaration.

Considering the second of these questions first, it should be remembered that Turkey's interests in the United States are very insignificant, while the interests of the United States in Turkey are very large. The importance of the American missionary and educational institutions in Turkey are too well known to require a detailed description before this House. It will be sufficient to say that during the past 100 years the American missionary societies have expended over $20,000,000 in Turkey, and that the present value of the American missionary property in Turkey, mainly used for educational purposes, amounts to several millions of dollars. In the event of war between the United States and Turkey all this property would be destroyed or confiscated.

Our State Department is in receipt of letters from prominent American citizens acquainted with the situation in Turkey, calling its attention to the great personal danger to the Americans in Turkey if the United States should declare war against that country before the missionaries and other American citizens could leave that country. And time should be given for them to get out if we contemplate declaring war against the Ottoman Empire. At the present time the American institutions in Turkey are being fairly well treated.

There is practically nothing to fear from the activities of the Turkish subjects in the United States, the vast majority of whom are Christian Syrians, Assyrians, and Armenians. The number of real Turks in the United States is very limited. The report of the Immigration Commission, published in 1911, states that only 12,954 true Turks came to America from Turkey during the 12 years from 1899 to 1910, inclusive.

And I want to state here that my friend the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER] was mistaken in stating that the Turkish Embassy here is open.

I may have been somewhat responsible for his making that mistake, but the fact is Turkey severed diplomatic relations with this country on April 20, 1917. There is no representative of Turkey in this country now, and there is no opportunity for any representative of Turkey or any Turks here to give information to Germany as to the affairs of this country or as to our purposes.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will permit, the Bulgarian Legation is here, is it not?

Mr. FLOOD. Yes; the Bulgarian Legation is here. I will come to that in a few moments.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. If the gentleman from Virginia will permit, I would like to propound an inquiry, whether there are not some Turkish consuls in the United States?

Mr. FLOOD. No; they are all gone.

It is well known that a great deal of friction between the Turks and Germans is being developed at the present time. My friend from Minnesota does not think so, but that is the impression I got from talking to the officials of our State Department and officials of the administration.

Even the prowar party in Turkey is divided into two factions, and while it is reported that Enver Pasha and his followers are strongly pro-German, Talaat Bey is at the head of a party who are only concerned with the interests of Turkey and are beginning to look with suspicion upon German ambitions. I believe that a declaration of war against Turkey by the United States, unless the United States is in a position to strike Turkey, will have the tendency to strengthen the German influence in that country, an influence which everyone who is familiar with it agrees is weakening.

The Turks, so far as is known, have no troops on the western front, and have few, if any, effective submarines. In fact, they have not made and are not making any attacks on citizens of this country. The danger of direct conflict between the forces of the United States and those of Turkey is therefore very small.

These are the reasons for not declaring war against Turkey at this time. I believe they are much stronger than any reasons that can be advanced for a declaration of war against that country. [Applause.]

Now, with reference to Bulgaria——

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has expired.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have 10 minutes more.

Mr. FLOOD. Five minutes will be plenty.

Mr. FOSS. I ask that he may have five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Virginia may proceed for five minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FLOOD. The situation with reference to Bulgaria is even stronger than that with Turkey; that is, the reasons why we should not declare war against Bulgaria are stronger than those with reference to Turkey. Bulgaria has not even broken off diplomatic relations with this country. They have the kindest feelings toward America. Americans are well thought of there. I have clipped from the Washington Times an interview with Dr. Stephen Panaretoff, the Bulgarian minister here, in which he says:

> It is well known that great pressure has been brought to bear upon Germany's allies to break with the United States. * * * Bulgaria alone has been able to resist this and follow her own inclinations.
> I do not expect to see Bulgars fighting outside of what is considered Bulgar territory. Our men have never fought on the west front and never will. Even Teuton prisoners captured by Italians declare that there are no Bulgars engaged in the drive against Italy. There may be Bulgar-speaking troops from Albania or Macedonia in Teuton ranks, but they are in no way identified with the Bulgarian Army.

That is from the minister here. He certainly is not unfriendly to this country.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman allow me a moment?

Mr. FLOOD. Yes.

Mr. GILLETT. I was told recently by an authority quite as high as the one he has cited that Bulgarian officers were serving in the Germany Army in its attack on Italy.

Mr. FLOOD. I saw that statement in the newspapers, but the interview of the Bulgarian minister contradicts the newspaper reports.

Mr. GILLETT. I was told this directly. I do not like to give my authority without his permission, but I think no authority here could be higher or more reliable.

Mr. FLOOD. I do not believe there can be any higher authority than the Bulgarian minister. I believe his information about this matter to be as accurate as anybody's could be, and I submit his statement to the House for what the House may think it is worth.

The wisdom of a declaration of war by the United States at the present time against Bulgaria would be even more doubtful than would be the wisdom of a declaration of war by the United States against Turkey. The Bulgarian race has always been extremely friendly toward the United States. Robert College at Constantinople is often referred to by Bulgarians as "the cradle of Bulgarian liberty." The Bulgarian minister to the United States was for more than 30 years a professor at Robert College, and he has always been friendly toward the United States, and his good sense would make him friendly to the entente powers.

The Bulgarian interest in this war, as the interview of the minister indicates, is a purely local one. That nation is merely fighting out their old feud with the Serbians. The Bulgarians not only have no interest in the German plans for world conquests but, on the contrary, they are already beginning to appreciate the dangers of German domination. There are no Bulgarian troops on the western frontier, and Bulgaria has no submarines; there is, therefore, no danger of any direct conflict between the American and Bulgarian forces.

It is difficult, therefore, to see how a declaration of war by the United States against Bulgaria at the present moment would in any way, directly or indirectly, tend to assist in the bringing about of a victory for the United States and the entente or hasten the end of this terrible conflict.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FLOOD. Yes.

Mr. TILSON. What has the gentleman to say as to the danger of information going through diplomatic channels to our enemies from this country?

Mr. FLOOD. The Bulgarians can send no information abroad that does not go through our State Department. Everything that the Bulgarian Legation here sends to its country from anywhere in this country goes through the State Department, so there can be no danger from that source. There is no danger of our coming to armed conflict with Bulgaria and practically none with Turkey. These are the reasons why the Committee on Foreign Affairs thought that at this time there should not be any declaration of war against those two countries. I have undertaken to give those reasons in reply to my friend from Minnesota, so that when we take up to-morrow the declaration of war against Austria-Hungary—the strong, virile, and ruthless ally of Germany—we may get a unanimous vote in favor of that declaration. [Applause.]

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

FRIDAY, December 7, 1917.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we have come together to take counsel how best to give expression to our sense of the sacred obligations of this place and hour. We turn first to Thee, the Source of all wisdom and of all power. We pray for unity of counsel that we may stand face to face with the great issues of the present time. May our fellowship in the common interests of our country and of the world be a demonstration to all men of our possession of those spiritual forces that have never surrendered in the history of the world. Bring us together by a common need, by a common danger, most of all by a common devotion to the ideals of our national life. We ask for Christ's sake. Amen.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE PRESIDENT. At the conclusion of the last session of Congress the Chair asked an opinion from the Committee on Rules with reference to the duty of the Chair in laying down petitions and memorials. The Chair has not heard from the Committee on Rules, and the Chair is going to announce the opinion that, unless otherwise ordered by the Committee on Rules, petitions and memorials from citizens of the several States must be sent to the Senators representing those States for presentation to the Senate. The Chair is not going to pay further attention to letters and communications from individual citizens of the United States and will only hand down such petitions and memorials as are of a national character.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, as an individual Senator I want to congratulate and commend the Chair for the ruling which he has just announced.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair wishes to add a further word. He believes it is the right and privilege of a Senator from a State to determine whether petitions and memorials of citizens of his State are of sufficient importance to lay before the Senate. The presentation of petitions and memorials is in order.

Mr. STONE. If it is in order, I desire to submit a report from a committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is not yet in order.

Mr. GALLINGER presented a petition of 36 citizens of Milan and Dummer, in the State of New Hampshire, praying for national prohibition, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. NELSON presented resolutions adopted by the Commercial Club of Duluth, Minn., favoring the passage of the so-called Chamberlain universal military service bill, which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. LODGE presented a memorial of the Negro Civic League, of Springfield, Mass., remonstrating against the inhuman killing, lynching, and burning of colored citizens by the mob, which was referred to the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment.

Mr. FLETCHER presented a petition of the Zellwood Equal Franchise League, of Zellwood, Fla., and a petition of sundry citizens of Orange County, Fla., praying for the submission of a Federal suffrage amendment to the legislatures of the several States, which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of Plant City Local Lodge, No. 18, Brotherhood of Maintenance of Way Employees, of Plant City, Fla., praying for the enactment of legislation providing for an eight-hour law for the government of maintenance-of-way employees of the railroad systems of the United States, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented a petition of members of the staff and nurses of the Kane Summit Hospital, of Kane, Pa., praying for national prohibition, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of the congregation of the Presbyterian Church of Montour, Pa., praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit polygamy, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. PENROSE presented resolutions adopted by the Philadelphia Bourse, of Philadelphia, Pa., favoring legislation to prevent cessation of work by employees of public service corporations engaged in interstate commerce, which were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the Philadelphia Bourse, of Philadelphia, Pa., favoring the adoption of an amendment to the revenue act of 1917, with respect to war excess-profits tax upon incomes derived from professions and occupations, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I present a memorial, which I ask to have read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the reading of the memorial?

Mr. SMOOT. What is the memorial?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is a memorial from the South Dakota Woman's Christian Temperance Union.

Mr. SMOOT. I have no objection to having it printed in the RECORD. Why should we take the time of the Senate now to read it? Nobody will listen to the reading. Therefore I will object.

Mr. PENROSE. We have a very important resolution coming up. I have on my desk upstairs several hundred similar communications, but I shall not trespass on the time of the Senate to have those read, as I have too much respect for this body and too much consideration for the labors of the body.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Then, the Senator from Pennsylvania objects to the reading of the memorial?

Mr. PENROSE. I do.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Shall the memorial be read? [Putting the question.] The noes have it, and it will not be read.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I ask that the memorial be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I understand that the vote just taken does not exclude the printing of it in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. No; it excludes the reading of it. It goes in the RECORD without objection.

The memorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SOUTH DAKOTA WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION,
Mitchell, S. Dak., November 21, 1917.

Senator E. S. JOHNSON,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: The following is a copy of the resolution passed at the South Dakota W. C. T. U. State convention at Yankton, S. Dak., October 20, 1917, which we request be read into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD:

"Resolved, That the twenty-ninth State convention of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union in convention assembled call upon President Wilson and the Democratic administration to pass the Susan B. Anthony amendment in the coming Congress as a war measure at this critical time when the Government is calling upon women everywhere to assist in bearing the burdens of war.

"Resolved, That this resolution be sent to the President; the Vice President; Senator THOMAS MARTIN, majority leader of the Senate; Senator JACOB GALLINGER, minority leader; Senator A. A. JONES, chairman of the Senate Woman Suffrage Committee; Speaker CHAMP CLARK; Hon. CLAUDE KITCHIN, majority leader of the House; Representative JAMES MANN, minority leader; Representative E. Y. WEBB, chairman of the House Committee on the Judiciary; and to our Senators and Representatives."

MARY H. ERSKINE,
Recording Secretary.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I present a petition signed by the president of the University of Michigan at Ann Arbor and other prominent men connected with that university, in favor of the Edmonds bill, so called, to increase the efficiency of the Medical Corps of the Army. I ask that the petition be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

There being no objection, the petition was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

UNIVERSITY OF MICHIGAN,
Ann Arbor, November 28, 1917.

Hon. WILLIAM ALDEN SMITH,
Grand Rapids, Mich.

DEAR SIR: We, the undersigned, wish to call your attention to the following reasons why we urge your support of the Edmonds bill, known as H. R. 5531, which will be brought up in the December session of Congress, and which is intended to increase the efficiency of the Medical Department of the United States Army, to provide a pharmaceutical corps in that department, and to improve the status and efficiency of the pharmacists in the Army.

First. It will increase the efficiency of the Medical Corps of the United States Army by supplying a place for specially trained men who can cooperate with physicians and surgeons.

Second. The enlistment of the professional services of properly qualified pharmaceutical chemists will enable physicians and surgeons to devote more of their time to the diagnosis and direction of the care of sick and wounded.

Third. It will give the profession of pharmacy a standing in the Medical Corps and will afford an opportunity for the promotion of pharmacists for special services which they may render, and place the profession on the same basis as that already established for dentistry and veterinary practice.

Fourth. Not only as a war measure, but in the development of the United States Army in times of peace, there must of necessity be developed a closer association between pharmacists and the medical profession.

HARRY B. HUTCHINS,
President University of Michigan
(And others).

Mr. BORAH. I present resolutions adopted by the Idaho Mining Association at a meeting held in Wallace, Idaho, favoring a revision of the war-profits provisions of the revenue law. I move that the resolutions be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

PROHIBITION IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. BECKHAM. Mr. President, I present a very brief article which appeared in the Evening Star of last Monday, December 3, showing the result of one month of prohibition in the city of Washington. As this is one of the largest cities in the country where prohibition has been imposed, I think it will be of interest to the Senate and to the country generally to see the figures and facts shown by this article. It is brief, and I ask that the Secretary may read it and that it be incorporated in the RECORD.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I ask for order. We can not hear anything that is being said.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senate will be in order. Is there objection to reading the article?

Mr. PENROSE. I did not hear what the Senator from Kentucky desires to have read, there was such confusion in the Chamber.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is an article from the Evening Star of Monday, December 3.

Mr. GALLINGER. On what subject, I will inquire?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Relative to prohibition in the District of Columbia.

Mr. PENROSE. Without regard to the subject of the article, I intend to object in the future to the reading of articles from newspapers.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania object to the reading of this article?

Mr. PENROSE. I do.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the article be read?

On a division the Senate decided the question in the negative.

Mr. BECKHAM. I ask that the article be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

FIGURES GIVE RESULTS OF DRY LAW IN DISTRICT—ONE EFFECT, IT IS STATED, IS DEPLETION OF LABOR AT THE WORKHOUSE.

One month's record of prohibition in the District of Columbia, as shown by police records, has reduced drunkenness by more than 76 per cent.

Compared with 838 arrests for drunkenness in November, 1916, the police during the month just closed made but 199 arrests for this cause, Commissioner Brownlow announced to-day. This is a reduction of 639 cases, or a percentage reduction of 76 plus.

During November, 1916, the highest number of arrests in any week for which "old King Booze" was responsible was 218. The highest number for any week of last month was 61.

As a result of the big falling off in liquor cases the population in the District workhouse at Occoquan has taken a tremendous slump. That this institution shortly may be embarrassed by a lack of prison labor for continuing its comprehensive development scheme is now a probability.

Commissioner Brownlow stated that police reports show that conditions have improved generally throughout the city since the dry law went into effect.

QUARTERS FOR VOCATIONAL BOARD.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. From the Committee on Education and Labor I report back favorably without amendment the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 110) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the promotion of vocational education," approved February 23, 1917.

I wish to state, Mr. President, that the board was organized in August last. It was utterly impossible at that time for any of the departments to furnish them with quarters. The joint resolution simply enlarges their authority for the use of money already appropriated to them for the payment of rental for rooms in which they are to do their work. It is very important that the joint resolution should be passed at once, and I ask unanimous consent for its consideration.

Mr. SMOOT. At the last session of Congress this question came before the Committee on Appropriations in the shape of an amendment, and the information the committee received at that time was such that the committee did not think that it ought to be placed on the appropriation bill, and therefore it was not favorably acted upon by the committee.

I wish to say to the Senator from Georgia that the office building we are now erecting, the one on Sixth and Pennsylvania Avenue, on the site of the old railroad station, is going to relieve many of the offices now occupied to such an extent that I have no doubt the Vocational Board will have ample space in the building in which they originally wanted to go. It will be but a short time before that building will be completed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair can not hear what is going on. The Senate will be in order.

Mr. SMOOT. The joint resolution reported by the Senator virtually authorizes hereafter that a part of the appropriation for the Vocational Board shall be expended for the renting of rooms. I think they can get along until the building I referred to is finished, and I do not believe that we ought to authorize the expenditure of a part of the appropriation for the purpose of renting rooms as provided for in the joint resolution.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I wish to say to the Senator that they could not get space anywhere and were forced to rent a floor, for which the members of the board assumed personal responsibility, or else they could not have done their work.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to ask the Senator if the joint resolution is limited to the appropriation that was made last year?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I am perfectly willing to limit it to six months.

Mr. SMOOT. If the joint resolution is to be passed, I shall certainly insist upon a limit to six months.

Mr. GALLINGER. I notice the junior Senator from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH] in his seat. I wonder why he does not inquire why the board does not occupy the Maltby Building, so called. I passed the building yesterday and I think it is entirely empty. I had offices in that building once and they were most delightful. I was sorry when I was transferred to the sub-basement of the Capitol. I can not understand why when the Government owns buildings that are vacant they are not occupied, and that is a case in point.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Who controls the Maltby Building?

Mr. GALLINGER. The Government owns it.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I know; but who controls it?

Mr. GALLINGER. I suppose the Government controls it.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. What officer of the Government?

Mr. GALLINGER. I think the Senate perhaps has control of it.

Mr. OVERMAN. I will say to the Senator that it is under Mr. Woods, the Superintendent of the Capitol Building and Grounds.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. But Mr. Woods has not the authority to turn it over to the Vocational Board.

Mr. OVERMAN. He is the custodian of it.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let us give him authority. It was known as the Senate Annex, and I suppose it is still known as the Senate Annex. Certainly the Senate could give authority for the use of the building. I will ask the Senator if he has any knowledge as to what rooms could be obtained and what the rental at the present time would be. I understand that rentals in this city at the present time are simply prohibitive, almost.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. They are now using a floor in a building near the Interior Department Building for which they are paying about $300 a month rent. I have a long statement here from the board in which they say they were everywhere trying to get quarters and they were turned down and they could not get space, and there was most important work for the board to do not only due to appropriations in the States but due to special calls for vocational instruction growing out of the war. I know they are doing a splendid work. The board simply rented their present quarters on their own responsibility. They had no authority to pay for them, but they could not do their work without renting quarters, and they did so at a cost of about $300 a month.

Mr. GALLINGER. That an opportunity may be had to look into the matter and especially to take a survey of the Maltby Building, I object to the present consideration of the joint resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be placed on the Calendar.

EXTENSION OF CLAYTON ACT.

Mr. OVERMAN. I report back with an amendment from the Committee on the Judiciary unanimously the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 106) extending until January 1, 1919, the effective date of section 10 of the act entitled "An act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes," approved October 15, 1914, and I ask for its present consideration. I wish to say that a similar joint resolution passed Congress at the last session extending the jurisdiction of section 10 of the Clayton Act for one year. It is more important now to give another extension on account of the railroad situation than it was a year ago. I ask for the present consideration of the joint resolution. I do not think there will be any objection, as a similar joint resolution was passed extending the act for one year. This only provides for the extension for another 12 months.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The amendment was, to add at the end of the joint resolution a colon and the following:

Provided, That said section shall become effective on January 8, 1918, as to any corporation hereafter organized.

So as to make the joint resolution read:

Resolved, etc., That the effective date on and after which the provisions of section 10 of the act entitled "An act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes," approved October 15, 1914, shall become and be effective is hereby deferred and extended to January 1, 1919: Provided, That said section shall become effective on January 8, 1918, as to any corporation hereafter organized.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I simply want to make a statement for the purpose of placing in the RECORD my position regarding this measure. The amendment offered, which has been accepted, to the joint resolution is an amendment I offered in the committee. I am not sure that it will reach the point aimed at; it was hastily prepared; but I think it will have the effect of permitting a bill heretofore passed by Congress at least to become operative as to corporations hereafter organized or as to future transactions between corporations already organized.

With the amendment as adopted, I shall not oppose the passage of the joint resolution further than to say that, in my judgment, this legislation should not be taken up at the present time. In my opinion the laws heretofore passed, and the operation of which it is now sought to postpone, were wise laws, and there is no good or sufficient reason for further postponing their operation. In my humble judgment this legislation ought not to be entered upon at all. It should be in connection with that contemplated legislation which proposes to make some radical changes in the control of railroad properties. I simply want to make this protest of record, and I have no objection to the taking of an immediate vote.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WAR AGAINST AUSTRIA-HUNGARY (S. REPT. NO. 178).

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, the Committee on Foreign Relations having had under consideration the address delivered by the President of the United States to Congress on December 4, instant, and particularly that part of the President's address respecting the relations existing between the Government of the United States and the Imperial and Royal Austro-Hungarian Government, have adopted a joint resolution, which I am directed by that committee to report to the Senate, with the recommendation that it shall be agreed to. I now send the joint resolution to the desk and ask that it may be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Missouri reports from the Committee on Foreign Relations a joint resolution, which the Secretary will read.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 111) declaring that a state of war exists between the Imperial and Royal Austro-Hungarian Government and the Government and the people of the United States, and making provision to prosecute the same, was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Whereas the Imperial and Royal Austro-Hungarian Government has committed repeated acts of war against the Government and the people of the United States of America: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That a state of war is hereby declared to exist between the United States of America and the Imperial and Royal Austro-Hungarian Government, and that the President be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to employ the entire naval and military forces of the United States and the resources of the Government to carry on war against the Imperial and Royal Austro-Hungarian Government, and to bring the conflict to a successful termination all the resources of the country are hereby pledged by the Congress of the United States.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I ask the Chair whether the morning business has been concluded?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It has not been.

Mr. STONE. Then, not desiring to interfere with the ordinary routine matters, I shall——

Mr. MARTIN. I suggest to the Senator from Missouri to ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the joint resolution. The passage of the joint resolution is more important than the introduction of any morning business.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Let us finish the routine morning business, Mr. President.

Mr. MARTIN. I suggest to the Senator from Missouri to ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution.

Mr. STONE. Well, Mr. President, with such divided counsel from Senators, some desiring to go on with morning business, I think I shall adopt the idea of giving notice that immediately upon the conclusion of the routine morning business I shall, if necessary, move to proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution just reported, unless unanimous consent to do that may be had.

I now wish to say, Mr. President, that if anything comes up between the presentation of morning business which is likely to prolong that part of the work of the Senate, I may feel obligated to undertake to displace it by a motion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Are there further reports of committees? If not the introduction of bills and joint resolutions is in order.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I introduce a bill and ask that it be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

The bill (S. 3082) to prohibit the sale, manufacture, transportation, or importation of alcohol or alcoholic beverages during the term of the present war, except for certain purposes, and to provide for the commandeering of all distilled liquors for governmental purposes, was read twice by its title.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks the bill should go to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I will state, Mr. President, that the bill contemplates the prohibition of the manufacture of liquor from food, and inasmuch as the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry at the last session carefully considered that question, I have asked that the bill be referred to that committee; but I have no objection to having it referred to any other committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It has to do with importations, and that affects the revenue.

Mr. LODGE. It affects the revenue.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Finance.

AMERICAN LEGION OF HONOR.

Mr. OWEN. I introduce a joint resolution authorizing the creation of an American Legion of Honor, to authorize the President to grant decorations to be known as the cross of valor, and a decoration or a medal for meritorious service, and to permit officers, employees, and citizens of the United States to receive and wear war decorations tendered to them by any of the nations now engaged in war with the present Government of Germany.

Mr. President, the old rule of the United States forbidding officers of the United States to receive decorations was because they were almost universally given by autocracies, but there is no reason why the democracies of the world should not give decorations to their soldiers who render important services to the democracies. There is every sound reason why we should do special honor to those who merit it and to permit them to enjoy the right to wear the evidence of valor, patriotism, and high service.

I ask that the joint resolution be referred to the Committee on the Library.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 112) authorizing the creation of an American Legion of Honor, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the Library.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN subsequently said: I should like to ask to what committee the joint resolution introduced by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] was referred a moment ago?

The VICE PRESIDENT. To the Committee on the Library.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. The joint resolution should go to the Committee on Military Affairs, and I request that it be referred to that committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon move that the joint resolution be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I do.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Oregon.

The motion was agreed to.

IMPORTATION OF CHINESE FARMERS.

Mr. GALLINGER submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 160), which was read and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

Resolved, That the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry is hereby directed to make careful investigation into the advisability of recommending legislation that will permit the importation of Chinese farmers into the United States, under proper restrictions and regulations, during the continuance of the war.

EMPLOYMENT OF ADDITIONAL CLERK.

Mr. SHIELDS submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 161), which was read and referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Interoceanic Canals of the United States Senate be, and it is hereby, authorized to employ an additional clerk at the rate of $100 per month, to be paid out of the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate, from December 3, 1917, to the end of the present session of the Congress.

AMENDMENT OF THE RULES—CONFERENCE REPORTS.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, on last Tuesday I gave notice that I would move to amend the standing rules of the Senate by adding a paragraph to Rule XXVII. Since that time I have talked with the chairman of the Committee on Rules on the subject and he desires that the motion go to the committee. I therefore offer a resolution and ask that it be referred to the Committee on Rules.

The resolution (S. Res. 162) was read and referred to the Committee on Rules, as follows:

Resolved, That the Standing Rules of the Senate be, and they hereby are, amended as follows:

Amend Rule XXVII by adding the following paragraph:

"2. Conferees may not include in their report matters not committed to them by either House, and in case any new matter is included the same shall be subject to a point of order, and upon such point of order being made by any Senator, if sustained by the presiding officer of the Senate, such new matter shall be ruled out and eliminated from the report: Provided, That the elimination of such new matter upon a point of order shall in no way affect the remainder of the conference report."

WAR AGAINST AUSTRIA-HUNGARY.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Morning business is closed.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the joint resolution reported by me from the Committee on Foreign Relations this morning may now be considered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Missouri asks unanimous consent to proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution declaring that a state of war exists between the Government of the United States and the Imperial and Royal Austro-Hungarian Government. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none, and the joint resolution is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. STONE. Let the joint resolution be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the joint resolution.

The Secretary read the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 111) declaring that a state of war exists between the Imperial and Royal Austro-Hungarian Government and the Government and the people of the United States and making provisions to prosecute the same, the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Whereas the Imperial and Royal Austro-Hungarian Government has committed repeated acts of war against the Government and the people of the United States of America: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That a state of war is hereby declared to exist between the United States of America and the Imperial and Royal Austro-Hungarian Government; and that the President be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to employ the entire naval and military forces of the United States and the resources of the Government to carry on war against the Imperial and Royal Austro-Hungarian Government; and to bring the conflict to a successful termination all the resources of the country are hereby pledged by the Congress of the United States.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, the resolution I have submitted on behalf of the Committee on Foreign Relations speaks for itself.

The Government of the United States by formal declaration is at war with the Imperial German Government. There can be no doubt about that. The resolution which I have reported declares that a like state of war exists between the United States and the Imperial and Royal Austro-Hungarian Government.

In this great world struggle all men know of the intimate and apparently indissoluble relation existing between the Governments of Germany and Austria-Hungary. We have declared war against Germany; we are at war with Germany. This state of war between Germany and the United States has been formally declared. In this mighty struggle Germany and the United States are enemies; but what of Austria-Hungary? That Government and nation is the ally, the chief ally, of Germany in the war in which we are engaged.

The Government of the United States has not been quick to declare war against Austria-Hungary, but, on the contrary, this Government has waited patiently on the development of events. In the course of this development it has become palpable and clear that an actual state of war already exists between the United States and Austria-Hungary. There would seem to be no way to avoid that conclusion. In the progress of events it has become manifest that the United States is inevitably and in fact as much at war with Austria-Hungary as with Germany. In the circumstances it is impossible that amicable relations between the two countries should be continued.

In the progress of this stupendous conflict certain conditions have arisen, and there was no way by which any of these Governments could avoid them. The United States is at war with Germany and is lending its support in every way to those nations with which the United States is necessarily associated in the conduct of the war. On the other hand, the Government of Austria-Hungary is lending its aid and devoting all its energy to the support of the war in alliance with Germany and in antagonism to the United States. In the prosecution of the war German and Austro-Hungarian troops are coordinated and are cooperating. On the other hand, the United States is cooperating with the entente allies. We are sending troops and supplies to aid the entente allies, including vast sums to finance the entente allies; the Government of the United States is furnishing men, supplies, and money to all the entente-allied Governments; a supreme war council has been organized at Paris, on which body the Government of the United States is authoritatively represented and on which also Great Britain, France, and Italy are represented, to coordinate the allied forces of these Governments, with a view to concert and cooperation in the conduct of the war. This supreme war council has defined battle fronts in Europe, one of which has been defined to embrace France, Belgium, and Italy. This reach is laid out as one continuous battle front under one general command.

I am told that American troops are up to this date massed in France, but if they are operating on one long continuous battle front, which embraces France, Belgium, and Italy, I can not see that it could make any difference where American, British, French, or Italian troops might happen for the moment to be located. If all of them are cooperating in one general movement against a common enemy along a single, well-defined battle front, is the particular temporary location of one group or another group of any importance? These groups may be shifted to meet the exigencies of war.

The United States is supporting Italy, as well as England and France, and those countries in like manner are supporting the United States in the war this Government is waging against the Imperial German Government. At that point the United States is brought to confront Austria-Hungary, for Austria-Hungary is supporting Germany. Austria-Hungary by formal declaration supports the war policies and military movements of Germany. The two nations are in close contact and in open coalition in the conduct of the war. They cooperate in all respects. Austria-Hungary has done innumerable things in support of the German Government in the war between that Government and the United States.

In the circumstances, therefore, I say a state of peace between Austria-Hungary and the United States is practically as impossible as a state of peace between the Imperial German Government and the United States. The two things run parallel in a common level. Aside from acts of aggression and offense committed by the Austro-Hungarian Government against the United States, which in themselves the committee declares to be sufficient cause for war, it is manifestly impossible that the United States and Austria-Hungary should be at peace while Germany and the United States are at war. A state of actual war already exists between Austria-Hungary and the United States. It is better for us and for the world that this great fact should be formally recognized and acted upon affirmatively and authoritatively. The United States Government can not afford to play a fast and loose game with the nations of the world. National honor and national interest alike demand that this Government should assume an attitude of dignity, sincerity, and commanding firmness in its international relations.

Mr. President, this is all I care to say at present. On behalf of the committee, I move the adoption of the pending resolution.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, this resolution comes to the Senate with the unanimous recorded vote of the Committee on Foreign Relations. I trust that the Senate will pass it with like unanimity upon the record.

The committee has framed the resolution in the simplest possible form, following the model of the declaration of war against Germany. Owing to the fact that Austria-Hungary has already severed relations with this country, there are no preliminaries to be adjusted and there is no need of my adding anything to the excellent and complete statement of the chairman of the committee, which shows once for all the necessity and importance of this action.

But, Mr. President, many Senators—if I may judge from those who have spoken to me, I should say the majority of the Senate—have felt that Bulgaria and Turkey might well meet the same action that we are now taking with regard to Austria-Hungary. The President and the State Department feel, however, that action in regard to Turkey and Bulgaria should not be taken at this time. So far as I am concerned, therefore, no amendment looking to such a result will be proposed, and I hope no such amendment will be proposed at this moment by anyone.

In taking these grave steps of declarations of war it is essential that we should act with the most entire unity. There ought to be no division on such a question as that. Therefore I trust that no amendment will be pressed at this time looking to a declaration of war against the other allies of Germany; but I think it not unsuitable that I should state very briefly the reasons for the feeling which I for one entertain that we ought to include Turkey and Bulgaria in the declaration of war which we are about to make against Austria-Hungary.

The President said in his message:

> The same logic would lead also to a declaration of war against Turkey and Bulgaria. They also are the tools of Germany. But they are mere tools and do not yet stand in the direct path of our necessary action. We shall go wherever the necessities of this war carry us, but it seems to me that we should go only where immediate and practical considerations lead us and not heed any others.

It is not necessary, therefore, to argue that Bulgaria and Turkey stand on the same ground logically as Austria-Hungary. The President's objection to action is that there is no practical necessity for a declaration of war against them at this time. I think technically a case could be made in regard to Turkey, for, if I am correctly informed and if the dispatches in the newspapers are accurate, Turkish troops are now being employed on the Italian front, where we may be called upon to take part at any moment, and if we should be called upon to take part we should be in the strange position of having our soldiers or our aviators engaged in conflict with Turkish soldiers while we are at peace with Turkey.

But, Mr. President, admitting, on the question of the practical necessity, that there is none at this moment, the principal argument against action—and I think I have considered them all—the only one that appears to me to have any real weight is the danger to American life and property in Turkey. I hope that due warning will be given to those Americans in Turkey, because we certainly do not wish to have their names added to the long list of Turkish massacres. But, as a matter of fact, notice of the most efficient kind has really been given, for we have no diplomatic relations with Turkey at the present time and our consuls have been withdrawn. Those who have remained after such action by the Government, of course, do so at their own risk, for a declaration of war can not be decided on the question of the danger to which citizens of the country have voluntarily exposed themselves in the hostile country. The situation in Turkey, however, has this peculiar character—that the American citizens there are chiefly missionaries or men and women engaged in educational work. They have done great work in years past, and the fame of Robert's College is world-wide. This fact seems to me to be the only serious objection to the declaration of war.

I wish now very briefly to give the reasons why many of us entertain the belief that immediate action should be taken in regard to both Bulgaria and Turkey. I speak of Bulgaria first. We do not touch Bulgaria in the military sense at all. We have many Bulgarians in this country, and there is certainly no feeling of hostility to the Bulgarian people. The King of Bulgaria or the Czar of the Bulgars, if that is the more proper title, is probably the instrument that has been used to bring Bulgaria into alliance with Germany. He need not long detain us, but I may say in passing that I think it would be difficult to find in history a meaner or baser figure than the present sovereign of Bulgaria. He is said not even to have the quality which is usually attributed to petty tyrants, the one redeeming virtue of personal courage.

But, Mr. President, Bulgaria, as the President of the United States has said very justly and truly, is the mere tool of Germany. This "tool" of Germany, however, has a legation in this city at this moment. The officers of that legation if they are friendly to us and to the cause of the allies are traitors to their own country and to their own allies, and if they are true to their own Government and their own ally, Germany, then it is a legation representing Germany and her allies in the Capital of the United States. I would for one like to see this legation removed. The President, I repeat, said Bulgaria is the mere tool of Germany. I grant it; but the only way to deal with an obnoxious tool is either to break the tool or paralyze the arm that wields it.

It is a dream, in my judgment, to think that we can detach either Turkey or Bulgaria from the German alliance. It is as much of a dream as that which seems to have had some currency that we could detach Austria-Hungary. Nothing is gained by our maintaining a nominal peace with any of them.

This is my view in regard to Bulgaria. I come now to Turkey. We have, as I have already said, the possibility of meeting Turkish soldiers in the field. They are actually operating on the front. As the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE] has pointed out, that front is under the consideration of the international war council of the allies which has met at Paris and in which we are represented. The President most wisely has sent a commission to Paris to effect in that council a greater unity of military operations of France, England, and Italy.

They are doing, I have no question, a great and important work, and yet, Mr. President, it seems to me that the foundation of unity must be that all who are fighting Germany should have the same enemies and the same friends. Some of the representatives of the powers who are meeting in that council represent countries engaged in war with Turkey, Bulgaria, Austria-Hungary, and Germany, and we are there and at peace with two of those countries. It seems to me that this situation is a confused basis for unity.

But, Mr. President, my feeling about Turkey goes much further than the practical question. The Ottoman Turks have been in Europe since the fifteenth century. In the days of their success they were a scourge to Europe and Christendom. In the long centuries of their decay they have been the pest and the curse of Europe, the source of innumerable wars, the executioners in countless massacres. The Turks are brave soldiers and good fighting men, but there praise must stop. There is not one word to be said in defense of the Turks as governors or rulers. When they came into the region that is now called the Balkans they found there large and prosperous cities, built up during the early middle ages on the ruins of the Roman civilization. They found a fertile and cultivated country. The cities which they captured sank into deserted villages. Wherever they have trodden trade, industry, commerce, the arts, and civilization have withered away. They have preyed upon the jealousies and controversy of the other nations of Europe, and in this way have sustained themselves at Constantinople. They have been the cause of many wars. The massacres of which they have been guilty, which stretch back to the day of their arrival and which have never been worse than during the entire nineteenth century, almost surpass belief and imagination. In justice, however, it must be said that never have the massacres been so frightful as they have been since the Turks passed under German domination. At least half of the Armenian people have been slaughtered in cold blood, and the remnant is only preserved now because a large part of Armenia has fallen under Russian control and the other Armenians have taken refuge there.

Such a nation as this—such a Government, I should say, as this—is a curse to modern civilization. Like a pestilence it breathes forth contagion upon the innocent air. My earnest hope is that among the results of the war, which I firmly believe will be a complete victory for the cause of right and freedom, one of the great results I pray for will be the final extinction of the Turkish Empire in Europe. I fervently hope that the great city of the eastern Roman Empire may be so controlled that the Straits will be free to all the nations of the earth and no longer be used for corrupt bargains in order that the trade may be held up or allowed to pass at the will of tyrants who, under one name or another, rule over Turkey.

I hope and trust that we shall see the holy places which are sacred to all Christianity, as well as those which are sacred to the Jewish people, pass forever out of Turkish hands, and that we may no longer behold the mosque of Omar dominating the city of Jerusalem. I should be sorry indeed, as an American, as a lover of freedom, if when this war closed and the United States comes with commanding voice to the settlement of the terms of peace, we should appear at that great council of the nations as still the friend of Turkey.

Mr. President, these are some of the feelings which move me. I think they are feelings which move most of those who do me the honor to listen to me at this moment.

But, Mr. President, I close as I began. If we are to make war on Turkey and Bulgaria, and I believe that action is only deferred, we must do it with perfect unison. We must do nothing to embarrass the Executive in whose hands the conduct of our foreign relations is especially placed, and above all we must act with absolute unity when we take that great step which we are about to take—the great, just, and righteous step to-day of declaring war upon Austrio-Hungary—beginner of the war, ally and tool of Germany.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, the question presented by the joint resolution is a practical question and one of policy rather than of principle. When we were confronted with the issue of whether we should declare war against the German Empire the issue presented was one of honor and national integrity. Germany had grossly wronged us, and as a nation of power and respect we were forced, upon the highest principles, to assert our dignity and our honor by a declaration of war.

Even after the passage of the pending resolution and after the passage of subsequent resolutions which may come to declare war against Turkey and Bulgaria, the United States will be confronted practically by only one great antagonist, and that is Germany. These others are merely incidental. Germany is the head and front of the combination, and whether we declare war on Austria-Hungary or the other lesser powers allied with Germany is simply a question of policy.

Mr. President, my first view had been that the wisdom of declaring war on Austria-Hungary at this time was questionable. I looked upon Austria as an unwilling partner of Germany. I did not go so far as the President has gone; he called Austria the vassal of Germany, but I regarded her, as I do at this time, as an unwilling partner. It seemed to me that there might be an opportunity through diplomacy, if we did not actually declare war against Austria-Hungary, to divorce that Empire from Germany and get her out of the war by bringing about a peace between Italy and Austria. It seemed to me possible that if we declared war on Austria we would in a large measure be indorsing the extreme and unreasonable demand of Italy against Austria which keeps Austria in the war, and which demand includes depriving Austria of her Adriatic seaports and her access to the sea.

So I hesitated, Mr. President, until I heard the address of the President the other day, which to a large extent, if not completely, removed those objections. The President in his address to Congress used this very significant language, and it was language addressed not only to the Congress and the people of the United States, but language addressed to our allies or those with whom we are associated in this conflict, and to our enemies also. This language practically puts the United States upon such a basis that substantially all objection to declaring war against Austria is removed. Here is what the President said:

> When I said in January that the nations of the world were entitled not only to free pathways upon the sea but also to assured and unmolested access to those pathways I was thinking, and I am thinking now, not of the smaller and weaker nations alone, which need our countenance and support, but also of the great and powerful nations, and of our present enemies as well as our present associates in the war. I was thinking, and am thinking now, of Austria herself, among the rest, as well as of Serbia and of Poland.

In that language the President practically declares that the United States will not sustain and support a demand for the dismemberment of Austria or which will deprive her of her necessary seaports upon the Adriatic, because such a peace which concluded a war would not only be unjust but it would necessarily only be a temporary peace. We know that no great nation will submit long to be deprived of access to the highways of the world.

Then the President said in another portion of his address:

> We owe it, however, to ourselves to say that we do not wish in any way to impair or to rearrange the Austro-Hungarian Empire.

So, Mr. President, such language coming with authority from the President of the United States, accompanied, as it will be, by a declaration of war against Austria, is notice to Austria that in entering this war we do not enter it for the purpose of dismembering the Empire, we do not enter it for the purpose of assisting in depriving her of any of her Adriatic ports which are necessary to the life of the nation, but we enter it solely because she is at this time making war on us. It is notice to Austria that when the time comes to sit around the peace table the United States representatives will sit there insisting upon justice for Austria as well as for the other countries. The American representatives will take a position against the dismemberment of the Austrian Empire, which threat alone at this time probably keeps Austria in the war. It has been stated with considerable authority already that the present Austrian Emperor, unlike his predecessor, is solely anxious to preserve his own Empire, and when he can safely conclude a peace on those terms he will conclude a peace and divorce the Austrian Empire from Germany. The President's address is a judicious and perhaps an effective way of indicating to Austria that such an arrangement is possible.

Now, Mr. President, with the objections thus removed, I am for this declaration of war, and the committee has made a unanimous report for it. I believe we must bear in mind more than we have in the past that our sole antagonist of any moment is Germany, and that the German menace to-day is greater than on the day when we declared war against Germany. I think the American people have not yet aroused themselves to that fact. To-day the German flag flies in France, in Belgium, in Russia, in Roumania, in Serbia, and now at last in Italy. We have been misled a little in the past. We have been led to believe that Germany could be crumbled and crushed by the forces assembled against her. It is only recently that in England the censorship has been so released as to open the eyes of the English people to what is really transpiring. I hope the American people will come to such a realization more clearly than they have in the past. If so, they will see that the greatest danger confronting us is the destruction of shipping.

In a recent speech delivered by Lord Beresford in London he gave the actual figures of the sinking of British and neutral shipping since the war began. Those figures present a terrible prospect and one with which American genius must grapple.

Of all the war situations, to my mind, nothing is serious at the present time except the lack of shipping, the awful destruction of shipping, and the delay in constructing shipping. Lord Beresford said it was time the censorship was taken off. Let me give the figures that he presented a few weeks ago, about the 1st of October. He said that from August, 1914, when the war broke out, to January of this year the number of tons of shipping sunk was 4,000,000; that from January of this year to the end of September 6,000,000 more tons of the world's shipping had been sunk. He estimated that from the end of September to the 1st of January of next year 2,000,000 more tons would be sunk, which would make a total of 12,000,000 tons of shipping sunk since the opening of the war. He stated also that during this period of war the amount of shipping constructed was 5,500,000 tons, leaving a net loss to the shipping of the world up to the 1st of January of 6,500,000 tons.

That awful loss has come to a world already confronted with a shortage of shipping. When we reflect that the whole merchant marine of the United States at the present time worthy of transoceanic duty consist of 3,721,806 tons, we can see how awful the net loss of over 6,000,000 tons has been to the shipping of the world since this war opened.

We are building ships, but we are building them too slowly. The official figures which I have secured show that our construction of ships from the 1st of January until June in the United States was 503,922 tons, less than one-tenth of the net loss of shipping since the war began.

Mr. President, I say that we must bear in mind in all of these declarations that, whether we declare war against Bulgaria or against Turkey, the main thing is to remember that we have only one great antagonist, and it is a matter of policy how many other antagonists we take on. We have got Germany; that is the great menace of the war; and the German destruction of shipping at this time and the German success in the field are such that Americans should realize that at the present time the German menace is greater than it was on the day that we declared war.

Mr. President, I therefore repeat I am in favor of this declaration of war in view of the statement made by the President of the United States in his address, which may tend to convince Austria that she has nothing to fear in separating from Germany.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I am glad that the Committee on Foreign Relations has brought in this joint resolution promptly; I hope it will be adopted without a dissenting vote; but I think that the RECORD ought to contain something more of the reasons to justify our passing this declaration of war upon the Hapsburg Government of Austria-Hungary than appears in the report of the committee.

This great world war is a conflict between the forces who believe that right should prevail over brute force and those who believe that "might makes right." It is a conflict between those who believe the world ought to be dominated by military arbitrary power under the dynasty of the Hohenzollerns and those who believe that all nations ought to have the right to enjoy liberty, self-development, and territorial integrity.

Mr. President, I had occasion to point out on the 25th of April, 1916, the secret treaty of Verona (1822), which was adopted as an amendment to the treaty of the Holy Alliance (1815). The treaty of the Holy Alliance was the most blasphemous, the most hypocritical, the most infamous doctrine ever promulgated. It was signed by Alexander I, the head of the Romanoff family, on behalf of Russia; by Frederick William, the head of the Hohenzollerns, on behalf of Prussia; by Francis Joseph, the head of the Hapsburgs, on behalf of Austria. In that treaty these cunning and unscrupulous monarchs of the Holy Alliance made a high self-serving declaration of Christian principles—the principles of justice and brotherhood and mercy among men. They declared the doctrine that princes occupied a position of high trust from the hand of God himself, and that they owed it to the world to exercise the power placed in their hands for the betterment of the world, for the welfare, the safety, and the happiness of their subjects; but, Mr. President, the pretenses that they were guided by these principles were absolutely false. Their courts were then utterly corrupt; they did not administer justice. They took by taxation the labor of the people and wasted it in dissipation. They were opposed to the people themselves anywhere on earth exercising the peaceful right of self-government. Under the guidance of Austria, under the direction of Metternich, they made an amendment to the treaty of the Holy Alliance on the 22d of November, 1822, which I desire to place in the RECORD of the Congress in connection with the joint resolution brought in by the committee, and I ask permission to do so without reading it. It is a declaration of secret war by autocracy against innocent, unsuspecting democracy. It is the voice of ambition secretly plotting the death of liberty.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, permission to do so will be granted.

The matter referred to is as follows:

SECRET TREATY OF VERONA.

The undersigned, specially authorized to make some additions to the treaty of the Holy Alliance, after having exchanged their respective credentials, have agreed as follows:

ARTICLE 1. The high contracting powers being convinced that the system of representative government is equally as incompatible with the monarchial principles as the maxim of the sovereignty of the people with the divine right, engage mutually, in the most solemn manner, to use all their efforts to put an end to the system of representative government, in whatever country it may exist in Europe, and to prevent its being introduced in those countries where it is not yet known.

ART. 2. As it can not be doubted that the liberty of the press is the most powerful means used by the pretended supporters of the rights of nations to the detriment of those of princes, the high contracting parties promise reciprocally to adopt all proper measures to suppress it, not only in their own State, but also in the rest of Europe.

ART. 3. Convinced that the principles of religion contribute most powerfully to keep nations in the state of passive obedience which they owe to their princes, the high contracting parties declare it to be their intention to sustain in their respective States those measures which the clergy may adopt, with the aim of ameliorating their own interests, so intimately connected with the preservation of the authority of the princes; and the contracting powers join in offering their thanks to the Pope for what he has already done for them, and solicit his constant cooperation in their views of submitting the nations.

ART. 4. The situation of Spain and Portugal unite unhappily all the circumstances to which this treaty has particular reference. The high contracting parties, in confiding to France the care of putting an end to them, engaged to assist her in the manner which may the least compromit them with their own people and the people of France by means of a subsidy on the part of the two empires of 20,000,000 of francs every year from the date of the signature of this treaty to the end of the war.

ART. 5. In order to establish in the Peninsula the order of things which existed before the revolution of Cadiz, and to insure the entire execution of the articles of the present treaty, the high contracting parties give to each other the reciprocal assurance that as long as their views are not fulfilled, rejecting all other ideas of utility or other measure to be taken, they will address themselves with the shortest possible delay to all the authorities existing in their States and to all their agents in foreign countries, with the view to establish connections tending toward the accomplishment of the objects proposed by this treaty.

ART. 6. This treaty shall be renewed with such changes as new circumstances may give occasion for, either at a new congress or at the court of one of the contracting parties, as soon as the war with Spain shall be terminated.

ART. 7. The present treaty shall be ratified and the ratifications exchanged at Paris within the space of six months.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I wish particularly to emphasize these words signed by the high chancellors representing the Romanoffs, the Hohenzollerns, the Hapsburgs, and the Bourbons. They had placed Louis XVIII upon the French throne; they had demanded absolute monarchy everywhere in the world. They were opposed even to a limited monarchy anywhere in the world. They overthrew the limited monarchy in Spain, and they overthrew with Austrian troops the limited monarchy in Italy immediately after the secret treaty of Verona. I quote as follows from the secret treaty of Verona:

The undersigned, specially authorized to make some additions to the treaty of the Holy Alliance, after having exchanged their respective credentials, have agreed as follows:

ARTICLE 1. The high contracting powers being convinced that the system of representative government is equally as incompatible with the monarchial principles as the maxim of the sovereignty of the people with the divine right, engage mutually, in the most solemn manner, to use all their efforts to put an end to the system of representative governments, in whatever country it may exist in Europe, and to prevent its being introduced in those countries where it is not yet known.

ART. 2. As it can not be doubted that the liberty of the press is the most powerful means used by the pretended supporters of the rights of nations to the detriment of those of princes, the high contracting parties promise reciprocally to adopt all proper measures to suppress it, not only in their own States but also in the rest of Europe.

From that day, November 22, 1822, to this, December 7, 1917, they have suppressed the liberty of the press; from that day to this they have used the power of the press to mislead their own people, to falsify the records with regard to upright, peaceful intentions of the growing democracies of the world; and the German Empire has for the last 10 years been taking secret and most injurious steps against the peace and power of democracies throughout the whole world. We find them in Japan stirring up mischief and animosity against the people of the United States; we find them in the United States stirring up hostility against Japan; we find them in Mexico stirring up the Mexicans against the United States, and in the United States exciting hate for the Mexicans; we find them in Brazil stirring up animosities against the Argentine, and in the Argentine stirring up animosities against Brazil and against Uruguay, weakening the nations of the whole world, especially those that are democracies, with a view to finally carrying out successfully the military dynastic enterprise of conquering the world by armed military force and to overthrow representative government wherever it may be found upon the earth. The evidence of this conspiracy against the democracies of the world is now overwhelming, and it is the duty of the Congress of the United States to collate this evidence and to prepare an indictment against the Imperial German Government and against the Royal and Imperial Government of Austria, so that the record shall be made so plain and so overwhelming, and given such publicity, that the whole world may fully comprehend the complete justification of war against these century-old secret enemies of the United States; against these conspirators against the peace of the world; against these armed soldiers who are led by the Hohenzollerns, who made this war for territory and property and ambition against the industrious, thrifty people of other countries who love peace and liberty.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, I am going to vote for this resolution solely upon the ground that I hope as a matter of policy it may strengthen the arm of our Government in conducting the war, hasten the end of the bloody conflict, and bring victory to our flag. It is my purpose now, as it has been my acts since war was declared, to give the Government in every way conceivable that support which in my feeble way may contribute to the success of our Government.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and read the third time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the joint resolution pass?

Mr. STONE. On the passage of the joint resolution I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN (when Mr. MCNARY's name was called). I am in receipt of a telegram from my colleague [Mr. MCNARY], who is on his way to Washington, asking me, in case a vote was had upon this joint resolution, to announce that, if present, he would vote in favor of it.

Mr. JONES of Washington (when Mr. POINDEXTER's name was called). My colleague [Mr. POINDEXTER] is necessarily absent. I am certain that if he were present he would vote "yea" on the passage of this joint resolution.

Mr. SHAFROTH (when the name of Mr. THOMAS was called). I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. THOMAS] on account of illness, and to state that he is paired with the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER], but that if my colleague were present he would vote "yea."

Mr. TILLMAN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF]. I understand that he would vote "yea" if present. Therefore I feel at liberty to vote, and vote "yea."

Mr. HOLLIS (when Mr. WALSH's name was called). I desire to announce that the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] is absent because of illness. If he were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. SAULSBURY (when Mr. WOLCOTT's name was called). My colleague [Mr. WOLCOTT] is ill at his home in Delaware. He desires me to state that if he were present he would vote in favor of the joint resolution.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. McCUMBER (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS], but am informed that if present he would vote as I have voted. Therefore I will allow my vote to stand.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague, the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES] on account of illness. Were he present, he would vote "yea."

I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH]. I understand that were he present he would vote as I am about to vote. Therefore I feel at liberty to vote and vote "yea."

Mr. RANSDELL. I announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. BROUSSARD] on account of sickness. I am requested to state that if present he would vote "yea."

Mr. GERRY. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence, on account of public business, of the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK], the Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS], and the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES]. I am informed that if present each of the Senators named would vote "yea."

Mr. ASHURST. I desire to announce that the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS], the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER], the Senator from Kansas [Mr. THOMPSON], and the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] are necessarily absent from the Senate on official business, and that if present they would each vote "yea."

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to announce that the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN] is necessarily absent. If present, he would vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 74, as follows:

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution is unanimously passed.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President, if I may have the indulgence of the Senate for a moment or two, I should like to make an observation in respect to the resolution which has just passed which it had been my intention to make previously if I had had an opportunity to get the floor. As a matter of course, what I propose to say has nothing to do with the question of the wisdom or the expediency of making a declaration of war against Austria-Hungary, because that matter is now settled, and under no circumstances would I have entered into the field of the wisdom, necessity, or expediency of such declaration. As to its wisdom and necessity I entirely agree with the President in his advice to the Congress that the declaration be made, and as to whether or not it should have been extended at this time to Turkey and Bulgaria, I agree, as I understand my friend the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] also agrees, that he will accept, as I accept, the judgment of the President as to the present inexpediency of such action.

Mr. President, what I wanted to say has to do with one of the consequences of the declaration of war that has been brought to my attention by many communications from constituents. You all perhaps know, Mr. President, that in the State of Pennsylvania there are thousands and tens of thousands of people who are subjects of the Austro-Hungarian Empire. They are not, as a rule, or even in a large percentage, subjects of Austria in the sense that they come from that geographical subdivision of the empire known as Austria; but they come from the various subdivisions of that vast dual empire, and, as I say, they are found by the tens of thousands in the mines and in the mills of Pennsylvania. Indeed, Mr. President, the fact is that there are almost twice as many Austro-Hungarians in the State of Pennsylvania as of any other foreign element.

I have received, as I have stated, many communications, not questioning the wisdom of this declaration of war, if it is necessary, but inquiring as to its expediency, if it is not absolutely necessary. The question seems to be predicated upon some misapprehension or doubt as to what the status of the subjects of Austria-Hungary will be after a declaration of war, the common impression being that as they would ipso facto become alien enemies of the United States, no business transactions could be conducted with them, even to the extent of employing their services.

I have investigated this matter, Mr. President, to some extent, and I am seeking in this way not so much to instruct the Senate, but to reply to numerous inquiries. The result of my investigation is this, that while it is true that by the provisions of one of the statutes of the United States the mere declaration of war ipso facto makes every male subject over 14 years of age of a foreign power against which we have declared war, who is not fully naturalized, an alien enemy, yet by the provisions of that statute the President of the United States may fix, by regulation determined by him and proclaimed to the people, the terms and conditions upon which male alien enemies over 14 years of age may reside within the United States.

I think that, by the last section of the statute to which I refer, the President has the power to fix not only the conditions of residence but the conditions of employment in the United States. I regard that matter as practically settled by the precedent created by the President himself, because, concurrently with his approval of the declaration of war against Germany, the President issued a proclamation in which he distinctly stated, as to male German alien enemies over 14 years of age, that they shall be undisturbed in the peaceful pursuit of their lives and occupations, and be accorded the consideration due to all peaceful and law-abiding persons, except so far as restrictions may be necessary for their own protection and for the safety of the United States. The President goes further and undertakes to advise and enjoin an attitude of mind by the people of the United States toward these persons, and he enjoins all citizens of the United States to preserve the peace and treat such aliens with all such friendliness as may be compatible with loyalty and allegiance to the United States.

While I am not informed, Mr. President, I assume that as a matter of course, concurrently with the approval of this declaration of war, a similar proclamation will be issued by the President as it should be issued for even stronger reasons than in the case of Germany, because I think it is proper here and now, in concluding what I have to say, to call attention to the fact that hundreds, aye, thousands, of these unnaturalized Austro-Hungarians in the State of Pennsylvania have joined the American arms. Hundreds of them who were drafted did not take advantage of their alienship in order to escape the draft, and, as was called to our attention yesterday by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] in the Committee on Foreign Relations, the casualty lists show the names of many of them among the dead and wounded. As I said a moment ago, thousands of Austro-Hungarians who are unnaturalized are now bearing American arms, and there is no reason to conclude that a declaration of war will affect their attitude toward those countries from which they came that were already as a fact at war with us when these aliens espoused the cause of liberty.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I am very glad the Senator has made the statement he has. It is extremely valuable and very important. Before the Senator takes his seat, however, I wish to ask him if it is not true that the large majority, certainly, of these Austro-Hungarian subjects are of the Slavic Provinces?

Mr. KNOX. Yes; that is correct.

Mr. LODGE. Hostile to Germany and hostile, as a rule, to the central powers?

Mr. KNOX. That is as I understand, Mr. President; and that is the thought I designed to convey when I referred to the fact that most of those who are in Pennsylvania and in the other States are not from Austria, but come from those Provinces which, by the exigencies of European politics, happen to fall under the sovereignty of the dual empire.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I am very glad the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX] has sharply called attention to the fact that there are now serving in the armies of the United States a large number of men who, technically, are subjects of the Austro-Hungarian Government.

There are in Austria, or under the combined Austro-Hungarian Government, subject nations or peoples. To a large extent, they are the natural enemies of the Austro-Hungarian Government. I spent a part of my early life in a community where there were a large number of Bohemian immigrants. I think I can say that to a man they hated every form of monarchical government more thoroughly than did their American neighbors.

There are large bodies of the Bohemian people in the United States; there are Croatians, Slavonians, and, without undertaking to name them, some 16 or 17 different nationalities living in my own State. These people are nearly all, in my judgment, loyal to our Government, and their sons are serving loyally in our Army.

It seems to me—and this is the thought I rose to suggest—that the Foreign Relations Committee ought to give consideration at once to the enactment of some statute which would make it possible for these soldiers who are fighting America's battles to become American citizens, even under the present circumstances; and I suggest that to the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania—who is a member of the Foreign Relations Committee, as I understand—for his consideration.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I have never dodged any responsibility as a Senator, or absented myself from the floor of the Senate when any important measure was to be voted upon. As I sat in my seat here listening to the discussion upon the resolution declaring war against Austria-Hungary this morning I conceived that an amendment ought to be offered for the consideration of the Senate. I had understood that several Senators were to speak upon the joint resolution, members of the Committee on Foreign Relations, among others the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX], the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], and some other Senators.

I left the floor intending to return as soon as I could go to my office in the Senate Office Building and draft the amendment which I purposed to offer. I think that the signal bell for the roll call upon the passage of the joint resolution must have sounded while I was between the Capitol and the Senate Office Building, as I did not hear it and had no notice that the debate had ended abruptly and a roll call had been ordered.

While engaged in preparing the amendment I received a telephone message from my secretary advising me that the vote had been taken upon the resolution. Had I been present I should have offered the following amendment to the joint resolution:

Provided, That the United States asserts its determination not to be bound by, or become a party to, the enforcement of any agreement or agreements heretofore entered into between the allied powers to deprive the Imperial and Royal Government of Austria-Hungary of title to or control of any territory which was a part of the Austro-Hungarian Empire or possessions August 1, 1914.

Mr. President, with that added to the joint resolution as it was proposed and voted upon I would have supported it as a necessary war measure. Without it or some similar declaration of our purpose I should have voted against the resolution.

That is all I have to say upon the subject at this time.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, if there is nothing that any Senator feels that he desires especially to bring before the Senate now, I will say that I have been requested by some Senators to ask for a brief executive session. Accordingly, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, will the Senator indulge me for a moment?

Mr. STONE. I withhold the motion.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, it was understood that the so-called export bill would be called up at the close of the morning business. Is it the purpose of the Senator to go into executive session and then resume the legislative session?

Mr. STONE. Of course I have no objection to that. I accommodate myself to the wishes of the other Senators. I asked if there was any other subject to be brought up. Senators asked me to request this executive session. They said that there were some things on the calendar that they desired to have disposed of. Of course we can go into executive session now, dispose of them, and go back into legislative session, or we can go on with the legislative session at this time.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, it is immaterial to me which course is taken by the Senate, but the export bill was made the unfinished business on the closing day of the last session, and the other day I gave notice that I would call it up.

Mr. STONE. Then, if it is agreeable to the Senator, it will suit my personal convenience to go into executive session now.

Mr. POMERENE. Very well.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, before that motion is put I should like to ask the Senator from Missouri whether it is contemplated to hold a session of the Senate to-morrow or to adjourn over until Monday?

Mr. STONE. I can not answer as to that.

Mr. PENROSE. I did not know whether the majority leaders had determined that or not.

Mr. STONE. The Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN], I assume, will be here pretty soon. I have had no conference with him about that.

I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 10 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

PROMOTION OF EXPORT TRADE.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 2316) to promote export trade, and for other purposes.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ROBINSON in the chair). The Senator from Ohio suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Gerry	Nelson	Smith, S. C.
Beckham	Gronna	Newlands	Smoot
Brandegee	Hale	Norris	Sterling
Calder	Hardwick	Penrose	Stone
Chamberlain	Hitchcock	Pittman	Sutherland
Colt	Hollis	Pomerene	Swanson
Culberson	James	Reed	Townsend
Cummins	Johnson, S. Dak.	Robinson	Underwood
Curtis	Jones, Wash.	Saulsbury	Vardaman
Dillingham	Kellogg	Shafroth	Wadsworth
Fernald	Kirby	Sheppard	Weeks
Fletcher	Knox	Shields	Williams
France	McCumber	Simmons
Frelinghuysen	McKellar	Smith, Ariz.
Gallinger	Martin	Smith, Md.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-seven Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

Mr. POMERENE. There were several committee amendments which were reported by the committee, and they were all adopted September 20 at the last session. I have another amendment which I offer personally to section 1 of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 1, line 8, after the word "consumption," insert the words "or for reselling"; line 11 strike out the word "or," before the word "manufacture," and after the word "manufacture" insert the words "or selling for consumption or for resale," so that if amended the paragraph will read:

That the words "export trade" wherever used in this act mean solely trade or commerce in goods, wares, or merchandise exported, or in the course of being exported from the United States or any Territory thereof to any foreign nation; but the words "export trade" shall not be deemed to include the production, manufacture, or selling for consumption or for resale within the United States or any Territory thereof of such goods, wares, or merchandise, or any act in the course of such production, manufacture, or selling for consumption or for resale.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. POMERENE. I have no further amendment to offer.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is as in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment. If there be no further amendment the bill will be reported to the Senate.

Mr. CUMMINS. I offer the following amendment, or series of amendments, to the bill and ask that they be read.

Mr. POMERENE. May I ask whether the amendments have been printed?

Mr. CUMMINS. They have not been printed.

Mr. REED. It is a series of amendments, and I am sure they are important. They are important because I know the Senator from Iowa has given this bill considerable study. I think they ought to be printed for the information of the Senate before we proceed to the final disposition of the bill, and indeed before we proceed to a discussion of the amendments. I think the amendments should be printed and the bill should go over until to-morrow morning, when we can take it up and proceed with it to a final disposition.

Mr. CUMMINS. As a reason for not proposing the amendments until this moment I will suggest that at the last session of Congress I prepared a substitute for the bill. It was rather carefully considered in the committee and covered the whole subject. I came to the conclusion, however, in view of the difficulty of challenging either public attention to what is here proposed or the attention of the Senate—it will be observed how much interest Senators have apparently in the question—I would simplify the matter and propose a series of amendments that would present a single point. That I have done, and I have just sent the amendments to the desk. I say this because otherwise it might be thought I was somewhat negligent in not proposing the amendments before this time. It is true that the amendments I have now proposed change radically the character of the bill. They exemplify the modification in the antitrust law which I am willing to see made, and I am not willing to go further.

If Senators have any great concern about the subject, I think the suggestion made by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] is a very wise one. I may say in passing that the bill as reported by the committee, ignoring the delicacies of phraseology, substantially repeals the antitrust law and section 7 of the Clayton Act so far as foreign trade is concerned. As I have more than once suggested to the committee, it would be much simpler if we would strike out of the antitrust law the phrase "with foreign nations," leaving it in its application solely to trade or commerce among the States.

My amendment is intended to limit the modification to the privilege which I believe the people of this country have now under the antitrust law, but there seems to be some doubt about it, of establishing in a foreign market or a foreign country a common selling agency. I am willing to meet the supposed exigencies to that extent, but I am not willing to go further.

Mr. REED. Let me ask the Senator when he speaks of foreign selling agencies if he does not propose also to include some provision which will make the foreign selling agency open to the people of the United States, so that the market can not be cornered by some one foreign selling agency?

Mr. CUMMINS. I have assumed that the foreign market is open to every citizen of the United States. I have not incorporated in my amendment a provision that would require any selling agency to admit every person to its membership who desired to enter it. It may be a wise provision. I do not say anything about that at this time. At any rate——

Mr. REED. Let me call the attention of the Senator from Iowa to this fact. It is proposed by the bill to give the right to create combinations in restraint of trade. The excuse offered is that such combinations will be possessed of such power and potentiality that they will be able to wrest the foreign markets from great foreign combinations.

That necessarily means the creation of institutions great enough, powerful enough, potential enough to control the price of American products sent abroad. That can only be done by so controlling our export trade that the foreigner can not successfully purchase from anyone save the combination. If that transpires it follows that the ordinary American citizen who is not in the combination will be shut out of the European markets—he must be shut out or the combination fails; or to state it differently, you can not shut Europe out of this market and compel Europe to buy from an American combination unless you shut the American citizen out of the European market or compel him to sell through that combination.

Mr. CUMMINS. That may be the effect of the bill which has been reported by the committee. That would not be the effect of the amendment I have offered.

I do not desire at this moment to present fully the consideration which has led me to the conclusion I hold. I have said so much for the purpose only of enabling the Senate to reach a satisfactory opinion upon the suggestion made by the Senator from Missouri; that is, whether further consideration of the bill be postponed until the amendments I have sent to the desk shall be printed.

Mr. POMERENE. I suggest that the amendments be read. I have not heard them, and I have not been able thus far to follow the discussion of them, though I think I understand in a general way the basic idea the Senator from Iowa has in mind.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the amendments sent to the desk by the Senator from Iowa.

The Secretary read as follows:

Amendments intended to be proposed by Mr. CUMMINS to the bill (H. R. 2316) to promote export trade, and for other purposes, viz:

Strike out sections 1, 2, and 3, and substitute the following therefor as section 1:

"It shall be unlawful for two or more persons, partnerships, or corporations engaged in competitive business or otherwise to establish and conduct in any foreign country a common selling agency or agencies for the disposition of goods, wares, and merchandise exported by any such person, partnership, or corporation to such foreign country and by agreement or arrangement to thereby lessen or eliminate competition, as between themselves, in the markets of such foreign countries: Provided, however, That no unfair methods of competition shall be practiced by any such agency or through any such agreement or arrangement against any person, partnership, or corporation, not a party thereto, engaged or proposing to engage in exporting goods, wares, and merchandise from the United States to any such foreign country."

Strike out of line 15, page 3, the numeral "4" and insert the numeral "2."

Strike out section 5 and in lieu thereof insert as section 3 the following:

"SEC. 3. That before establishing any such selling agency provided for in section 1 of this act the persons, partnerships, or corporations proposing to establish and conduct the same shall file with the Federal Trade Commission a copy, verified under oath, of all the agreements, arrangements, or other instruments which define the terms, purpose, scope, and conduct of such agency, and it shall set forth its location, with the names and addresses of all the persons, firms, or corporations which enter into it. Upon demand there shall also be furnished to the commission such further information as the commission may require concerning its organization, business, conduct, practices, management, and relation to other associations, corporations, partnerships, and individuals. A failure to comply with the foregoing provisions shall deprive the persons, partnerships, or corporations entering into the agency of all the benefits of this act, and each delinquent shall also forfeit to the United States the sum of $100 for each and every day of the continuance of such failure, which forfeiture shall be payable into the Treasury of the United States and recoverable in a civil suit in the name of the United States in any district court of the United States having jurisdiction of any such person, partnership, or corporation. It shall be the duty of the various district attorneys, under the direction of the Attorney General of the United States, to prosecute for the recovery of the forfeiture. The costs and expenses of such prosecution shall be paid out of the appropriation for the expenses of the courts of the United States.

"Whenever the Federal Trade Commission shall have reason to believe that any such common selling agency, or any member thereof, is violating any law of the United States it shall summon all the persons, partnerships, or corporations in such agency before it and thereafter conduct an investigation into the alleged violation of law. If, upon investigation, it shall be concluded that the law has been violated it may make such recommendations for the readjustment of the organization, business, conduct, practices, or management of the agency and its members as may be necessary in order to fully comply with the law. If there is a failure within such time as the commission may fix to comply with the recommendations so made, the commission shall refer its findings and recommendations to the Attorney General of the United States for such action thereon as he may deem proper.

"For the purpose of enforcing these provisions the Federal Trade Commission shall have all the powers, so far as applicable, given to it in 'An act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes.'"

Mr. BRADY. May I ask the Senator from Iowa whether he offers this as an amendment to the pending measure, or as a substitute?

Mr. CUMMINS. I have termed it an amendment or series of amendments. If the amendments are adopted, there will be rather a radical reformation of the bill.

Mr. BRADY. It seems to me it would make a very material change in the bill as it now appears.

Mr. CUMMINS. I have no hesitancy in admitting that the amendments I have proposed change the measure very materially.

Mr. BRADY. It seems to me the importance of the amendments is such that the Senate should have more time to give consideration to the matter than to attempt to take them up at this moment.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, just a word in the first instance with respect to the amendment that has been read. I propose to strike out the first three sections of the bill and to substitute for them a very short and simple provision, making it lawful—and it is my opinion that it is lawful now under the present law—for manufacturers or producers in the United States to establish in a foreign country a common selling agency or agent for the disposition of the things which they produce in the United States. I guard that privilege by the provision that the arrangement under which the common agency is established and the conduct of the agency itself shall not have a tendency to practice nor practice unfair methods of competition against any American producer who is not a party to the agency. This is intended to keep the channels of foreign trade open so that every American manufacturer or producer can freely, without let or hindrance, market his productions in foreign trade.

I make no change in the fourth section of the bill. The fourth section as it is now proposed simply enlarges in a way the jurisdiction of the Federal Trade Commission, so that unfair methods of competition practiced beyond the territorial limits of the United States become unlawful, and may be corrected and punished in the tribunal or before the tribunal which we have already established for that purpose.

The last section of the bill as proposed I have rewritten. It is purely administrative; and it has been rewritten to bring it into harmony with section 1. The section as it is in the bill proceeds, of course, and properly, upon the provisions of sections 1, 2, and 3. I have rewritten it so that it will be equally effective in carrying into execution section 1 of the bill, as I have proposed it in the amendment. With that very brief explanation of my amendment, I ask the attention of the Senate for a few moments upon the general subject.

The bill is a repeal of the antitrust law so far as foreign trade is concerned. I think that will hardly be disputed. The repeal is obscured a little by the peculiar and unnecessary phraseology of the section; but, after all, the proposal is to repeal the antitrust law so far as our commerce or trade with foreign nations is concerned.

As I remarked a few moments ago, it would be far better, in my judgment, and far more easily understood by the people of the country, if one who desired to repeal the antitrust law in that respect should present a bill that would strike out of section 1 of the act of 1890 the words "with foreign nations." You will all remember that the language of that section is the language of the Constitution, and the prohibition is against any combination or conspiracy of any kind in restraint of commerce or trade among the States or with foreign nations. Those who are fathering the bill are of the opinion, and I have no doubt they are honestly of the opinion, that our foreign trade should be entirely emancipated from the control of legislation of this character.

The bill not only repeals the antitrust law in the respect I have mentioned, but it repeals section 7 of the Clayton Act so far as foreign commerce is concerned. I assume that all of you know what section 7 of the Clayton Act is, but, in order to preserve a certain continuity in my observations, I remark that section 7 prohibits one corporation from owning the stock of another corporation engaged in a like business. It is intended to permit or secure competition in the United States between corporations which are engaged in substantially the same kind of business. It is intended to prevent not only the elimination of competition, but it is intended to prevent it in the particular and peculiar way which had become common some years ago in this country, namely, by an appearance of competition between two establishments, whereas in fact there was common ownership of the entire enterprise, and competition under such circumstances, as you all know, is absolutely impossible.

Keep in mind what I have said, that the bill is intended, so far as foreign trade is concerned, to repeal these statutes, one of which has been the law of the United States for 27 years, and the other, which grew out of the obvious defects in the administration of the former, has been in operation for about three years.

The substantial or substantive matter is found in the antitrust law, but section 7 of the Clayton Act was devised in order to prevent a failure in many instances of proof under the antitrust law; at least that was my conception and analysis of the real purpose and necessity of section 7 of the Clayton Act.

It seems to me that this is the most inopportune time which could possibly have been selected for an invasion of these statutes. I understand perfectly some of the disadvantages with which our exporters suffer in normal times, and I have been and am now in sympathy with every reasonable effort to relieve them of those disadvantages.

It has been said, and it has been established before the committee, and I have no disposition to question it, that prior to the war our exporters were met in foreign markets by combinations of foreign producers and manufacturers' combinations created under the laws of the several countries from which the competition came. The instance of these combinations which we were compelled to meet was nearly always Germany. Germany, as everybody knows, has pursued in her industrial system or affairs a course diametrically opposed to the course pursued in the United States. A great many people before the war were in the habit of lauding the industrial system of Germany. I was not one of them. I did not believe in the system before the war, and I do not believe in it now. While it had a temporary success, while in its beginning it enabled Germany to outstrip some of the other countries in the world in commerce among nations, it had in it the seeds of destruction; and if it had been permitted to continue through a fair period of experience, I believe it would have been found to be disastrous not only to the individuals who make up the empire of Germany but to the trade of Germany as a whole. I have no disposition now, and I never have had, to adopt the industrial system of that Government or of that country any more than I have had a disposition to adopt her military establishment. They are founded upon exactly the same principles; they are intended to carry out the very same object; and I, for one, do not care, while we are engaged in war, to overthrow the principle as applied to her military affairs, to adopt and encourage her system so far as it is applied to industrial affairs.

However that may be, whether you agree with me about that or not, the fact is that the exporters of the United States need this legislation now less than they have ever needed it before. The very competitor against which the claim was always made has been driven out of the markets of the world. We do not meet German competition in any country on earth, and there is no reason for permitting combinations and consolidations in this country to enable us to meet a competition that war has well-nigh extinguished.

We are all fully aware, too, that in the present situation the producers of the United States can find a market for everything which this country is capable of producing. Not only can they find a market for everything that they can produce, but they can find the highest compensation for these things, whether consumed in the United States or consumed in any other country in the world. I have thought, therefore, that wisdom and real concern for the welfare of the people of this country would indicate that we ought to defer legislation of this kind until the war is over. It seems to me also that we are legislating upon the subject under the greatest possible disadvantage and under great danger of not fairly comprehending what we are about to do.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, does not the Senator feel that after the war is over the American producer will have to meet foreign producers in combination just as he did before the war; and, if that be so, is it not necessary that we prepare the preliminary legislation so that our business men can get ready to meet these strong competitors in the foreign markets after the war?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not think so. In the first, place, I do not know how long the war will last; there seems to be some reason to believe that it will not be concluded within the next few months; but it is impossible for me to fear in a foreign market the immediate competition of peoples who, no matter what our condition may be, will have been destroyed financially and industrially by the same great catastrophe that is affecting us. It is purely imaginary to suggest that the very moment a treaty of peace is signed Germany can find her way into the markets of the world and overcome American producers; it is illusory; there is nothing in the suggestion; it can not be imagined that Germany can reconstruct herself more rapidly than the United States can readjust herself. I do not entertain any such pessimistic view.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HITCHCOCK in the chair). Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. May I suggest upon the point as to Germany being able to take up this trade when the war is over that practically all of the German commercial ships engaged in international commerce have been taken over by one ally or another as war has been declared by the various nations and that the German ships are now mostly in possession of other belligerents that are fighting Germany, and that we can not conceive that they will be returned by them to Germany.

Mr. CUMMINS. That is a very pertinent suggestion.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, may I suggest further——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. REED. May I suggest, further, that it is hardly conceivable that England, France, Italy, Serbia, Roumania, the South American countries, Australia, and Canada will all immediately turn their back upon the United States and her trade and commerce and rush into the arms of German merchants and German combinations?

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator from Missouri has mentioned that phase of the subject in a very mild way. I think that there will not only be an inclination on the part of these countries not to deal with Germany, but I think there will be a determination not to deal with Germany; and, so far as I am concerned, if this war progresses much further, and the cruel, the inhuman, the uncivilized warfare that has distinguished the German Government and the German Army hitherto shall be continued, I should like to be a citizen of a country that would agree never to deal with Germany under any circumstances or in any commodity.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. POMERENE. I hope that Senators in their enthusiasm over their opposition to this bill will not forget that Great Britain, France, Italy, and Russia will all be our competitors after the war is over, and we will have to meet them.

Mr. CUMMINS. I have no doubt of that; but they are not our competitors now, and there is, therefore, no necessity for legislation of this kind; and, moreover——

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

Mr. CUMMINS. I will yield in a moment. Moreover, I have some hope that when the nations of the world shall meet to agree upon terms of peace their consideration will be extended to the commerce among nations as well as to their military establishments, and that there will be some concert between the nations which shall decide upon the terms of peace with regard to the manner in which their commodities will be interchanged. I mention that not as a reason finally against the passage of a bill of this sort, but as a conclusive reason why it is not necessary to consider the subject now. I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. REED. I rose to remark, with the permission of the Senator from Iowa, that it can hardly be said that there is anything in the past record of England or of France of such a character as to make it necessary for us to legalize criminal and immoral and crooked combinations, for we have denounced every combination in restraint of trade and commerce as crooked, as immoral, and as illegal, not only under the statutes of the country but at the common law. I indulge the hope that whether, after the war is over, we arrive at a condition of such complete amity and concord in business affairs with our allies as the Senator from Iowa thinks, at least it will not be necessary to legalize combinations that will control the American market and at the same time control the foreign market, in order to meet the competition of those countries. I remark in conclusion that you can not control potentially the foreign market unless you control the market of the American producer.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I have still another reason for my belief that this is not the time to consider amendments to the antitrust law. We are all absorbed in the prosecution of the war; it is impossible to secure for a proposed modification of the economic laws that we have heretofore adopted that full and fair and comprehensive consideration which they would receive if we were dealing with the subject in time of peace. The truth is that the new word which has been applied to pretenses in war applies with equal force to pretenses in legislative operation. The "camouflage" is being employed every day to eliminate from our legislation salutary provisions that we have adopted after long study and deliberate debate, and I think that the ghost that has been summoned of foreign competition at the present time in the markets beyond our own is pure "camouflage." We ought to legislate upon this subject with minds alive to its importance and keen to observe and anticipate, if possible, the consequences of any change we may make. We can not do it at this time; we already have enacted legislation wise in itself and for necessary purposes that has unwittingly overturned principles which the American people hold dear and which they would not permit to be overthrown if they had a fair conception of what we were doing.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. VARDAMAN. May I ask the Senator if it is contended that this is a war measure? Is that the purpose of it?

Mr. CUMMINS. I will have to refer that question to the distinguished Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE].

Mr. VARDAMAN. The purpose of the inquiry is to ascertain whether or not it is for immediate protection or for protection to come after the war is over.

Mr. CUMMINS. So far as I am concerned, I can answer it in this way: That the proposed legislation was brought forward and was very earnestly urged long before the war began.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I thought so.

Mr. CUMMINS. And if it is in any respect connected with the war, I have not been able to discern the tie that binds the one to the other, although I remember, and I want to do the Senator from Ohio the full justice of saying, that more than once, when he has sought to engage the attention of the Senate upon the bill and sought to bring it forward, he has insisted that in some fashion or other it is a war measure.

I shall be very glad to hear from the Senator from Ohio for the purpose of answering the question of the Senator from Mississippi, if he desires to do it.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I did not catch the question of the Senator from Mississippi, and I only understand it as I have heard the statement made by the Senator from Iowa.

I do regard this as a war measure. We are trying to keep up our trade. I do not know that the situation now, so far as pure trade conditions is concerned, is as it was a year or two ago, because since then we have entered the war. I think there has been more harmony of action among ourselves and our allies; but before that time we were constantly being compelled to meet the British buyers, the French buyers, and the German buyers in combination, up until the time their commerce was cut off. It seems to me that the question for Senators to settle is this: Knowing the fact that our competitors in foreign countries are constantly combining in order to capture the markets of the world, are we so completely wedded to the so-called Sherman antitrust law that we are going to have our manufacturers and our producers suffer the disadvantage of being compelled to meet single handed their competitors who are in combination? That is the only question.

Mr. REED. Where?

Mr. POMERENE. Abroad.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. VARDAMAN. The Senator from Ohio, I apprehend, will not question the correctness of the proposition made by the Senator from Missouri a moment ago, that the power which this bill vests in dealing with foreign countries will necessarily affect our domestic trade.

Mr. POMERENE. Incidentally, of course, it will.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Does not the Senator think that it would be prudent, in view of the fact that there is certainly no foreign combination now against American commerce——

Mr. POMERENE. The Senator makes that statement as a fact. Let me ask him if that is a mere inference?

Mr. VARDAMAN. Well, I will suggest this to the Senator from Ohio and leave that to him to determine later: There is no combination now with which we are obliged to contend. As was suggested by the able Senator from Iowa a moment ago, it is quite likely that after the war is over this difficulty may be arranged by treaty regulation, and in that way we may preserve the integrity of the Sherman antitrust law here at home and at the same time accomplish what the Senator from Ohio would accomplish by the passage of this bill.

Mr. POMERENE. Perhaps I had better discuss this matter in my own time a little later; but I can not agree at all with the Senator's statement.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. Before the Senator takes his seat, the statement which he made with reference to the necessity of a repeal of this law, so far as foreign commerce is concerned, so well stated by the Senator, seems to me to lead to this conclusion: That if foreign combinations, monopolies, or trusts operating in the foreign markets are an advantage, are a good thing, the same rule must apply here at home. There is no reason why we should have a combination in foreign markets except that it gives an advantage to our people, and if a combination gives an advantage to them there it will give an advantage to them here, because in effect ultimately, as a necessary result, the foreign combination or the foreign market will have effect in our home market. You can not substantially affect foreign commerce without influencing domestic commerce. Then why should we not repeal the entire law?

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, if my good friend the Senator from Idaho does not distinguish between the duty that we owe to our own fellow citizens and the duty that we owe to foreigners, then his conclusion is correct. We are opposed to combinations here in our domestic trade, because among other reasons our belief is that they destroy the initiative of individuals and destroy our trade among ourselves.

Mr. BORAH. Well, Mr. President——

Mr. POMERENE. Just one moment, please. On the other hand, we have always accepted the theory that we were benefiting the American people when we extended our commerce to foreign countries and sold our surplus products in the foreign markets.

Our people here at the present time are obliged to go into the foreign markets and meet our foreign competitors in combination. Clearly they, being in combination, when seeking a given amount of trade, will have the advantage over our commercial men when they go into that market single handed. Now, if it be a benefit to our country to have foreign trade, then it does seem to me that we ought to permit our American manufacturers and our American merchants to go into the foreign field and meet the foreign competitor on a common plane. By so doing we will be able to secure our fair share of the foreign trade.

If the Senator is of the opinion that seeking foreign trade under these conditions is to be detrimental to our domestic trade, then I can understand his opposition to the bill, but I do not see it in that light. My notion is that we will not be injuring our people when we say to some of our people: "We want you to go to Germany or to Russia or to Japan; we want you to combine your material forces in such a way that you can meet their combinations there." I believe it will benefit our commerce, it will furnish an additional market for our surplus products, it will encourage our manufacturers to expand their capacity, it will put them in a position where they can exercise all their zeal and ingenuity to meet like combinations in foreign countries; and I believe that on the whole it will be a very great benefit to the manufacturers, the merchants, and the entire people of the United States.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I was seeking light, not announcing my position nor arguing; but the thought which suggested itself to me was this: The Senator seemed to be dealing with foreign commerce and domestic commerce as two separate and distinct entities, wholly divorced from each other, and as though you could deal with one without dealing with the other and affecting the other. Now, I do not think so.

Mr. POMERENE. Why, Mr. President, I realize that there is a certain relationship existing between the two. We can not sell a sack of flour or a barrel of pork abroad without its having an incidental effect upon conditions at home.

Mr. BORAH. That is what was in my mind; and not only that, but just the moment that you take the Sherman antitrust law off of foreign commerce you have to a tremendous extent affected domestic commerce, and you have injected into domestic commerce the virus, if such it be, which you are putting into foreign commerce, inevitably. So that in my judgment what this is going to lead to is the final repeal of the Sherman antitrust law. In considering the question which is now before the Senate, therefore, I should want to make up my mind whether or not I wanted to join the forces which are ultimately going to destroy the Sherman law.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I can not agree with the Senator's conclusion. In my judgment it is not going to destroy the Sherman antitrust law. It will deprive those who are now seeking to repeal the Sherman law of much of their argument against it.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, they do not need much more argument. We have already exempted the laboring and the agricultural producing classes of the country from the provisions of the Sherman antitrust law. We are on the verge of exempting the railroads, and we are now contemplating exempting foreign commerce. There would be left only a very small portion of the people of the United States to whom it technically applies. It is as clear to me as it can be that the Sherman antitrust law will have been so emasculated that it would be a mere form, without substance or effect, as far as the people here at home are concerned. I really think, therefore, that we must inevitably take into consideration the whole field. I think it wrong, and also unwise to have a drastic law like the Sherman law turned into class legislation pure and simple.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator from Iowa permit me to make a suggestion?

Mr. CUMMINS. Certainly.

Mr. REED. The Senator from Ohio has just stated that the relation of foreign and domestic commerce is so intimate that you can not sell even a sack of flour abroad without incidentally affecting the domestic business in flour. If that is true, how can you permit great combinations and trusts and conspiracies in restraint of trade to be created abroad for the purpose of handling American goods without affecting conditions in this country?

Mr. POMERENE. Why, Mr. President, I assume that if we secure a part of the foreign trade we are going to benefit our people. If the Senator's objection to these combinations for foreign trade is so great that he prefers to have the foreign combinations get the foreign trade rather than to have our own manufacturers get the foreign trade, then I can understand his position.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio further yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. REED. I beg the indulgence of the Senator from Iowa for a moment longer, and then I shall not interrupt him further.

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. REED. The trouble with the Senator from Ohio is that, much as he has studied this question, he has utterly failed to grasp the import of his own bill, in my judgment, and I say that with all respect.

The proposition is not at all whether this country shall be permitted to get a part of the foreign trade. At the present time the seas are open, with the exception of the difficulties incident to the war; the markets of Europe are open, and every American citizen has the right to cross the sea and to sell in those markets. This bill will give no new market to any American citizen. This bill proposes to permit great combinations to be created. The purpose of these combinations is to destroy the liberty of the American citizen to enter successfully the foreign market. This bill will concentrate the profits of the foreign business in the hands of a few great capitalists and combinations. It is immoral, as are all organizations and combinations in restraint of trade.

There are no geographical lines in morals, and if it is wrong to create a combination in restraint of trade in this country for the purpose of robbing the American citizen, it is wrong to create an organization here for the purpose of robbing the people who live across the red line of a map. But this immorality is accompanied by the difficulty that you can not be guilty of the immorality against the foreign buyer without at the same time robbing the American citizen who is not in the combination of his right to sell, because no combination can be great enough to control the prices Europeans must pay for its goods unless it is so powerful it can shut out other similar American goods, for otherwise such goods would enter the market and break the prices fixed by the combination.

I thank the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, if I may resume the discussion I had in my mind when interrupted by the very luminous and pertinent remarks that have intervened, I desire to remind the Senator from Ohio of the fact that whether we take a period of ten years, or five years, or three years the foreign trade of the United States has increased more rapidly than the foreign trade of any other country in the world. Notwithstanding the right of British citizens to combine, if they have that right—which I very much doubt—or the right of French citizens to combine, or Italian citizens, or German citizens, the American producer was able under the law which has been in force for 27 years to sell his product abroad in competition with his foreign rivals to such a degree that our foreign trade well-nigh eclipsed the foreign trade of the other countries with which we have been competing; and if we were able to do this before the war, when we consider the conditions that probably will exist at the close of the war, we will be able to do it more successfully when peace again comes than we were before.

I am saying all this simply to impress those who are here with my belief that we ought not to enter upon this legislation at this time.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield.

Mr. POMERENE. If the Senator's reasons are sound and his statements of fact correct with regard to our competing in the foreign markets, will the Senator point out why the same reasoning does not apply to his amendment that applies to this bill?

Mr. CUMMINS. I will point that out; but let it be thoroughly understood—and I hope the Senator from Ohio is not under any misapprehension about it—that I do not think the bill ought to pass at all. I do not think we ought to take it up for consideration; but if we are to have legislation upon the subject, then the amendment which I have proposed, which is in harmony with the antitrust law, which makes no change in the antitrust law, which simply removes a doubt which some very estimable people have expressed with regard to the interpretation of the antitrust law, and no more, is vastly preferable to the bill that has been reported by the committee and is now being urged by the Senator from Ohio. If the Senator from Ohio and those who are with him will withdraw this bill from the consideration of the Senate, you may be sure that I shall not press the amendment which I have offered. It is very much better than the bill; but even the amendment I have proposed is not necessary at this time.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I beg to assure the Senator from Iowa that I shall not withdraw this bill, and I shall urge it to a speedy conclusion if I can.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator from Ohio need hardly have assured me of his persistency in this regard, because I have discussed the matter with him so often and so unavailingly that I have no doubt whatever that he intends to secure a vote upon the bill if he can get it, and I have no doubt that he sincerely believes that it will better our industrial conditions if it becomes a law. Our difference is with regard to the conclusion.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Iowa a question?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. REED. There is a report filed in connection with this bill which, so far as I have been able to read it, does not give a single reason why the legislation should be enacted. Were there any hearings on the bill?

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, we have had hearings upon either this bill or one which preceded it, of the same character, for the last five years.

Mr. REED. Have the hearings been printed?

Mr. CUMMINS. I shall have to refer that question to the chairman of the committee. I think, though, the hearings have been printed.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President——

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, about five years ago there were hearings upon this very subject while the Interstate Commerce Committee was considering the general subject of trust legislation; and at intervals since that time the matter has been taken up, sometimes formally, sometimes informally. During this last January, I believe, there were other hearings on this bill, and extensive hearings in the House. A very able report on the subject was presented by Congressman WEBB. The Federal Trade Commission has had the matter up; and if my recollection serves me rightly now, there are two volumes of evidence on the subject, with a very comprehensive report by the Federal Trade Commission.

Mr. REED. Oh, Mr. President, if the Federal Trade Commission has had it under consideration, that is the end of all investigation. I am quite sure that the Congress ought to accept without hesitancy any conclusion coming from that eminent body.

Mr. POMERENE. No, Mr. President; they should always accept the conclusion of the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. REED. Well, Mr. President, if they did——

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I do not want the Senator from Missouri to be under any misapprehension with regard to this matter. I am a believer in the Federal Trade Commission, and he is not; and I do not want any reproach to be brought upon the Federal Trade Commission.

Mr. REED. That would be difficult.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Federal Trade Commission has done nothing except to report to the committee, so far as I know, at the committee's request; and the commission, as a whole or as a body, has not acted at all in any way. A former member of the Federal Trade Commission was deeply interested in this subject, and he presented his views to the Interstate Commerce Committee. It was entirely proper for him to do it, because he was asked for his views. The matter has been entirely in the hands of the legislative committee, and not in the hands of the Federal Trade Commission.

Mr. REED. I am glad to know that; and if the Senator will pardon me for the remark——

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. REED. No; not until I get through; then I will yield. I want to say to the Senator from Ohio that it is not necessary for him to take the opinion of the "Senator from Missouri." The "Senator from Missouri" has never asked him to do that; but the "Senator from Missouri" insists that when a bill of this kind is brought to the attention of the Congress and its passage is insisted upon, there ought to be some reasons given for it.

Here is a bill that is a radical departure from all that we have been doing for 20 years. A report is filed, bearing the Senator's name, which gives no substantial reason for this revolutionary legislation. I have sat in the Senate awaiting some enlightenment by the Senator from Ohio with reference to the bill. I am now interested in knowing who is back of this bill, what potential forces have been urging this legislation for five years. I understand, of course, that the President has recommended some such legislation as this; but I want to know how many trust magnates and trust attorneys and men of that kind have been forcing this legislation forward.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I can give the Senator from Missouri a partial answer to that question. So far as I remember, the first appearance before the Interstate Commerce Committee in behalf of legislation of this character was by a company—I mean, simply a body of men who had like interests—of lumber dealers or manufacturers from the Pacific coast who found difficulty, under the conditions that then existed, in marketing their product in foreign countries.

I do not remember that. I think they were very worthy gentlemen. I do not know them personally, but they seemed to me to be good citizens, and they presented their case in a very fair and reasonable way. Then came, later, the exporters of New York. I do not know whether they were organized in any formal association or not; but there is an association in New York—whether it is the New York Chamber of Commerce or some other body of that kind I do not know—which came before the committee and enlarged upon the subject, and presented, through their attorneys and through their representatives, a great many reasons which seemed to them imperative for legislation of this character. So it has gone on; and as I think the Senator from Ohio said, the testimony on the subject as a whole, both in the House and in the Senate, would probably fill two ordinary printed volumes. There is a great deal of learning extant upon it, but, after all, it meant just one thing, that as against the combination of foreign countries in a foreign market our exporters were at a disadvantage not only with regard to prices but especially with regard to the cost of doing business in a foreign country. I will give an illustration because I want to be absolutely fair about the matter. Here is a small exporter. His business is rather limited. He wants to do business in Rio de Janeiro or in the Argentine or in Africa or China. It is very expensive for him to maintain an establishment in the foreign country for the purpose of disposing of his goods as compared with the volume of the sales. He suffers great disadvantage in attempting to do business so far away from home under such large expense. It was said, and I can see the force of it, that if the manufacturers or the producers of any range of articles in this country desired to do business in a foreign country, and if they were permitted to employ a common agent who could transact the business for all of them in that country, they would not only be able to avoid the disadvantages of competition in that country among themselves but they would be able to very greatly reduce the cost of doing business.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

Mr. CUMMINS. In just a moment. Just as soon as that proposition was made to the committee, and it was made by an attorney who spoke for these exporters, I asked whether it was his opinion that an arrangement of that kind honestly made and honestly carried out would constitute a violation of the antitrust law, and he answered unhesitatingly that in his opinion it would not constitute a violation of the antitrust law. I have made that inquiry of every man who has appeared before the committee qualified to express an opinion upon a subject of that kind, and without dissent it has been agreed that the very thing, or at least the chief thing, which they wanted to do they could lawfully do at the present time and under the present law, and that the only reason for legislation of this sort, or the principal reason anyhow, was that capital was sensitive, that capital shrank from enterprises concerning which there could be any doubt whatsoever, and that there were persons—now, I have never been able to find that person, but that there were persons who believe that the arrangement which I have outlined was a violation of the antitrust law, and in order to satisfy those distrustful and skeptical and suspicious minds it was necessary that the subject be made perfectly clear. It is with that in view that I have offered my amendments. Now, mark, I do not propose to repeal any part of the antitrust law. I propose to make it legislatively and explicitly lawful to do a thing which in my judgment can be done now without any modification whatsoever. Does the Senator from Missouri desire to have me yield to him?

Mr. REED. The Senator has completely covered the very matter I was going to suggest. I may be permitted perhaps to say, by way of reenforcing the argument of the Senator, that the argument put forward on behalf of the exporters, that they need to sell through a combination, is the only argument I have heard advanced in favor of this bill. I am clearly of the opinion, as is the Senator, that it is no violation of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act for a number of men to consign their goods to the same factor or the same agent in a foreign country, so that there is a common selling agency, provided they do not go further and use the agency to effectuate a restraint of trade.

But if there is any doubt about that, the doubt can be reached by a statute to the effect that nothing in the antitrust laws shall be held to prohibit or forbid the right of American citizens to sell their goods through a common selling agency in a European market. But even then there ought to be added a clause that if that agency is created by a combination of companies and individuals it shall be open for other American citizens to avail themselves of. However, the reason advanced for this legislation, the only reason anybody has advanced, is that which the Senator stated these gentlemen have advanced, and it is perfectly plain that that can be met without striking down the trust laws that we have been building up for 20 years.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ROBINSON in the chair). Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. NEWLANDS. The Senator announced a few moments ago that he did not regard the creation of a selling agency in foreign lands by producers or merchants engaged in the United States in the same business as a violation of the Sherman antitrust law, and he states that he has not been able to find any lawyer who has held a contrary opinion. I ask the Senator whether he would regard the creation in the city of New York or other city of an agency by all the coal companies in Illinois or all the coal companies in Ohio for the sale of their coal as a violation of the Sherman antitrust law.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, the question is rather incomplete, probably, and I do not think I can answer it in just the form in which the Senator has proposed it, but I may answer it indirectly in this way: The statute prohibits restraint of trade, that is all, and there is no association which is unlawful unless it restrains trade. There are two kinds of restraints of trade. One is voluntary, the other involuntary. The voluntary restraint of trade is that restraint which results from agreement between persons or corporations which has a tendency to or which does destroy competition between them or which does fix prices as between them or which does something else which restrains trade. The involuntary restraint of trade is that restraint which the power of a combination imposes upon some one who is not a party to the combination.

In the case suggested by the Senator from Nevada it depends entirely on the terms and effect of the arrangement. I say that a common selling agency is not in and of itself a violation of the antitrust law, because I can not understand how the selection of a common agent in a foreign country for the disposition of goods manufactured in our own country would result in a restraint of foreign trade, and that is the criterion after all.

Mr. NEWLANDS. The Senator is aware that the coal producers of West Virginia and other States appeared some years ago before the Interstate Commerce Committee of the Senate and insisted that there were very many small producers who were subjected to great expense in marketing coal in the great cities, owing to the fact that each was compelled to employ a separate agency, and that they could not create a joint agency and thus diminish the cost of the general business. I think the Senator recalls that the view of the committee at that time and the view of the lawyers who appeared before us was that the creation of such an agency would have to be specially provided for by law in view of the provisions of the Sherman antitrust law.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not think that was ever my view, although I do not remember that I so expressed it; but the answer to all that lies in the fact that in 1901 the United States Steel Corporation, or rather 100 or more competitive manufacturers united in the United States Steel Corporation, thus selecting a common agency not only for the manufacture but the sale and distribution of practically 50 per cent of the steel commodities of the United States. The validity of that common agency has been passed on, as I understand it, and at the present time it has been held that it is not a violation of the antitrust law. Why? Because its practices are said to have been beyond criticism, and it has not imposed what I have described as involuntary restraint upon any competitors. Just so I feel with regard to the selection of a common selling agency in a foreign country.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President——

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. KELLOGG. I should like to suggest to the Senator from Iowa that the Supreme Court of the United States held in a case involving a common agency of 24 paper companies in the Northwest that where those companies created a common selling agency, the agent having the right to fix all prices for the sale of the product and to divide among the manufacturing companies all profits above a certain figure, it was a violation of the Sherman antitrust act, as held in a suit brought by Attorney General KNOX in his administration of that office. It was also held of a combination in West Virginia that substantially the same kind of a combination for a selling agency, created, the court said, for the purpose of controlling the selling price in this country was a violation of the Sherman Act.

I understand the Senator to say he does not believe that would be a violation as to foreign commerce, because the Sherman Act has no extra-territorial effect. In that regard I am inclined to think the Senator is right, although some lawyers disagree on the matter, and I believe when lawyers disagree the business men ought to have it made clear whether it is or is not illegal.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not intend to enter just now upon a discussion of either the paper case or the coal case. I may do so at a later time. Both cases well deserve an analysis. As I look at them they are both in entire harmony with the proposition that I have announced so far as this amendment of mine is concerned. I have proposed the amendment in order to remove the very doubt which the Senator from Minnesota has just said has found lodgment in a great many minds. If it were not for that doubt I would not have offered the amendment at all.

Mr. President, now that the subject has been very fully opened, not alone by myself but through the interruptions and observations that have been made by various Senators, I hope the Senator from Ohio will see the wisdom of giving further opportunity for reflection. I think a great many Senators have not had their attention directed to the subject, nor have they appreciated its full importance, and inasmuch as very little time would be saved by going further this afternoon, I suggest to him the propriety of postponing additional discussion until the next session of the Senate.

Mr. POMERENE. I was advised a few minutes ago by the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN] that he is expecting the House to act on the Senate joint resolution this afternoon. He indulged the hope that we might continue the session until the joint resolution was messaged over here, so that it could be signed to-night by the Vice President.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. STONE. I desire to confirm that statement. I have just received a message to the effect that the House is voting upon the joint resolution which was sent to them to-day and that it would be sent to this body very soon. It is desired, if agreed to by the House, that it shall be signed by the Presiding Officer to-day.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield for a question.

Mr. NEWLANDS. The Senator from Iowa referred the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] to the chairman of the Interstate Commerce Committee. In answer to his query regarding the hearings I will state to the Senator from Missouri that I have in my hand the hearing before the House Judiciary Committee of July 18 and 20, 1916, upon the Webb bill; that is, the measure which is now before us. I also have in my hand the hearing before the Interstate Commerce Committee of the Senate on January 5, 1917, upon the bill after it came to the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. What was the inquiry?

Mr. NEWLANDS. The Senator from Missouri inquired whether there were any hearings upon this subject and I give him that information.

Mr. REED. I thank the Senator. I had discovered one of the documents and am glad the Senator found the other.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I do not intend to continue the discussion of this subject to-night. It is not exhausted, and I shall feel compelled at a later time to take up other phases of it. But I recapitulate now what I said in regard to the bill and my amendments. The bill repeals the antitrust law and the Clayton Act with regard to foreign trade. My amendment legalizes, if it is necessary to legalize, the establishment of a common selling agency in foreign countries. I am willing to go that far. I am willing to go no further. I sincerely hope that before we agree to repeal the beneficent provisions of the antitrust law Senators will have a clear comprehension of the ramifications of the law and the application to our own country. It is utterly impossible to repeal the antitrust law with regard to foreign trade without seriously impairing its vitality and its efficiency in domestic trade. It is utterly impossible to authorize combinations and agreements and monopolies of all kinds and sorts with reference to our foreign trade and at the same time preserve intact our protection under the Sherman law with regard to domestic trade. It is beyond human power to disassociate the two things so that we may free the one of all restraints and preserve the control which we have attempted to exercise over the other.

I believe, therefore, that whatever we desire to do for the exporters of the country—and I have pointed out what I desire to do—we ought to do affirmatively and not blindly repeal a great and general law without any fair understanding of the consequences that will ensue. We ought to limit our remedial legislation to the very thing which we are willing our exporters shall do and which some overfearful persons believe they can not do under the law as it is.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Referring to the paper case and the coal case cited by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG], in which it was held that a foreign selling agency and arrangement was a violation of the Sherman antitrust law, where the selling agent had the power to fix the prices for all his clients, I wish to ask the Senator from Iowa if it is his understanding.

in regard to the foreign selling agencies, the proponents of this measure wish to establish that they expect to clothe those agencies with power to fix prices. I ask the Senator if that is his understanding of what they want?

Mr. CUMMINS. That is a point very carefully avoided in the amendment. I do not propose to cover it at all. I do not intend to modify the antitrust law in that respect. I intend to give exporters authority to establish a common agency, but that common agency must not do anything that will restrain foreign trade; and I leave that to the interpretation and construction of the courts.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I meant by the question simply to bring out what, of course, is a great difference between the cases cited by the Senator from Minnesota and a foreign agency that sold for the different members it represented at prices fixed by the members themselves.

I agree with the Senator from Iowa that the mere operation by several exporters through the same foreign selling agency does not at all constitute a violation of the Sherman Antitrust Act; but, of course, I think clearly that the giving to the same agent the power to sell the products of different mills owned by members of an association at prices to be fixed by the agent might constitute a combination in restraint of commerce and trade.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I am not at all prepared to admit that that would be true with regard to a foreign agency. I can easily conceive a single agency in Brazil for a series of competitive commodities established by rival manufacturers or producers in the United States. Now, if those who enter into the agency were to attempt to give the common agent the authority to fix a common price for like articles for sale in Brazil, the question whether such an arrangement would constitute a restraint of our trade with foreign nations is very different from the question which would arise if a series of domestic manufacturers of paper were to establish in the United States a common agency and give the common agent the right to establish a common price. The two questions would not be the same at all. It is true that the language of the law is the same with regard to domestic trade that it is with regard to foreign trade, but the consequences of the act must always be the determining factor in reaching a conclusion as to whether there is a violation of the law or not. In the case of Brazil there might not be, and I think would not be, any consequences that would affect the foreign trade of the United States. In the case in the United States the consequences might be very different, and I can easily see would be different in many respects; but those are difficult and doubtful questions of law, which probably no matter how we settle them here might have little influence in their settlement elsewhere.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I simply wish to state that I was a member of the Committee on Interstate Commerce at the time the testimony was taken upon this proposed measure, and I did not understand then from any of the testimony that it was proposed to attempt the constitution of a foreign selling agency representing an association of producers in this country and allowing the agency abroad to fix the price and to have that thing legalized; nor did I understand that it was contemplated—at least I mean it did not appear from the testimony—that any of the proponents of this measure intended by the establishment of foreign common sales agencies to fix prices below which no sales should be made.

To my mind, if they could do that legally through a foreign selling agency, it might result—and, as the Senator from Iowa says, whether it is legal or not might depend upon the result of the method—in an actual inhibition of foreign commerce in certain lines of product. I do not assume that the men engaged in the making of steel in this country could all get together in this country and agree that they would not sell a pound of steel below a certain price without violating the Sherman antitrust law; but if they can agree that they will not sell a pound of steel abroad for less than a certain sum through a foreign sales agency it seems to me that that is—well, that it is in violation of the Sherman antitrust law; it inhibits to a certain extent and might entirely inhibit our foreign commerce in that article.

The reason why I called attention to the matter was that the two cases cited by the Senator from Minnesota only declared a selling arrangement illegal where the attempt to pool the goods, so to speak, and fix the price are combined in one foreign sales agency. It does not touch the instance such as I supposed the proponents of this measure wanted to cover.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, I am not going to detain the Senate by a discussion of this bill this afternoon. It is a subject that should be given very careful and exhaustive consideration before it is disposed of. The Congress should be careful in dealing with such matters lest greater harm might be done than possible good effected. A great deal of new legislation will probably be proposed at this session of Congress; I am always glad to receive suggestions—a new thought or an idea are of immense value in these abnormal times. But, I repeat, we should be careful, and no legislation of a permanent character should be enacted that could safely be postponed until after the war is over. The fevered brain is a veritable "Pandora's box" of mistakes, and an error is often more perplexing and productive of harm than a deliberate crime. There is no function in the social life of Americans more potential of good or evil than that of the editor of a great newspaper or magazine. Its influence extends throughout the land and its consequences are felt even by generations yet unborn.

Mr. President, in wading through the enormous mass of commonplace editorial stuff which fills the metropolitan newspapers nowadays one becomes tired with the pernicious monotony. Most of these editors write what they are told to write and support the policies agreed upon by the patriots for pelf. To run upon something really virile, vigorous, healthy in morals, and sound in economics, such as the editorial which appeared on the first page of the Washington Times of the afternoon of yesterday, is refreshing. I am going to ask permission to insert this editorial in the RECORD. It is worthy of a place there. I wish every patriotic American could read it. Its patriotism is refreshing and the salutary lesson which it teaches ought to bear good fruit. I especially commend it to the Committee on Interstate Commerce, to which I shall ask that it be referred. I ask that it be inserted in the RECORD, without reading, unless some Senator desires to have it read.

There being no objection, the editorial referred to was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Washington Times, Dec. 6, 1917.]

RAILROAD STOCKS JUMP—WELL THEY MAY JUMP—PUBLIC INDIGNATION WILL JUMP ALSO.

New Haven Railroad stock jumped nicely yesterday. Rock Island jumped also.

Shareholders in these two companies have been robbed in the most artistic manner by railroad "management."

Long ago honest, disheartened stockholders sold out.

Stocks of these railroads that have been exploited, robbed, and gutted by private ownership are suddenly put up in price by the Wall Street gamblers.

Do you ask why?

Because it is proposed to turn over public money to the railroads, lending them the public's cash, increasing the rate that the public pays, guaranteeing profit on rascally mismanagement.

Is this proposition going through as a "war measure"?

If it does go through, then any kind of public thieving should thrive in the name of war.

The railroads are running at full capacity. Their receipts are gigantic.

They have shown themselves incompetent and inefficient.

Why should the public be taxed to lend money to these private railroad owners and their roads, made bankrupt by dishonesty or inefficiency?

Why should the public be taxed again to increase the high rate already paid for freight and passengers?

And why should the public be taxed to guarantee dividends on watered stock and on bonds of which the underlying value has been stolen?

The Government should take over the railroads, of course—commandeering them, as the Government has commandeered ships, human lives, and other things needed.

The Government should take the roads and pay at its leisure what they are worth—not a dollar more, regardless of the watered stocks and the watered bonds issued.

It is easy to print stocks and bonds. It ought not to be easy to make the public pay for the work of the printing press more than the printed paper is worth.

The Government calls a man, takes his life—and does not guarantee him profit on the business that he is compelled to leave behind him.

The Government, by monopolizing, as it must and should do, steel and coal, will cripple or ruin thousands of individual manufacturers and perhaps entire industries. But it does not guarantee profits or make loans at public expense to such individuals or industries.

Why this tender sympathy for railroads and railroad stocks, and for the very rich men that have bought stocks after dishonest mismanagement had put the prices low?

If Congress has money left to spend on sympathy, let the money be given to the thousands of women of New England that were made poor by the thieves that looted the New Haven road. Some of these prosperous thieves are now conspicuous as patriots, riding around in private cars—one car for one man—while the little business man can't get a freight car for his product or his coal.

Some of these patriot railroad thieves are basking in public favor because they buy liberty bonds with money stolen from the estates and families of honest men, or because they give a small percentage of their stealing to the Red Cross or the Y. M. C. A.

They are conspicuous in Washington; they presume to advise the Government what to do and how to do it.

We give them full credit for their cunning and their success, but there ought to be a limit to the success, and there will be a limit.

You hear that it is proposed, as a measure of economy, to cut twenty-five millions from the pay of honest servants of the Government, from overworked and underpaid clerks in the departments, from letter carriers, burdened with the heavy load of wartime, from mail clerks deprived of rest, exhausted by long hours.

And at the same time comes the official suggestion that railroad incompetency, inefficiency, mismanagement, and dishonesty be rewarded with increased freight and passenger rates, huge Government loans, taken by taxation out of the pockets of heavily taxed citizens, and profits on watered securities guaranteed by the public. This is, indeed, delightful impertinence.

Public servants, faithful, efficient, and underpaid, already impoverished by the increased cost of living and the diminished value of the dollar, are to have their pay reduced.

Incompetent and dishonest railroads are to receive in loans to rebuild their neglected property money taken from the taxpayers' pockets and upon their incompetency, dishonesty, and mismanagement the public pocket is to guarantee dividends.

If this goes through, the pickpocket and the forger, the slacker and the defaulter should form themselves into an army, march on the Capitol, and say, "This is war and we need money; please lend us what we want and guarantee us a profit on our professional activities."

The Nation should not put a dollar into a railroad unless the Nation is permanently to own that railroad.

The nation which does not guarantee the honest farmer a profit on his farm or to the honest business man a profit on his business has no right to guarantee any profit to the notoriously mismanaged and dishonestly exploited railroads of the United States.

This newspaper is convinced that the power and influence of the President will successfully oppose the suggestion that the public pocket should become the property of the privately owned railroad.

We do not believe that Congress will permit the private car profiteers to put their dipper into the billions that are being poured out.

If Congress should permit it, the public now or a little later will find a way of making Congress know what it thinks of the transaction.

The people will endure much and sacrifice everything to win the war—they gladly applaud conscription of their lives and of their money for war.

But the people will not permit in the name of war or anything else the financing of a dishonest railroad system at the expense of a heavily taxed people.

The Government does not hesitate to say to a million mothers, "Give me your son; I need his life, and I will pay you my price—$1 a day."

That being the case, the same Government should not hesitate to say to the little group that own the railroads: "Give me those railroads; I need them; I'll pay you a fair price; I'll keep them; I'll operate them; I'll make them efficient—what you have never done."

We are at war, and it would be a fine thing to say to the people of a republic: "Your lives are public property, your money is public property; but the railroads and its owners are private, sacred—stocks and bonds are more precious than the lives of citizens. Government stands in awe of railroads and watered stock has a greater claim upon Government sympathy than honest business."

RECESS.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, what is the question before the Senate?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair understands that the sole question remaining is to receive the joint resolution when it comes over finally from the House of Representatives.

Mr. GALLINGER. Then we might as well take a recess in proper form, rather than to engage in general conversation.

Mr. POMERENE. I move that the Senate take a recess for 20 minutes.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

The message announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled joint resolution (S. J. HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, December 7, 1917.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Oh Lord God of Hosts, who holdest in the hollow of Thy hand the destiny of men and of nations, hear us we beseech Thee, when we pray from our heart of hearts for our soldiers and sailors, the soldiers and sailors of our allies, and all others battling for the eternal rights of mankind. Keep them in the bonds of unity, health, and strength. Inspire them with courage, valor, and heroism that they may still the enemies of Liberty, Truth, Justice, and sweep from the face of the earth autocracy, militarism, and all the evils that follow in their wake; that peace may fill all hearts and all homes in all the world; that Thy Kingdom may come, and Thy Will be done, in earth as in Heaven.

Our hearts are touched with profound sorrow for the suffering people, our neighbors and friends, in the awful disaster which has swept thousands to death, maimed other thousands, destroyed homes, and left the people desolate. Look with pitying love upon them, help and comfort them through the aid hurrying to their relief; and all praise be Thine, in Christ Jesus our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

TELEGRAM FROM A MEMBER.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I rise to call the attention of the House to a telegram which I received from the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY], who, with 11 other Members, is returning from Hawaii, and who finds it impossible to reach this city until to-morrow. I think, in justice to these absentees, this telegram ought to be read.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the telegram. The Chair received one of the same kind.

The Clerk read as follows:

GRAND ISLAND, NEBR., December 6, 1917.

Hon. HENRY A. COOPER, M. C.,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

Twelve Members of the House returning from Hawaii are exceedingly anxious to vote on proposed war resolution. We will reach Washington early Saturday morning and respectfully urge you to use your influence to delay vote until Saturday. Press dispatches indicate such postponement will not be prejudicial.

ALLEN T. TREADWAY, M. C.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I present this simply as an effort to use my influence to have this postponed. [Laughter.]

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. MASON, indefinitely, on account of sickness.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

Sundry messages, in writing, from the President of the United States were communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. Sharkey, one of his secretaries.

AUSTRIA-HUNGARY.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of House joint resolution 169, declaring that a state of war exists between the Imperial and Royal Austro-Hungarian Government and the Government and the people of the United States and making provision to prosecute the same. And, pending that, I would like to ask the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] if we can not agree upon some time for general debate.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. After the conversation I had with the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLOOD], I think two hours upon a side would suffice.

Mr. FLOOD. That is agreeable to me; but I will also suggest that general debate continue for two hours on a side, making four hours, two hours to be controlled by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] and two hours by myself; that debate under the five-minute rule shall run until 5 o'clock, when the committee shall rise and report the bill, with amendments, if there are any, to the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, pending that, asks unanimous consent that general debate shall not exceed two hours on a side, one half of the time to be controlled by himself and the other half by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER]; that the five-minute debate shall run from the conclusion of the general debate until 5 o'clock, when the committee shall rise and report the bill and amendments, if any, to the House.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman from Virginia yield?

Mr. FLOOD. Certainly.

Mr. CANNON. Under that agreement general debate would run until 4.30, two hours on a side. That would leave a little over 20 minutes for the five-minute debate. There are 435 of us present. I suppose one by one we could be called, and if we agreed to the speeches, say "Me, too." It seems to me that one hour on a side for general debate and the balance of the time under the five-minute rule for the Membership of this House would be more appropriate. Will the gentleman modify his request?

Mr. FLOOD. That would be agreeable to me, but I had an understanding with the gentleman from Wisconsin for two hours on a side. The gentleman can address himself to the gentleman from Wisconsin and see if that will be agreeable to him.

Mr. CANNON. Will my friend make that suggestion to the gentleman from Wisconsin, because my friend from Wisconsin has been busy and undoubtedly has not heard this colloquy?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. What is the request? I did not understand.

Mr. CANNON. This proposed agreement of general debate for four hours would leave 20 minutes for debate under the 5-minute rule. There are 435 of us here, and it seems to me that general debate ought to run for a less time and give us more time under the 5-minute rule. [Applause.] Four hours would be taken up by four men, leaving 20 minutes for the rest of us under the 5-minute rule.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I think there is no desire on the part of any four men in the House to occupy so much time as the gentleman from Illinois seems to fear they might.

Mr. CANNON. I do not fear it.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The requests that I have received have been for 3 and 5 minutes, with two exceptions—one, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Foss], who is to follow the gentleman from Virginia, wishes 15 minutes, he being a member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MCCORMICK], who has asked for 7 minutes. One gentleman has asked for only 3 minutes in the general debate, the purpose being in general debate to have as much time consumed in short speeches as possible.

Mr. CANNON. That would be so under the 5-minute rule.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. LENROOT. Reserving the right to object, I want to call the attention of the gentleman from Virginia to the fact that the request as he states it, under ordinary conditions would bring general debate to a close about 5 o'clock, and there would be no opportunity to offer any amendment, because the 4 hours of general debate is to be actual debate.

Mr. FLOOD. I am willing to modify that by saying a half an hour after general debate closes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, will the gentleman modify his request so as to provide that amendments may be offered at any time during general debate?

Mr. GARNER. Under the rule you can do that.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Speaker, what is the request?

The SPEAKER. The request is that general debate shall run not to exceed 4 hours, one-half of the time to be controlled by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLOOD], and the other half by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER], that the 5-minute debate shall run for 30 minutes from the time of the conclusion of the general debate, when the committee shall rise and report the resolution and all pending amendments.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Speaker, believing that four hours is too long to devote to general debate, I object.

Mr. FLOOD. Then, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the time be equally divided, one-half to be controlled by the gentleman from Wisconsin and one-half by myself.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that the time be equally divided between the two sides, one half to be controlled by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] and the other half by himself. Is there objection?

Mr. BRITTEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FLOOD. Yes.

Mr. BRITTEN. Is it understood that general debate will be confined to the resolution?

Mr. FLOOD. I think so.

Mr. BRITTEN. I think that should be understood.

Mr. CANNON. Let me submit a proposition—that we close general debate in an hour and a half or two hours, and then the gentleman from Virginia, on the one hand, and the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER], on the other hand, control the time under the five-minute rule.

Mr. GARNER. You can not do that.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Speaker. I am perfectly willing to prefer a request that general debate continue for three hours, a half on each side, with the understanding, which I state to this side of the House, that I can not give the time to anyone to whom I promised it except members of the committee.

The SPEAKER. Just what is the gentleman's request?

Mr. FLOOD. Is that agreeable to the gentleman from Wisconsin—three hours?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Entirely so. I wish to say this, however, that it does not seem to me that two hours on a side in general debate on so vastly important a question as a declaration of war is a long time for a body of 435 men.

Mr. CANNON. It is a long time for four men.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent that general debate shall continue for not to exceed three hours, and that at the end of general debate, debate under the five-minute rule shall continue until 15 minutes after 5 o'clock.

Mr. FLOOD. Until half an hour after the conclusion of general debate.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Is the gentleman willing to have it continue until 15 minutes after 5?

Mr. FLOOD. That is just as long as it was before. Say 5 o'clock.

The SPEAKER. And that at the conclusion of the general debate, debate under the five-minute rule shall continue until 5 o'clock, when the committee shall rise and report the resolution, together with all pending amendments, to the House.

Mr. FLOOD. And the time for general debate to be divided equally between the gentleman from Wisconsin and myself.

The SPEAKER. And that at the end of the five-minute debate the committee shall rise and report the resolution, together with pending amendments, to the House, and that the previous question shall be considered as ordered, the time to be controlled by the gentleman from Virginia and the gentleman from Wisconsin, debate to be confined to the subject matter of the resolution. Is there objection?

Mr. CANNON. I object, but I shall not object to unanimous consent for two hours of general debate.

Mr. FLOOD. The gentleman himself suggested three hours.

Mr. CANNON. Well, take the three hours for general debate. Then under the five-minute rule I have no objection to the gentleman controlling half the time.

The SPEAKER. No one can control time under the five-minute rule. Does the gentleman from Illinois insist upon his objection?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, no.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. KEARNS. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio objects. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Virginia, that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that such time as we have in general debate be controlled half by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] and the other half by myself.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent that the time for general debate be controlled half and half by himself and the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER]. Is there objection?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. How long a time will that allow?

Mr. GARNER. Whatever general debate there is.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I want that understood.

The SPEAKER. General debate runs until the committee gets tired of hearing it. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on going into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. J. Res. 169, declaring that a state of war exists between the Imperial and Royal Austro-Hungarian Government and the Government and the people of the United States, and making provisions to prosecute the same, with Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of House joint resolution 169, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 169) declaring that a state of war exists between the Imperial and Royal Austro-Hungarian Government and the Government and the people of the United States and making provision to prosecute the same.

Whereas the Imperial and Royal Austro-Hungarian Government has shown its hostility to the Government and the people of the United States by severing diplomatic relations, and has formally adhered to the ruthless policy of submarine warfare adopted by its ally, the Imperial German Government, with which the United States is at war, and has given to its ally every support and aid on both land and sea in the prosecution of war against the Government and people of the United States of America: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That a state of war be, and is hereby, declared to exist and to have existed since noon of the 5th day of December, 1917, between the United States of America and the Imperial and Royal Austro-Hungarian Government; and that the President be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to employ the entire naval and military forces of the United States and the resources of the Government to carry on war against the Imperial and Royal Austro-Hungarian Government, and to bring the conflict to a successful termination all the resources of the country are hereby pledged by the Congress of the United States.

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out the preamble and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"Whereas the Imperial and Royal Austro-Hungarian Government has severed diplomatic relations with the Government of the United States of America, and has committed acts of war against the Government and people of the United States of America, among which are its adherence to the policy of ruthless submarine warfare adopted by its ally, the Impefial German Government, with which the United States of America is at war, and by giving to its ally active support and aid on both land and sea in the prosecution of war against the Government and the people of the United States of America: Therefore be it."

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Chairman, a resolution declaring war upon any nation is a serious piece of legislation. It is less so in this instance than would ordinarily be the case, because Austria has been making war upon this country for many months, and we have already declared war against her chief ally and the Government which dominates and directs her actions and policies in this crisis of the world's history.

A declaration accepting Austria's gage of war at this time is wise, and it is essential to the welfare of the armies of this country and of the allied nations.

Austria has declared in favor of an unrestricted and ruthless submarine warfare, has ordered us off of certain portions of the high seas, and when we did not obey this order has sunk our ships and murdered our citizens.

This has been done in violation of the agreement reached between Austria and this country with reference to the methods of submarine warfare.

When the European war began no principle of international law was more securely established than that war should be so conducted that injury and death should be spared to noncombatants so far as was humanly possible. The principle is as old as civilization. It was old in the time of Grotius, who held in the calamities of war children are exempted and spared on the score of their age and women from respect to their sex. Even Germany recognized this principle until the war had been going on for six months, and while her armies committed outrages of the most atrocious kind in Belgium and in northern France and in other sections on the battle front, the German Government denied most of these outrages and atrocities, and when they were admitted attempted to justify them as being within the limits of this rule.

On the 4th of February, 1915, Germany changed her policy, threw international law and the principles of humanity aside, and gave notice to the world that she intended to inaugurate a system of submarine warfare on merchant vessels, which owing to the size and weakness of the submarines and their inability to provide for the passengers and crew on the merchant vessels meant that these passengers and crews, including noncombatants, among whom would be defenseless women and children, were to go unprovided for and would be sunk along with the vessels.

Our Government, through our Secretary of State, Mr. Bryan, immediately protested against this proposal of Germany, and protested so effectively and based its protest so strongly upon the principles of international law and the instincts of humanity that Germany promptly replied to our note of protest conceding the legality and the right of the position taken by this country and agreeing not to engage in submarine warfare against merchant vessels.

This agreement was not kept by Germany, but whenever there was a violation of it by any of her submarine commanders the Government made efforts upon first one ground and then another to justify and excuse such violations.

Our Government bore with much patience the oft-repeated violations by the German Government of its promises, and when its patience was exhausted on April 8, 1916, notified the German Government in effect that no further excuses would be accepted. Germany then agreed to the policy of submarine warfare prescribed by our Government, which agreement was kept for nine months, and on the 31st of last January notice was given that it would be kept no longer. This threat of Germany was carried out and our declaration that a state of war existed followed, since which time our Government has directed all of its energies to mobilizing its resources and its man power for the assertion and protection of our rights by the achievement of complete victory over Germany and her allies.

Austria soon learned German submarine methods of warfare and on November 7, 1915, attacked and sunk the Ancona (Italian). Our Government protested through Secretary Lansing in a very strong note against this ruthless act of the Austrian Government. That Government replied on December 29, 1915, and agreed that no American vessel should be sunk, and also that no private ships of a hostile nation should be sunk if they did not flee or offer resistance until the persons on board were placed in safety.

This principle was reaffirmed by Austria in a note to our Government in January, 1916, in the case of the Persia (British).

This was all our Government asked of Austria, and our administration was satisfied with the assurances received from that Government. Austria substantially lived up to this agreement until January 31, 1917, when in order to support her master, Germany, she notified this Government in practically the same language of the German note of the same date that beginning the very next day, on February 1, her submarines would sink all ships, ours included, within certain zones of the seas, zones where our ships had a perfect right to go.

Since this notice many vessels have been sunk in the Mediterranean, the area in which Austrian submarines operate, by submarines which carried no flag or mark, and the nationality of which was unknown, but which were believed to have been Austrian submarines or undersea craft commanded by Austrian officers and maintained by Austrian means.

On April 4, 1917, the American four-masted schooner Marguerite was sunk by a submarine of this character, whose officers spoke the Hungarian language, and which was undoubtedly an Austrian submarine. On November 21, 1917, the Schuylkill (American) was sunk off the coast of Algeria by a submarine which was believed to be and which undoubtedly was an Austrian vessel. Thus Austria is carrying out the notice given to this country on January 31, 1917, that she would sink any of our vessels found on certain parts of the high seas.

This is war; war by Austria upon this country. It is an ancient maxim of the law recognized by all nations that a ship on the high seas is a part of the territory of the country whose flag it flies. The law writers and law teachers thus state the law. The Supreme Court of the United States and the highest courts of all civilized lands have many times so announced it.

Austria is not only insulting our flag and violating our territorial rights but she has been murdering our citizens. The people, passengers and sailors, on these ships which carried the American flag and were sunk were as much on American soil as we are to-day, and were as much entitled to the protection of the American flag and all the force and power behind that flag as we are.

The assault upon these ships and the murder of these American citizens was as much an act of war against this country as if Austria had landed an army upon our shores and marched it to this city, burning our homes and murdering our citizens as it came.

No more aggressive act of war can be committed by one nation against another, and we should not submit to such outrages from any nation great or small. Our flag has been insulted, the integrity of our territory has been invaded, the lives of our citizens have been taken, and to submit would bring irreparable injury, loss, and suffering to our people.

If any nation could order vessels of the United States off any portions of the seas, it would mean disaster to our commerce.

Our prosperity and our welfare as a people are inseparably connected with our right of free intercourse with other nations. This year our total exports to Great Britain, France, Belgium, and Italy alone will be over $3,000,000,000. These exports and the exports to other countries represent the surplus products of our farms, our mines, and our factories. If we are denied a market for these suplus products, the prosperity of our farmers and of our financial interests, our financiers, and of the laborers upon the farms, in the mines, and in the factories, as well as that of our citizens engaged in other vocations, would be destroyed. Stagnation of industry would result, and suffering and want would stalk in the land.

A nation which will not fight for these outrages, which will not defend its flag, the integrity of its territory, the lives and prosperity of its citizens, will not long retain the love of its own people or the respect of other people, and will not long endure, because it would be unworthy to endure. [Applause.]

It seems to me the duty of the House upon this occasion is clear. We should accept the gage of battle from Austria just as we did from Germany.

Another reason why this resolution should be passed is the moral effect it will have upon those with whom we are cooperating in this war. It would greatly hearten the people of Italy. The Italian front is the most important theater of war at this particular time. This declaration will strengthen that front and strengthen from a military point of view the whole allied cause.

Let us give this encouragement to the valiant people of sunny Italy, and let us give to her brave armies the munitions and reenforcements they need, and which will enable them not only to regain the territory they recently lost but to march in triumph and victory into Vienna.

For eight months we have watched narrowly, closely, and critically the Imperial and Royal Austro-Hungarian Government, and we have learned that if that Government is not dominated absolutely by the Imperial German Government its purpose and aims are the same as that powerful autocracy which is seeking to strangle liberty throughout the world that it may gratify its vast ambitions, and Austria should be treated in the same manner we have treated its master and ally.

We took up arms against the Hohenzollern oligarchy because of its invasion of our rights on the seas in pursuance of its ruthless undersea-boat program. The Hapsburg leaders promulgated the same program, and they have carried out that program to the extent of their ability.

Let us pass this resolution speedily; let us link together for overwhelming defeat the two medieval governments which plunged the world into war and still stand as the worst obstacles to a just peace among the nations. Let us pass it unanimously and hearten and cheer the great President of this country, who is bending every energy of mind and body, night and day, to the accomplishment of the complete and speedy triumph of the allied and American armies, upon terms of surrender from the central powers that will satisfy the hope and aspirations of the American people and bring an enduring peace to a stricken world. [Applause.]

I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Foss].

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I rise to support this resolution. The chairman of the committee in his report and his speech has made a statement as to the international law of the case, and I shall not, therefore, dwell upon that feature.

This resolution declares that a state of war exists between Austria and the United States, and is similar to the resolution adopted by Congress some months ago in respect to Germany. Of course, the real basis of our action against Austria is that she is the ally, the greatest ally, of Germany, our enemy, and that she has been supporting Germany in this war against us by the use of arms, and, furthermore, has been conducting her warfare, using the same methods as Germany, namely, ruthless, inhuman submarine warfare against this country.

At first I thought that we should also include Bulgaria and Turkey in this resolution, and I was strongly of that opinion. I thought we should make one job of it, so to speak, because I reasoned that the same logic which applies to this resolution against Austria, and urges us to adopt it, would also apply to Bulgaria and Turkey, but upon further reflection I came to this conclusion: That our President is the chosen leader of all the people, and under the Constitution is Commander in Chief of the Army and the Navy and the head of our diplomatic and foreign relations, and that if I as a Member of this body should vote to add Bulgaria and Turkey to this resolution at this time when our Commander in Chief advises against it I might be interfering and perhaps conflicting with his plan of action, and that this body, if such a course were adopted, might be criticized as attempting to assume the leadership of this war.

The President is our leader. I am willing to give him the last ounce of support. I will stand back of him, I will stand beside him, but I shall not attempt to step before him. [Applause.] The President clearly and concisely stated in his message our present duty when he said that our present immediate task is to win the war, and nothing shall turn us aside from it until it is accomplished. That should be the aim and purpose of every American from this time on. [Applause.] The American people have never fully realized that we are at war. The battle fields are so far away that they have been unable to visualize the greatness of the contest and the importance of our marshaling all the forces of men and material for a masterful effort against the enemy. But the people are beginning to realize it.

Our country was unprepared for war. Our people did not see the necessity for preparation. While some of us had been preaching military preparation on this floor for years, yet the great mass of our people were engrossed in the commercialism of the hour and listened to the siren voices of peace, peace, but peace without preparation, and preached the doctrine that wars had ceased and would never come again to blight the earth. Germany's power lay in the fact of her preparation, ready for the combat and her power lies to-day in that fact, and while our allies were preparing for war she was overrunning their countries. When the war broke out France had the best army. Russia had a great army on paper, but it had little training and less equipment. England had a great fleet and has been able to control the seas, but only a small army. When we entered into the war we had less than 100,000 Regulars, but no legislative body on the face of the earth ever went to work more speedily or has done more to put the country into a state of preparation in less time than has the American Congress. [Applause.] But our preparation has only just begun. With the collapse of Russia and the recent German drive into Italy against her illy equipped troops, it is no use to disguise the fact that America must come to the front stronger than ever before contemplated [applause] if we are to win this war or it will be lost, and that would be a sad day for humanity and civilization and the orderly progress of the world. We are fighting against a military autocracy that has thrown to the winds all respect for law and order and justice, the sacredness of treaties, and the precepts of international law and the right of all peoples of the world everywhere to live their lives in peace with their fellow men. Unless this spirit can be overthrown and put down forever the world will not be fit to live in because it uproots and destroys the very bases of human life and society.

Another thing that we Americans must realize, and that is that we can never win this war unless we are unitedly for it. Every American from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and from the Gulf to the Lakes, must take his stand on the fighting line either here or over there. [Applause.] There must be no equivocation. There must be no uncertainty. There must be no dissension in our ranks; all the manhood and all the womanhood, and, yes, even all the childhood should proclaim with one voice, "Our country and but one country!" [Applause.]

Let the work, therefore, go on with all the speed possible consistent with efficiency and military training. Let our people become united as never before, and let there come a revival in this country of a real and true Americanism rising above all parties [applause], and that will be a forerunner of a glorious victory for righteousness and peace.

It is no time to talk of peace until we have overmastered and overpowered the spirit of insatiate selfishness. All talk of peace on the part of even well-disposed people only robs our purpose of its strength. We are fighting not for a temporary peace, far be it; not a peace founded, as the President said, upon another Congress at Vienna to lay causes for still greater wars in the future; but we are fighting for a peace that shall be fundamental and permanent, founded upon the eternal verities of man. [Applause.] Shall Germany give us peace? Never. It would only be a peace of humiliation and despair. But rather, in the words of that great American, James Russell Lowell—

> God, give us peace!—not such as lulls to sleep,
> But sword on thigh and brow with purpose knit!
> And let our Ship of State to harbor sweep,
> Her ports all up, her battle lanterns lit,
> And her leashed thunders gathering for their leap.

[Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I yield back what time I have remaining.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask how much time we have consumed?

The CHAIRMAN. Twelve minutes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON]. [Applause.]

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, on the 6th day of April, this year, this Congress declared that a state of war existed between the Imperial German Government and the Government and people of the United States.

Whatever doubt that may have existed at that time as to the wisdom and justice of that course has by subsequent events been removed. These subsequent events have demonstrated not only the wisdom and justice but the absolute necessity of such a course. Looking back over the past three years and taking an inventory of the many instances of German effrontery and unjustifiable conduct toward us, a peaceful nation, we can appreciate the unexcelled patience manifested by the President and our Government. It will ever stand as the strongest testimonial of our overwhelming desire, our sincere hope, our devout wish, that war might be averted and peace maintained between us and all the world.

Our every resource has been builded upon the peaceful toil of our people, and as much as we cherished peace, the German mind was too saturated with thoughts of world conquest and domination to permit us to remain at peace. Their philosophy and teachings would not allow it. The plans of the German autocracy had been too long in forming for us to be left to pursue the peaceful course we so much desired. Every agency of the German oligarchy was directed toward the supreme end they had in view. They dreamed of the day when the Kaiser would sit in the White House, the Reichstag hold its meetings in this Capitol, and free peoples everywhere become serfs. For nearly three years we patiently bore the insulting acts of the Imperial German Government that friendly relations might not be severed. To that end we sought every avenue and tried every method of diplomacy without avail. Sneaking spies infested happy and unsuspecting communities; corrupt and debauched newspapers poisoned the minds of our citizens and tried to influence public opinion; strange agents roamed the country, spreading their sedition among us and attempting to stir up disloyalty and create sentiment in favor of Germany. Violence was employed to destroy our industries, and poison was used in attempts to kill our soldiers.

These unprovoked outrages were veiled in such adroit secrecy and carried out with such consummate skill that people began to ask what it all meant and from whence it came. So quietly and so insidiously did this German propaganda work that men began to look upon their neighbors with suspicion and distrust, and thus it was until its slimy trail was uncovered, separating the wheat from the chaff and revealing to the world who were true Americans and who were "shadow Huns."

They were not content with carrying on within our own borders this system of deception and intrigue unparalleled in history, but the Kaiser sought to enlist the friendly nations of Mexico and Japan to make a common and joint war on us. He laid the plans for the attack and proposed the terms in the brazen Zimmermann note, suggesting that the South be attacked by the armies of Mexico; the West by the armed forces of Japan, leaving to his own armies the great and populous East. Then, when victory should have been achieved, the people of this Nation would be made to feel the iron hand of Prussianism; Texas, Arizona, and New Mexico would become provinces of Mexico; the great States of California, Oregon, and Washington would be handed over to Japan; while the East and South and Middle West were to be ruled by the Hohenzollerns themselves. He sent his agents among the negroes of the South trying to incite them to rise against the whites. He sent his agents to a secret meeting at Los Angeles and there attempted to form a diabolical plot that would place the yoke of negro domination and German militarism on the white people of my section. The note sent from this city by the German ambassador to his Government, in which he said, "I request authority to pay out up to $50,000, in order, as on former occasions, to influence Congress through the organization you know of, which can perhaps prevent war"; "I am beginning in the meantime to act accordingly," shows the German desire and purpose to influence by corruption, if possible, the action of the American Congress.

Not satisfied with these inexcusable and dastardly acts within our own borders, they asserted and insisted upon the right to close the pathways of the seas to our commerce and citizens. If the insulting and highly unprecedented demand of the Kaiser to this Government had been acceded to, if we had submitted, as some men in the American Congress would have had us do, not only would we have forfeited every vestige of honor and have lost the respect of the world, but in this country to-day our weakness and debasement would be witnessed in the smokeless chimneys of our factories, the unused equipment of our railroads, the receivers' sheets of bankrupt business houses, and the closed doors of banking institutions. [Applause.] We would read it in empty bins, unused barns, untilled fields; we would see it in the sunburnt, careworn faces and stooped shoulders of the hard-working farmer, in the depressed look of the unemployed laborer. We would be confronted to-day throughout this Nation with financial, industrial, and commercial ruin—a panic unexampled in all history. [Applause.]

The greatness and prosperity of this country depend on our ability not alone to produce and manufacture products, but to sell them abroad after they are produced and manufactured here. A 12,000,000-bale cotton crop, a 2,500,000,000-bushel corn crop, or a 750,000,000-bushel wheat crop does not in itself insure prosperity to the American farmer. A 12,000,000-bale cotton crop, for instance, without a market abroad and without ships and open seas by which that cotton can be conveyed to market would mean unprecedentedly low prices to the southern cotton farmer, but a larger or a smaller crop of cotton, with a market abroad and ships provided, with an unobstructed ocean highway to move that cotton, means good and probably high prices for the product. The same is true of other products.

If the demand of the Kaiser had been acceded to, and we had submitted to his closing the ocean highways to the cotton produced by the farmers of the South, that section would have lost this year on that product alone over $2,000,000,000, and my State would have lost on an average of $2,000,000 to the county. If the pathways of the seas had been closed to him the farmer of my State would not now be realizing 30 cents a pound for cotton, corn would not be selling for around $1.50 a bushel, and reasonable prices obtaining for all other products of the farm. If the President and the American Congress had yielded to the wishes and demands of the Kaiser, I doubt not that cotton would be selling to-day for less than 5 cents a pound, that corn would be used for fuel, and practically every American product be without a market. Instead of their present prosperous condition, the farmers and laborers of this country would be in a state of want, privation, and penury. But, thank God, the President of this Nation and a majority of the Members of the American Congress stood by the principles of this Government, the traditions of our fathers, for the rights of the farmers and laborers and industries of America, and rejected this unjustifiable demand of the Kaiser, saved the country from financial ruin, and preserved our national honor and self-respect. [Loud applause.]

Since our entry into the war we have made marvelous progress in raising armies and organizing the forces of the country for victory. Our success depends in a large measure on the success of our allies, our interests are now identical with theirs, so far as crushing German militarism is concerned. The Imperial and Royal Austro-Hungarian Government is but the tool of Germany. Germany's military leaders and rulers command the armies and dictate the policies of Austria. The policies of one are the policies of the other. Their interests are so interwoven that we can not distinguish between the two. The submarine bases, the aviation stations, and the munition depots supply the forces of both. Their submarines have destroyed American ships and killed American citizens. The armies of one relieve or reinforce the forces of the other. Our brave Italian allies are heroically fighting the ally of our enemy amid the snow-capped peaks of the Alps and holding in check the barbaric hordes that would lay waste the fertile Venetian plains. [Applause.]

The splendid message of President Wilson last Tuesday, in which he said "our object now is to win the war," is the tocsin that should influence our every act and lead us in this great crisis. [Applause.] Every means must now be employed, every force must be organized, every policy inaugurated that will mobilize the resources and coordinate the forces of the entire Nation. [Applause.]

The passage of this resolution is a necessary and essential step in that policy. A wave of patriotism, showing the united purpose of the American people, has already swept over this country. Those who dare throw obstacles in the ways devised to bring success to our arms will, as the President aptly says, "strut their uneasy hour and be forgotten." [Applause.]

The brave soldiers who are now at the front or in camps preparing to risk their lives in defense of the country have, in many instances, given up lucrative positions, left loved ones behind, with but one thought in mind—that is, to bring victory to the Stars and Stripes. [Applause.] To our soldiers in France and in training here, our brave boys on the seas, the armies of our allies, the passage of this resolution will give encouragement and support. [Applause.]

If I have correctly interpreted the wishes and sentiments of the people of my district and State, I not only acted as they would have me act when I voted for the war resolution on April 4 and for the many necessary war measures that have passed this Congress, but I shall do as I believe they would have me do in this instance—vote for this resolution.

Without claiming for my State patriotism greater than exists among the people of other States of this Union, I know that none are more unitedly and wholeheartedly behind the President and in this war to win than are the people of Mississippi. Day after to-morrow will record the one hundredth anniversary of the admission of Mississippi into the Union. During that century of statehood she has furnished to the Nation many leaders of thought and action, in times of peace as well as in times of war. Her distinguished sons have reflected credit and shed glory not only on the State but on the Nation. On the battle field of Chalmette in the War of 1812 it was a Mississippian, Thomas Hines, leading Mississippi riflemen, who materially aided in winning victory for the Stars and Stripes. [Applause.] In the Mexican War it was a Mississippian, John A. Quitman, who first scaled the walls of Chapultepec and planted Old Glory on its ramparts. [Applause.] In that same war it was another Mississippian, the beloved Jefferson Davis, who, though but a young man, leading Mississippi boys at Buena Vista, gave to military science the celebrated "V" formation. [Applause.]

In every crisis Mississippians have responded to the call and given their all in defense of their State and Nation. She is just as patriotic to-day as she has ever been, and the soldiers from no other State of this Union will give a better account of themselves, render greater service to the Nation, or perform more deeds of daring, bravery, and heroism than the soldier boys from Mississippi. [Loud applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I yield back what time remains.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. McCORMICK]. [Applause.]

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. Chairman, I crave the indulgence of the committee for a few minutes while I speak of the aspect of the war which is touched intimately by the resolution which is before the committee.

Later I hope to be able to speak of the war in general. I would have the committee bear in mind that recent events in Italy illustrate the importance of what we purpose to do to-day, for there can be no doubt that the morale of the armies and of the civil population in Italy was affected by our failure to declare war against Austria-Hungary at the time we declared war against the German Empire. I spent days on that front. I was everywhere met by the query as to why we had distinguished between the modern autocracy of Germany and the venerable, obscurantist, reactionary tyranny of the Hapsburg. I was asked what there was that distinguished the democracies of France and Great Britain from the democracy of Italy that we should single out Italy, which had long looked to us as the great leader among democracies, for exceptional treatment.

I think that none of us can escape some responsibility for what has transpired in Italy, and when I say none of us I speak of Italy's European allies as well as of America. Italy has been short of guns, still shorter of ammunition, and there has not been enough wheat. Her European allies might have made a greater contribution than they did in guns and in ammunition. I do not say any of this in any spirit of recrimination, but because we are likely to be confronted by an analogous situation in Greece. I do not say that to-day the resolution should be amended to include a declaration of war against Bulgaria. But the Government of the United States, if the resolution passes, as I have no doubt it will, should bear in mind that in Greece the government of Venizelos now confronts the Bulgarian Army, that it is assuming an ever-increasing part of the burden on the front in Thessaly and above Salonica, and that if we continue long at peace with Bulgaria, if the minister of the perfidious Czar of the Bulgars continues long in Washington while Bulgaria remains at war with the allies, inevitably in Greece men will ask this same question which they asked in Italy.

They will ask of Americans the same question which men asked of me when I was in Italy, namely, "Why do you discriminate against Greece, whose purposes, whose ideals, are in no way different from those of the democracies of western Europe?"

There is a distinction between the efforts which we may now directly make against Austro-Hungary and against Bulgaria or Turkey, though I can not forbear to say that when I was in front of Trieste the Italians reported the capture of Turkish infantry among the Austrian prisoners on that front, infantry brought there to bolster up the faltering forces of Austria.

Mr. Chairman, this resolution ought to pass without dissent. There has been no logic in our position, and evidently from the common decision now nothing has been gained by the distinction which we made in the past. Our action to-day will inspirit the armies of Italy and so lighten the burden on the front in France. The resolution ought to pass without dissent. The Government of the United States and the Congress ought at the same time to bear in mind that if Bulgaria and Turkey continue by the side of the Hohenzollern and the Hapsburg it may become their duty before long—for if they act at all they ought to act before long—to declare war against all the enemies of the democracies by whose side we propose now to fight. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LINTHICUM].

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, I am particularly pleased that the administration has recommended the declaration of war against Austria. I can not see how we can properly support our allies without such declaration, especially in Italy. For many years the nations of the world have been fighting for the rights of man. To-day they are fighting for the rights of nations. They are fighting that nations, no matter how small nor how weak, if they set up a government of their own people, shall have a "place in the sun." They are contending that each and every nation has a right to its own nationality and to government according to the dictates of its people. To that this great democracy has dedicated its every resource in men, money, and property.

There is no question but that we shall win this war. It is absolutely necessary that we do so. The German Government has set up a new policy in the world, and that policy is a new doctrine that might shall prevail. They have established under this autocracy the doctrine that, no matter what the international law is, to win is the only true doctrine. That doctrine was started under Bismarck, who won the war against the French people and is being continued by the present Kaiser and his people. And if the Government of the United States, the great democracy that we are, should allow the Germans to win this war or should allow a peace settlement which might be considered a draw, then the doctrine that might shall prevail and that international law shall not govern the nations of the world will be absolutely established by the German Government. And if Germany is ever able to establish the doctrine that international law shall not govern in time of war, but that success, no matter how obtained, shall be the principle, then in future years when other nations perhaps go to war—which I hope will never be the case—the doctrine must necessarily be that the man who can strike quickest and succeed, regardless of international law and the rights of nations shall control, because the Hohenzollerns, or the Empire of Germany, had won such great successes in that manner, and that if one nation attains the right to do so and succeeds it is necessary for others to do the same.

It is not only to the advantage of this great Nation of ours to overcome this autocracy and its false doctrine but it is necessary for each and every nation that it shall be overcome, in order that future generations shall enjoy the freedom which nations have enjoyed under international law in the years past.

Germany has gone strutting through the world regardless of the rights of men, regardless of the rights of nations, regardless of treaties, terming them mere scraps of paper when they stood in her way; treading upon innocent Belgium, not only destroying the government itself but treating the people as it saw fit.

In fact it has strutted through those sections of Europe which it has been able to overrun regardless of the rights of anyone, of humanity, of morality, of international law; and I say that if this doctrine is not downed in the world by this great world war it becomes a doctrine which other nations may see fit to adopt because Germany has been successful. They have taught and they teach their people that the German is a superman; that the Kaiser rules by Divine right; and that other nations are not on an equality with them and their people; that the Kaiser is the greatest man in the world and entitled to rule the world because he rules by Divine right; and I say that that is a doctrine which democracy must down or else the Germans will put it into execution just as surely as they can win the war.

They have sunk our ships. They have murdered our people. They have bombed our Red Cross units. Their spies invest our very Government. In fact, they have been fighting this war regardless of all rights, with the one aim that they shall succeed, and it is up to the great democracy on this side of the Atlantic to show that that doctrine shall not prevail in the world.

As for Maryland, my little State, though she may be small in area, she is rich in patriotism, rich in resources, spreading from the shores of the Atlantic to the coal fields of the Alleghenies. She is ready to devote her entire energy, her people, and her great resources to the prosecution of this war to the very end in order that autocracy shall be downed and that Germany shall be absolutely defeated.

Mr. Chairman, I want to say on the part of the people of Maryland that we stand back of the administration in every way, in every shape, and with every resource in wealth, men, and property, and that we can be called upon at all times. That State, which gave to the country during the War of 1812 that magnificent anthem, the Star-Spangled Banner, is just as patriotic to-day as she was in 1812. [Applause.] And she stands by the Government in the support of the Stars and Stripes, which must be carried to the battle fields of France by such numbers of men as shall win the war. No matter whether it be 1,000,000 or 5,000,000, the war must be won. And I bring you that message from my people, a people who have always given to the country their best men from the early wars until this day, a people true in patriotism, in devotion, and loyalty to the democracy of the land, willing to lay down their lives that it shall never fail and that democracy shall be the light that guides the world. [Applause.]

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. GILLETT. A declaration of war is the most solemn act a legislature can perform. It involves necessarily the sacrifice by those we represent of what they hold dearest—their lives. Moreover it submits the decision of our rights not to a tribunal which is governed by reason and justice and fairness, like the tribunals to which our personal rights are all submitted, but to the arbitrament of brute force, to a tribunal which decides without regard to justice or merit and which weighs nothing but armed might. It is a recession to the savage state and recognizes only those tests to which the beasts and the most ignorant barbarians resort. It is utterly antagonistic to the spirit and hope of modern civilization.

Such an act, therefore, calls for the utmost deliberation and scrutiny. We ought to avoid it if we can. But in this instance I see no possible alternative. We are not creating a new condition, we are simply recognizing a condition which already exists. We are simply saying to our defenders across the seas, who perhaps before this have been battling with the forces of Austria, that we approve and support them.

This war was no voluntary act of ours, which we lightheartedly chose; it was forced upon us by cruel aggressions forbidden alike by the letter of international law and the spirit of humanity, and if we had refused to take up the gage of battle when it was insultingly thrown down at us our cowardice would have been punished by even more unendurable assaults when we would, perhaps, have been in even worse condition to resent and repel them.

As the President has truly said, Austria is but the tool of Germany, and the whole history of Germany's rise to the supremacy of Europe discloses reliance upon but one support, military power, which it has unceasingly developed. McCaulay said, in his famous essay on Frederick the Great:

> The evils produced by his wickedness were felt in lands where the name of Prussia was unknown; and, in order that he might rob a neighbor whom he had promised to defend, black men fought on the coast of Coromandel and red men scalped each other by the Great Lakes of North America.

And to-day the evils produced by the ambition of Frederick's legitimate successor are causing peace-loving boys from the border of those Great Lakes to leave their homes and waste their youthful vigor in the unproductive tasks of military life and to risk their happiness and future in order that this country may forever be free from this menace of Prussian attack, this threatened subjugation by brute force. [Applause.]

We must fight this war to a successful finish. That is the only road to permanent peace. If it should end now in a draw this country would have to waste its millions and billions annually in the support of an army and navy powerful enough to protect us against new aggressions of foreign powers. For this war has brought home to us for the first time how intimately related all nations are to-day and how expensive and how horrible is modern war. Let us, therefore, determine to end it once for all, for us and our children.

I had thought that the same reasons which required a declaration of war against Austria applied to Turkey, and there was the added resentment caused by the massacres of Christians, which shocked the whole neutral world, and to which Germany was an accomplice, since she could have prevented them by simply raising a finger of protest. But I recognize that in these foreign complications the President may have information which is withheld from us, and I am disposed to yield to his opinion.

Doubtless all of us as we have read the great events of the past have often felt the wish that we might have lived in them. Now we find ourselves living in the greatest crisis of all history, and we in this House are to-day transacting one of the historic phases of that crisis. We will perform it with deliberation and regret, as becomes its seriousness, but with determination that there shall be no turning back. And we on this side of the House will vie with you on that side in giving to the Executive ungrudgingly all the powers and resources of the country, that the war we now declare may be brought to a successful conclusion, in the hope that thereby there may be established the whole world over a just and permanent peace. [Applause.]

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHACKLEFORD].

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Mr. Chairman, we are now considering a resolution declaring the existence of a state of war between the United States and Austria. Austria and Germany are making common cause. It is not possible to wage war on Germany alone, because she and Austria are fighting together. In his message on Tuesday the President said:

> We must meet its (Austria's) forces with our own and regard the central powers as but one. The war can be successfully conducted in no other way. We shall go wherever the necessities of this war carry us.

Under our Constitution the President is our Commander in Chief. To-day he is throwing our forces against the German lines in France and Belgium; to-morrow he may find it necessary to strike from Italy through Austria. He should have the largest freedom of action. For that reason I shall vote for the pending resolution.

Many thought it would be best for our country to keep out of the terrible European conflict which now so sadly afflicts the world. A majority, however, were of a different opinion. Congress by an overwhelming vote decided that the United States should enter the war. In a democracy like ours everybody should bow in ready obedience to the lawfully expressed will of the majority. War was declared and every citizen should loyally support it until our country has achieved victory and secured an honorable peace. Our support must be wholehearted and effective. [Applause.]

In this crisis the President must be our leader. No man can now see the end. Peace may come quickly, or we may have a long drawn out war. No one can doubt, however, that in the end we shall be triumphant. The country is to be greatly congratulated upon the unity of her people. With very few exceptions, those who opposed and those who favored the war are united together in one common citizenship, determined that defeat shall never come to our flag. They are ready to devote their all to the cause. Whatever sacrifices are needed they are ready to make. [Applause.]

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS]. [Applause.]

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman and fellow Members, on the 6th of April, after two and a half years of struggle to maintain neutrality, we took the step of declaring war against Germany, upon the conviction that our honor and our safety depended upon it. In the months that have elapsed since then I do not think there was any thoughtful person who thought there was any other course. We have now been at war with Germany for over eight months, and by no sort of fiction can we continue the war with Germany without entering war also with her allies, which in spirit as well as in arms are not separated from the war lords of Europe.

Austria is absolutely under the control of Germany, both from a military standpoint and an economic standpoint. I might also say from a diplomatic intrigue, by which Austria will soon find herself entangled. The brains of every ally of Germany are furnished by Germany, and we are fighting the military autocracy not only headed by Germans in Germany but also of Germany in her influence and control in Austria. And not only that, but under a system of finance whereby Germany robs the mines of France and the munition plants of Belgium and the agricultural resources of other countries that have come under her control she supplies Austria with her weapons of war, and not only supplies her, but furnishes scrip in the form of money and credit with which to pay for those supplies; and to-day Austria is not only a vassal of Germany under military control, but absolutely subject under the control of finance as a debtor to this creditor power. Austria since the war opened has become financially a hopeless vassal of her superior, from which she will never emerge unaided, and the thing that we must recognize immediately is that we can not fight Germany and at the same time be at peace with her allies. One of our greatest dangers just now confronting us is our attempting to reach by diplomacy what must now be accomplished by war. It is well for us to see that we can not do by diplomacy what has got to be done by military power. This is the danger of our country at this very moment, thinking that we can reach conclusions through diplomacy with such powers as our enemies have proved themselves to be instead of through the force of our arms. The time for parleys is past; our cause must now rest with the test of arms. And not only is that true, but it is our duty to the world, speaking to the neutral countries, to announce openly our war against Austria, so that there will be no complication with other countries because of the necessity of their knowing where we stand in regard to Austria. This frankness is required by the laws of all nations; hence our original declaration.

And aside from that this declaration is absolutely necessary that we may be able to deal with the million citizens of Austria who are located in America. We can not with a free hand deal with these people unless we let them and the world know what is our relation with the Austrian Government. It is not fair to them and it is dangerous to us to continue this anomalous position. From the standpoint of our duty to our own honor in this war against Germany and for our safety, and that includes our safety against Austria, a mere vassal of Germany, and from the standpoint of our duty to neutrals who have a right to know where we stand, that they may know their rights as affected by the relation we hold to Austria, and from the standpoint also of our duty to the Austrian citizens in this country and our own protection against dangerous elements in our midst, we have no choice other than here and now to declare that a state of war exists between us and Austria. And I would like to extend it for the same reason to Turkey and Bulgaria, which certainly occupy a similar relation to us as that of Austria; but I am perfectly willing to allow that to pass as a matter of diplomacy if the President thinks it proper to do so, but I am frank to say it must be done later. As a member of the Foreign Affairs Committee I am willing to let the President take the lead in this, but if it should come that we see our interests complicated, because we are in conflict with Turkey and Bulgaria, the same as we are with Austria, we ought to take the step at once as to those countries also. There is no use at this hour of the day to think we can win this war by the hope that there is going to be any weakness on the part of our enemies either in morale, a lack of solidarity, or lack of spirit and equipment. We are not fighting Germany alone. We are fighting Austria, dominated by Germany, and we are fighting Bulgaria, under the same régime, and we are fighting Turkey also. I would like to see every secret place open to these nations in America closed up instantly, that our secrets do not go across the water and thus endanger our sons who are now and will be on the seas. The thing for us to do is to let the world know that we are not only fighting the master, but that we are fighting his vassals as well. Nothing else will avoid our complications in this thing. [Applause.]

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. FLOOD. I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. LONDON].

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, I shall not be able to cover all the ground I desire to cover in the 15 minutes allotted to me, and I ask leave to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, as an illustration of the danger of blindly following established precedent we have before us the resolution providing for a declaration of war against Austria-Hungary, and this is what we read:

> That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to employ the entire naval and military forces of the United States and the resources of the Government to carry on war against the Imperial and Royal Austro-Hungarian Government.

Now, if the President is to use the entire military and naval forces and all the resources of the United States against the Austro-Hungarian Government, that leaves nothing to use against Germany. But how did it happen? Well, there are precedents for it. That was the form of our declaration of war against Germany, and now in declaring war against Austria we use the same words. We are afraid to change one word. We are afraid to think independently, and not only that, but we are afraid to vary the language. The resolution says that we are to use all our resources against Austria-Hungary, which would leave Germany out of it. However, that is neither here nor there. That is simply a kindly criticism of the committee.

As a Socialist I am pledged to vote against the declaration of war. In matters of war I am a teetotaler. I refuse to take the first intoxicating drink. The Socialists of the world in all parliaments have opposed war until the last moment. Had there been a majority of Socialists in the countries of Europe in 1914 there would have been no war. If there were a majority of Socialists in the parliaments of the contending nations to-day, the war would be over to-morrow. It is my obligation to give expression to that sentiment, to represent that body of thought and that international code of ethics by voting against a declaration of war, against the spreading of the horrors of it.

Mr. QUIN. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. LONDON. No; I am sorry I can not yield. I have not enough time. I have explained my position. My reasoning is not binding upon the gentleman from Mississippi.

It applies to me and to the movement, sentiment, and thought I intend to represent. The President said, in dealing with the Russian situation, that the only remedy was to tell the truth. If that be sound in dealing with the situation there, it should be sound everywhere. There is no reason in the world why a Member of the Congress of the United States should hesitate to express opinions which may differ from the President's opinion. There is no reason in the world why we should refuse to discuss international policies. To-day the President concedes that had the slogan of the Russian socialists—no annexations, no punitive indemnities, no contributions—been generally adopted by the allies; had the plea of the people of that long-suffering country, of that land of martyrdom, been listened to, Russia would be to-day the greatest power for international peace.

But what happened? The slogan came from the socialists of Russia, and the reactionaries throughout the world began to denounce it as a German machination; as if you have to bribe people into loving peace; as if you have to corrupt people that they may seek normal conditions; as if you have to poison the mind of the world in order that it should crave for the restoration of the normal life of the world.

To-day, three months too late—no; I hope it is not too late. I am not despondent about the situation there, for I still believe that the Russian people will emerge, in spite of all the difficulties, a great democracy, an irresistible power for international peace. No one in Russia dares suggest even now a separate peace. I am more interested in the moral side, the spiritual side. An appeal should be made not so much to her arms as to her soul. It can be done and it should be done. The President's unequivocal approval of the declaration of revolutionary Russia against annexations, punitive indemnities, and contributions will help. With her slogan our slogan, with her aims our aims, Russia shall be a faithful ally and friend.

My vote against the declaration of war against Austria-Hungary should not be interpreted as an indorsement of the infamous attack by Austria-Hungary on Serbia, which, chronologically speaking, was the beginning of the war.

If you go back 25 or 30 years in European history, it will be impossible to put the finger of blame on any one nation as the exclusive cause of the war. There was a cruel, merciless, conscienceless conflict among the nations for supremacy. What was the Bagdad Railway intrigue except an attempt by Germany to obtain a land route so as to compete with the sea route of Great Britain. Only 12 or 13 years ago the present allies, now valiantly fighting side by side, England and France, were at the point of war. How long is it since Russia and England are friends? Every nation looked upon itself as an economic unit; each of them was trying to outdo all of its rivals and to use its military force in aid of its commerce.

The rivalry for markets, for fields of investment, for spheres of influence, for concessions has kept the peoples of the world in constant fear of one another. Of course it would be wrong to say that the economic factor was the only cause of the war. As I have said in many previous speeches, the presence of monarchical institutions in Europe, the existence of national and race hatreds, the crushing of the smaller nationalities like Serbia, Belgium, and Persia, the striving of the little nations for breathing space, the seeking of access to the ocean by the larger nations—all those things taken together have brought about this conflict.

It is not necessary for us to blindly accept every cause of the European war as a sacred cause for us, because in 1914 when the clash came one ruler spoke in the name of God on the throne of Germany and another incubus spoke in the name of God on the throne of Russia.

It is absurd for us to adopt either the war causes or war objects of August, 1914, as our war causes and our war objects.

Many here would go further than the President. They do not realize that they embarrass him when they talk about helping Italy not only to redeem her own territory, but to march to Vienna. That can not be in the President's mind. If America should help Italy, it should help her to regain the territory which she has lost; but it would be treason against the ideals of the American people to spend a dollar or sacrifice a man to carry out the policy of annexation of territory of others or to punish other nations. [Applause.] That is how I understand the President's message. The President seeks to correct the disastrous impression made by Premier Clemenceau of France—and, by the way, he will not last much longer than the Bolsheviki of Russia. He came out with the slogan: "We will fight until victory," without defining what victory is. The President took the next logical step and attempted to define, as far as it is possible under the circumstances—and the circumstances do not lend themselves very freely to frank discussion—the President indicated that it is not enough to talk about victory and shedding blood until victory is had, but that an effort should be made to define what that victory is. What is that final goal for which the nations are asked to sacrifice themselves? The President has outlined that final goal as the obtaining of a universal peace, which shall exclude forcible annexation, which shall exclude the punishment of nations, which shall exclude punitive contributions, and which shall lay the foundation for universal peace. And there we are up against it.

When you come to laying the foundation for universal peace you will, in the United States, run up against this strange fact, that while the President talks about redeeming the world from armaments and laying the basis for durable and lasting peace throughout the world, which involves international cooperation, which involves international alliances, which involves the possession of an international mind, if you please—while the President has risen to that height the people still talk in terms of narrow, geographical patriotism; of narrow, unreasoning Chauvinism.

People who only nine months ago voted to restrict immigration, to prohibit the admission to the United States of various populations, including those of the smaller nations now under the heels of invaders, are asked to fight for those same people. Ten months ago they voted to prevent them from getting access to this country; to-day they are asked to carry on war for their redemption. It is difficult to digest; it is hard for the average man to assimilate. It can be only understood by one who can reason and dream and feel and hope in terms of the world, in terms of the universe, in terms of humanity, in terms of the human family—the one and indivisible family. It is only then that we can earnestly appeal to world internationalism; it is only then that we can honestly appeal to the world to do away with oppression, monarchism, with autocracy, whether that autocrat be a crowned king or be the uncrowned king by virtue of possessing the oil lands and the coal lands and the natural resources of an otherwise free people. This is Socialism. This is social democracy. This is the internationalism which some fools denounce as anarchism, as tending to disrupt society.

It is because I feel an obligation to give expression to that view that I vote against the declaration of war, anxious as I am that the American people should appear unanimous and united in their longing for a victory for humanity, an irresistible force for universal peace, to be based on no annexations, no punitive indemnities, upon aid to the weaker and smaller nations which have been invaded by the ruthless central powers, with disarmament and international arbitration as a means to prevent wars in the future. In extending my remarks I submit an extract from an address on the Russian revolution which I delivered on the 29th of June in this House. As usual, the opinion of the socialist was disregarded:

Now, I want to speak of the effect of the revolution on the progress of the war. A free people, once realizing that they are free, want to know what they are fighting for. That is self-evident. It stands to reason that a people who have overthrown their Government and have repudiated the internal policies of that Government should, when requested to continue its foreign policy, ask for an opportunity to revise that foreign policy, for an opportunity to find out where the foreign policy is leading, and that is exactly what has happened.

They began to examine what that foreign policy was, in the making of which they had had no part. They began to ask for the democratization of foreign relations, and you know that young democracies are honest and are not diplomatic. A young democracy loves liberty with a pure love. You will find in the oratory of the first 15 or 20 years of the history of this country the breath of pure democracy.

The new Government demanded a reexamination of treaties and tried to find out what the world was fighting for. The new Russia announced that, so far as she was concerned, she wanted no indemnities, no conquests, no oppression of any people no matter however small. She wanted her allies to proclaim the same principles. For some inexplicable reason the American press interpreted this proclamation as a demand for a separate peace—as a desire to surrender to Germany. The slogan "No annexation" necessarily involves the restoration of Belgium to herself, the return to Serbia of her territory, the return of Montenegrin territory to Montenegro, the reestablishment of Roumania.

It necessarily implies the throwing of all possible safeguards around every other little nation in Europe. In protesting against punitive indemnities she but insisted that all warring nations should agree on a settlement of the war which should not crush any of the vanquished nations, which should not impose upon the conquered nations a burden which they would be unable to carry. Their basis for universal peace was entirely in harmony with the principles which the President enunciated in his speeches before the Senate, and especially in the speech of January 22 of this year. Russia proceeded to prove her good faith by waiving all claims upon Constantinople, reserving, of course, the right to insist upon the neutralization of the Dardanelles and by granting the highest degree of autonomy to Finland. It could not have been otherwise with the Socialists playing the part they do in the new Government. The right of every nation to live its own life is a cardinal part of the faith of international socialism. Where the same territory is occupied by several distinct nationalities, the Socialist would give to every such nationality the largest possible measure of cultural autonomy, and where more than one nation claims the right to a particular territory by reason of national affinity, he would let the local population determine its affiliations by a vote of freemen and not by external pressure.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT].

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, when the final roll call is had on this resolution it will be found that it is supported upon both sides of the aisle, receiving but one adverse vote, that of the gentleman who has just spoken, the Socialist Member in this Congress [Mr. LONDON]. Mr. Chairman, it is a strange anomaly, indeed, that the one vote that will be cast in this House in aid of the Kaiser of Germany and the autocracy of Germany will be cast by a Socialist. The gentleman talks about internationalism and about a democracy throughout the world, and yet if this House agreed with him, it is plain now, which was not so plain last April, that autocracy and not democracy would rule the world when this war is over. [Applause.] The gentleman's native country is Russia. Let me say to the gentleman that the overthrow of autocracy in Russia, which has been secured, was possible only through this war that has been waging now for three and a half years. I will say further to the gentleman that Russia is the only independent nation in the world to-day where the Socialists are in temporary control, but let Germany win this war and 24 hours afterwards, instead of democracy in Russia, the black eagle of Prussia will be there with the Kaiser of the German Empire taking its place, and they will wipe out that democracy in Russia and substitute for it the same autocratic government that now exists in Germany. [Applause.]

So I say, Mr. Chairman, that it is strange, indeed, that a man representing the Socialist Party, that pretends to stand stronger than any of the other parties for real democracy and for a people's government, should take a position in the House the only effect of which can be to assist not only autocracy but the worst autocracy the world has every known, not only to continue its rule where it has been ruling but to extend it over the civilized world. I do not believe that the gentleman himself can represent any very large portion of the men who will vote the ticket of his party. If he does, then we must conclude the gentleman and the members of his party have less intelligence than we have heretofore believed they possessed. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the remainder of my time. Will the gentleman from Virginia permit me now to yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CHANDLER]?

Mr. FLOOD. I promised to yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH].

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, how does the time stand?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia has used 52 minutes and the gentleman from Wisconsin 36 minutes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. In view of the fact that the gentleman has used 52 minutes and we have used only 36, will not he permit me to even up the time?

Mr. FLOOD. Very well.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, with the friendliest feeling and most deep felt sympathies for the great majority of the peoples living under the tyranny and oppression of the dual monarchy of Austria-Hungary, it becomes my solemn duty to vote to-day for this resolution. In this sentiment I am most earnest. I feel satisfied that nothing but the most sympathetic feelings exist in this country for the vast majority of these peoples who have for centuries been compelled to submit to the yoke—the oppressive and blood-stained yoke—of Austria-Hungary.

I am not going to detain this House for more than a few moments, but in these few moments I desire to call your attention to some of the different peoples who have for these many centuries been persecuted by this Austro-Hungarian Government. I want to say to you that nearly 60 per cent of these people are anxiously waiting for the happy moment when they can throw off the cruel and despotic yoke of Austria and the unbearable Hapsburgs.

Under the dual monarchy of Austria-Hungary there are to-day almost eight and one-half millions of Bohemians, over five million Poles, four million Ruthenians, over a million and a quarter Slovenians, over five and one-half millions of Serbo-Croatians, almost three and one-quarter millions of Roumanians, and over eight hundred thousand Italians. These people who constitute more than a majority of all the peoples of the dual monarchy living under Austro-Hungarian rule against their wishes and without their consent are suffering the greatest destitution and distress. I venture to say that 95 per cent of these afflicted peoples are ready, willing, and anxious, if the opportunity will but afford itself, to strike against its oppressors, the monarchy of Austria-Hungary and the Hapsburgs.

These people sympathize with the allies. Sympathize, do I say? Why, they look to the allies as their saviors—saviors to release them from these many centuries of the most cruel and almost inhuman bondage that they have suffered under the rule of Austria-Hungary. They feverishly await the overthrow of the German Government that has dominated over Austria for years past, and are eagerly yearning for the day when the downfall of Austria-Hungary will result in their regaining their separate nationalities where each people "will be governed by the consent of the governed."

I know that the men of these nationalities living to-day in the greatest democracy that the world ever knew, the United States of America, fully appreciative of its institutions and opportunities, will do their part and their share to aid the country of their adoption and devotedly serve the cause of humanity and democracy for which we are fighting to-day. [Applause.]

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. Yes.

Mr. BORLAND. I wish to ask the gentleman if there are not a good many people of these nations working in the United States and living here?

Mr. SABATH. There are; and I wish to say that I am in daily contact with these people and I know whereof I speak when I state that 99 per cent are ready and willing to do their part to wage war against Austria, as well as against Germany. [Applause.] They have enlisted by the thousands; yes, by the ten thousands; and I know that they will continue to serve the country that has protected them, a country that has given them the liberties for which they have been struggling and fighting for centuries in the old countries of Europe.

Mr. BORLAND. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. BORLAND. Does not the gentleman believe that we could safely and properly exempt some of these people from the alien-enemy proclamation?

Mr. SABATH. I wish to say to the gentleman from Missouri that I have prepared just such a resolution and the moment the present resolution declaring war against Austria-Hungary is adopted I shall introduce a resolution to exempt them from the alien-enemy proclamation, and I now take the privilege of inserting a copy of said resolution:

Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 181) providing that Bohemians, Moravians, Slovaks, Roumanians, Poles, Ruthenians, Serbs, Croatians, Slovenes, and Italians be and are specifically excluded from the classification of alien enemies as subjects of Austria-Hungary.

Whereas this Congress, upon the recommendation of the President of the United States, has declared that a state of war exists between the United States and Austria-Hungary; and

Whereas certain States and Provinces within the Empire of Austria-Hungary have been subjugated to its rule without their consent and against the wishes of the inhabitants; and

Whereas the peoples of these States and Provinces, to-wit, the Bohemians, Moravians, Slovaks, Ruthenians, Poles, Serbs, Croatians, Slovenes, Italians, and Roumanians, suffering from the persecution and oppression inflicted upon them by the Empire of Austria-Hungary, have sought and been given the haven of these United States in very large numbers; and

Whereas these people gratefully appreciate the shelter and opportunities given them by the United States and are now eager and anxious to serve this country in its present grave crisis; and

Whereas throughout the breadth and length of this country thousands of men of these races have enlisted in the several branches of the armed forces of this country to sustain and aid it in the holy fight for democracy and the freedom of all nations, large and small; and

Whereas many more thousands of the men of those races have been called to serve and are now serving under and by virtue of the selective-draft act; and

Whereas the said Bohemians, Moravians, Slovaks, Ruthenians, Poles, Serbs, Croatians, Slovenes, Italians, and Roumanians are technically considered subjects of Austria-Hungary, which status is beyond their control and contrary to their wishes; and

Whereas by the declaration of this Congress that a state of war exists between the United States and Austria-Hungary these said Bohemians, Moravians, Slovaks, Poles, Ruthenians, Serbs, Croatians, Slovenes, Italians, and Roumanians at present serving this country in the several branches of its armed forces who have not declared their intention to become citizens of the United States or who having declared their intention to become citizens of the United States have never become fully naturalized, are immediately considered alien enemies, thereby being restrained in their patriotic desire to serve this country wholeheartedly and devotedly and to give their all to aid the cause of humanity and democracy; and

Whereas they and other peoples of these States and Provinces who are noncombatants would be barred from entering, working, conducting business, or residing within certain territories prohibited to alien enemies; and

Whereas such a condition would cause a grave wrong and irreparable injury to peoples whose loyalty and devotion to this country stands unquestioned and unchallenged, and who unselfishly and unreservedly have unheld the cause of the allied powers against the central powers: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the said Bohemians, Moravians, Slovaks, Ruthenians, Poles, Serbs, Croatians, Slovenes, Italians, and Roumanians be, and they are hereby, specifically excluded from the classification of alien enemies wherever such classification now exists as to subjects of Austria-Hungary by reason of any act of Congress of the United Staes or regulations established by the President of the United States and under such rules and regulations as the President may from time to time promulgate; and be it further

Resolved, That the said Bohemians, Moravians, Slovaks, Poles, Ruthenians, Serbs, Croatians, Slovenes, Italians, and Roumanians shall not be barred from the armed forces of the United States due to their status as (unwilling) subjects of Austria-Hungary and that they shall be subject to the operation of the selective-draft act.

Mr. BORLAND. I am heartily with the gentleman on that proposition.

Mr. SABATH. And before I conclude I wish to say, in answer to my colleague from New York [Mr. LONDON], that I, as much as he, am interested in the cause of the Russian people, but first, I am an American, and paramount and superior to my interest in the peoples of Russia is my interest in the welfare of my country. [Applause.] And it is the duty of every man, whether he be a socialist, pacifist, or anything else, living under the Stars and Stripes in this free country of ours, partaking of its benefits and receiving its advantages, to do his part, freely and ungrudgingly, and thereby demonstrate that he is deserving to live here and enjoy the blessings of liberty and the freedom of democracy. [Applause.] The gentleman from New York [Mr. LONDON] states to us that the socialists are opposed to war, yet did they not wage war in Russia to secure freedom? And is not this a much holier war and are we not fighting for a cause even greater than they have fought for in Russia? My sympathies are deeply with these people who fought for the freedom of Russia, but we are fighting to-day not only for the freedom of the people of Russia but for the freedom of all the nations of the world. [Applause.]

Born in Bohemia, whose people have suffered from the despotism and persecutions of the Government of Austria-Hungary to an even greater extent than the other peoples heretofore mentioned, I am glad of the opportunity that I to-day can raise my voice and cast my vote for the resolution declaring war against Austria-Hungary. [Applause.]

Not wishing to detain the House any further, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to embody in my speech an article on Austria written by Jaroslav F. Smetanka.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by inserting the article to which he refers. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

DISMEMBERMENT OF AUSTRIA.

The foundations for the present Austrian Empire were laid in 1526, when Ferdinand, to whom his elder brother Charles conveyed the Hapsburg dominions on the Danube and in the Alps, secured his election to the thrones of Bohemia and Hungary made vacant by the death of his brother-in-law Louis. Austria-Hungary of to-day contains in addition to these three elements only the Polish-Ruthenian Provinces of Galicia and Bukowina on the northeast and smaller districts inhabited by Italians and Croatians on the southwest. The two Turkish Provinces of Bosnia and Herzegovina, annexed recently, are purely Serbo-Croat in race and language.

Out of this brief statement of the origin and growth of the Hapsburg Empire one fact stands out clearly, namely, that this great power, second in area and third in population among the States of Europe, is not the product of the expansion of a single race occupying constantly new lands and assimilating new people. The races that the Hapsburgs gathered under their sway are still in existence, full of energy, conscious of their separate nationality, eager to live their own life, fighting bitterly all attempts to make them over into something else, whether it be into Germans or Magyars. The dynasty could have justified and made possible the continued existence of this collection of nations and fragments of nations only if it had allowed each race full opportunity for self-development and widest possible measure of autonomy. But the dynasty was German. Up to 1866 its ambition was to be the head of the entire German nation, of which the Hapsburg territories were to form an integral part. When the Prussian kings supplanted the rulers of Austria in the leadership of Germany, Francis Joseph hesitated for a while and was on the verge of making his Empire a federal structure with equal rights for all races, but instead of that he put into effect a compromise by means of which he pacified the Magyars and sacrificed all the rest. He divided his Empire into two parts. In the Austrian half of it the German minority was made the ruling race, while the Hungarian half, with its Slav and Rouman majority, was turned over to the Magyars.

A few figures will show the galling injustice of this arrangement. But before Austrian official statistics are cited it is necessary to mention that they are notoriously biased in favor of the two ruling races. In 1910 the racial figures for the Austrian half of the monarchy were as follows:

Germans	9,950,266
Bohemians	6,435,983
Poles	4,967,984
Little Russians	3,608,844
Slovenians	1,252,940
Serbo-Croatians	783,334
Italians	768,422
Roumanians	275,115

The German population, which numbers only 35.58 per cent, has a majority in Parliament and treats the Slavs, who number more than 60 per cent, as "minderwertig," inferior people.

In Hungary the Slavs and the Roumanians fared even worse, for the Magyars, an Asiatic race, proceeded ruthlessly to make the words "Magyar" and "Hungarian" synonymous. Everything non-Magyar was treason against the Hungarian State, and races that lived in Hungary when the Magyars were still an unknown tribe wandering on the steppes of Central Asia were condemned to extinction. This barbarous policy did bring results, for in 1910 the Magyars, according to their statistics, for the first time formed a bare majority of the people of Hungary. The figures for 1910 are as follows:

Magyars	10,050,575
Roumanians	2,949,027
Germans	2,037,435
Slovaks	1,967,970
Croatians	1,833,167
Serbians	1,106,471
Little Russians	472,587

The policy of oppression pursued by the two ruling races of the dual empire made the collapse of the whole crazy structure of the Hapsburg monarchy inevitable sooner or later. For years, as Francis Joseph was growing old, speculation was rife about the fate of Austria after his death. As it is, Francis Joseph preceded his empire into the tomb by only a year or so. When he declared war on Serbia he signed the death warrant of the greatness of the Hapsburg dynasty.

To-day not a single one of the 11 races subject to Emperor Charles desires the continuation of Austria-Hungary. Poles expect the restoration of Poland; Little Russians want to join 25,000,000 of their kinsmen in Russia; Roumanians hope to form a part of greater Roumania; Croatians, Slovenians, and Serbians plan the union of their race with Serbia and Montenegro in a great Yugo-Slav kingdom. Italians of Austria will naturally be joined to Italy. Bohemians and Slovaks want independence in a common Czechoslovak State. Magyars care for only one thing, to maintain their tyranny over all Hungary, while the Germans want the closest union with or even annexation to imperial Germany. The only Austrian left is the emperor. Dismemberment of Austria will hurt Emperor Charles in pride and pocket, but it will be welcomed by the overwhelming majority of the people of the empire.

During the nineteenth century the Turk was the sick man of Europe. To-day that ignoble rôle is played by Austria. The sooner it is partitioned in accordance with the legitimate aspirations of its races the better for the peace of the world.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I desire to say that from time to time upon the floor of this House I have assured the country that the great mass of Bohemians, Moravians, Slovaks, Ruthenians, Poles, Serbs, Croatians, Slovenes, Italians, and Roumanians were true to the highest ideals of this country and its institutions, and to-day, in this hour of trial, when every resident of our country is met with the test of loyalty and devotion, I again wish to assure you, an assurance coupled with supreme confidence, that these peoples have a sublime faith in the majestic leadership of the greatest statesman of the world to-day, Woodrow Wilson, the President of the United States [applause]; that to them the protection of the principles of democracy which sheds its light upon the darkened countries of all oppressed nations is dearer than life itself, and for its continuation and further extension, so that all the peoples of the entire world might receive the blessings of liberty and democracy that they have received, they are willing to make the supreme sacrifice. To their oppressed countrymen across the seas they extend the hand of "justice and mercy" and call to them, "Awake! awake! Your fetters shall be broken and your bonds destroyed, and once again, if you join with us, you will enjoy the freedom of democracy and the blessings of liberty." I know, Mr. Chairman, and I say this from the depth of my heart, that these peoples who have enjoyed the great blessings of this country are true and will always be found true and loyal to these United States, her allies, and to the great struggle for humanity and democracy. [Extended applause.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed joint resolution of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. J. Res. 111. Joint resolution declaring that a state of war exists between the Imperial and Royal Austro-Hungarian Government and the Government and the people of the United States, and making provision to prosecute the same.

The announcement was received with applause.

AUSTRIA-HUNGARY.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER].

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to read to the committee a telegram which I received this morning:

CENTERVILLE, IOWA, December 6, 1917.

Hon. H. M. TOWNER,
Washington, D. C.:

Large number of Croation miners desire first papers. They are loyal and hate Austria more even than we do. If war is declared on Austria why should not exception be made to Croations so far as admitting them to citizenship is concerned?

Senator J. M. WILSON.
G. C. ELLIOTT,
Clerk District Court.

Mr. Chairman, of course I realize that it would be improper to offer any amendment to this declaration of war. We have just been assured by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] that a resolution will be introduced in which these men who have recently been the subjects of Austria will be excepted from the operation of the alien-enemy act. There is no disposition to punish these men, who were unwilling subjects and are now the friends of America and not of Austria.

It is sometimes very hard for us to realize the conditions that exist in the dual monarchy of Austria-Hungary. Austria has a population of about 30,000,000 people, and yet there are but 10,000,000 Germans in Austria. Hungary has a population of about 20,000,000 people, and there are only about 2,000,000 Germans in Hungary. The combined populations of Austria and Hungary are about 50,000,000 people, and in the entire Austro-Hungarian Empire there are only 12,000,000 Germans. Yet German autocracy rules Austria-Hungary to-day. These people who have been referred to by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH], men who are now in America because they desire to free themselves from the rule of this German autocracy in their country, certainly ought not to be punished because of their loyalty and devotion to republican principles rather than to autocracy. So these people will be taken care of.

We do not all realize that in this Austro-Hungarian Empire there are a large number of nationalities, almost all of whom except the German population, who constitute less than one-fourth of the entire population, are not in harmony with the ruling class that dominates the policies of Austria. That being true, we may look forward to the time, I think with a reasonable degree of probability, when these men, constituting as they do almost separate nationalities, will be allowed to free themselves from the Austro-Hungarian yoke and from the German domination that now governs that country.

These people who have sent me this telegram are Slavic in race and are closely associated with the Serbians. Their sympathies are with them; they speak the same language and they have the same literature as Serbia. They are against the German autocracy that rules Austria-Hungary to-day. If they were allowed to determine their own destiny they would either organize for themselves a separate government, as they had for 200 years, or else they would ally themselves with those with whom they are most nearly allied, with the Serbians. We know the conditions that exist in Bohemia. We know the conditions that exist in Hungary. We know that these races and these peoples are not in sympathy with German domination of these countries. In the declaration of war which we will soon pass with such enthusiasm and unanimity we will be fighting the battle of those subject races of Austria, and when the hour of final victory shall come, as come it will, they will see the dawn of a new day of freedom and self-government.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. MEEKER].

Mr. MEEKER. Mr. Chairman, I have more respect for and more confidence in any man in the German, Austrian, Bulgarian, or Turkish Army than I have for a man who asks the protection of the American flag but refuses to fight for it. [Applause.]

We have a lot of goosefleshy individuals in this country who are trying to escape from this struggle on the plea of their love for the men who are trying to destroy our Nation. There are only two sides to this war, and, as the Master said 2,000 years ago, "He who is not for me is against me."

There may have been neutral ground between belligerents before we entered this war. There is no neutral ground between the United States and her enemies for a Member of the American Congress or for a citizen of the United States.

All I wish to say in regard to this resolution is that I speak the overwhelming conviction, wish, desire, and purpose of the men of the tenth district of Missouri when I vote not only for the declaration of war against Austria-Hungary, but also for a declaration of war against Turkey and Bulgaria and all other friends of kaiserism and military despotism at the earliest possible moment in which we can get to that vote. [Applause.]

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. POWERS].

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Chairman, I was opposed to the declaration of war between the United States and the Imperial German Government. As an original proposition, I would vote against a declaration of war between this country and the Royal Austro-Hungarian Government. But the United States can not win this war by fighting part of our enemies part of the time. We must fight all of our enemies all of the time, if we expect victory to crown our efforts. I shall, therefore, vote for the resolution declaring war on Austria; and I regret that the language of the resolution is not broad enough to include all of our enemies. We are in the war against my will and over my protest, but there is only one thing left for this country now to do, and that is to win it; and I shall cast my vote for every reasonable measure that leads in that direction.

THE PRESIDENT'S PATRIOTISM IS NOT THE ONLY BRAND.

But I dissent very radically from the position taken by many Democrats that theirs and President Wilson's particular brand of patriotism is the only kind, and that all who disagree with them are miscreants and traitors. I decline to have my patriotism measured by an unswerving devotion to all the things said, and all the acts done, by a Democratic President. "Stand by the President," is their slogan. My answer to that is, that I will, so long as I believe he stands for the welfare of our own country but no further. "There should be no politics in this war" is an expression often heard from Democratic sources. To that I agree, but I abominate and abhor a one-sided truce. A political armistice during the progress of the war is perfectly proper provided it be observed by both sides. An armistice, however, that provides that the Republican Party shall cease the work of organization and education relative to the fundamental differences between the two dominant parties—an armistice that demands that the Republican Members of Congress and Republicans generally throughout the country shall cease to be Republicans, or to assert their Republicanism, until after the war is over, and to stand by, defend, and uphold all that the Democrats have done and will do during the progress of this war, does not commend itself to me or to my Republicanism, especially in view of the fact that the Democrats are busier than ever, the war notwithstanding, in getting ready for the next campaign.

SHALL THE REPUBLICAN PARTY GO BURY ITSELF?

Shall the Republican Party go bury itself simply because the war is on? Shall it go over, bag and baggage, to the Democratic Party and help to elect Democrats to all the offices, big and little, throughout the country simply because the war is on? Does not history prove beyond question that the Republican Party has never been lacking in patriotism? If any party has been guilty of laches along this line, has it not been the Democratic Party?

If the Republicans are to forget politics for the time being, should not President Wilson and the Democratic Party likewise forget them? If party politics is to be banished from the brain of man until the war is won, will not some well-informed Democrat please tell me why it is that since the war began, as well as before, the Democratic Party has had its candidates out for every office in every State in this Union—local, district, and State—where the Democrats have had even a remote chance of winning? Will somebody point out a single instance where President Wilson was opposed to the election of a Democrat and for the election of a Republican for any office anywhere, large or small, since the war began? If politics and party advantage are not to be dreamed of until this war is over, as the Democrats solemnly admonish us, why do not the President and his party at least, some time, somewhere, and upon some occasion, advocate the election of some Republican?

Not long since there was a special election in the sixth Indiana congressional district. The Democratic nominee had, as a former Member of this House, voted against every measure for the increase of the Army and the Navy, and had denounced all war preparations as machinations of the munition makers and the war gods generally. He was a confirmed pacifist and anti-preparedness advocate. His Republican opponent declared that he would, if elected, support the Government's war measures from start to finish. Notwithstanding all this, his election was opposed by President Wilson, who wrote a letter urging the election of the Democratic nominee.

REPUBLICANS AND DEMOCRATS ALIKE ARE BEHIND THE GOVERNMENT.

We are in the war. Republicans and Democrats alike are behind the administration in trying to bring it to a successful conclusion. If President Wilson would cause the resignation of one-half of his Democratic Cabinet and put men like LODGE, Root, and Roosevelt in their places, does anybody doubt that it would aid greatly the successful prosecution of the war? If President Wilson would cause the resignation of even one-third of the Democratic officeholders whose duties are largely that of helping win the war and put a like number of equally efficient Republicans in their places and show a like regard for the other political parties in this country, does anybody doubt that it would put added vim, unity, and enthusiasm in the fight against a common foe? Ours seems to be the only belligerent nation where party lines are drawn in selecting men of affairs to steer the ship of state in this world crisis. Although the war is on, President Wilson is going ahead making political appointments in the same old way as though we were at peace with all the world. When the suggestion was made that Col. Theodore Roosevelt be put on the delegation to the conference of the allies because of his eminent fitness and extensive knowledge of war problems, the matter was dismissed with the statement that his appointment would "not be in keeping with nonpartisanship." The President then proceeded to appoint Col. House, the well-known and widely advertised Democratic politician from the State of Texas, and Vance McCormick, chairman of the Democratic National Committee in the last election.

The Federal Reserve Board controls the Federal reserve banks. Money is nonpartisan, but the Federal Reserve Board is not. It is 85 per cent Democratic. It was made so by President Wilson. It seems to be the purpose of the President and his advisers to mobilize all the talent and all the bravery and all the wealth and all the politics and all the patriotism of the country and put them all under the undisputed control of Democratic partisans.

PRESIDENT WILSON'S OPINION OF REPUBLICANS.

President Wilson once said of Republicans that "some of them are blind and most of them are ignorant." While the President is noted for changing his mind, it would seem that on this one subject the public need not expect any change. Yet if Republicans failed to stand by the President in all he does and says 24 hours of every day, and at frequent intervals during that time failed to holla, "Hurrah for Wilson!" then they are subjected to the grave charge of disloyalty to their country. The command is: "Leave it all to the President." In no other belligerent country in the world is there an attempt in evidence to exclude the legislative branch of government from all consideration and influence in connection with the governmental program.

THE PEOPLE DEMAND PUBLICITY AND TRUTH AND SOME PARTICIPATION IN THE AFFAIRS OF THEIR GOVERNMENT.

The people demand publicity and truth about this war; they demand a voice in how it shall be conducted. Upon their shoulders the burden of it falls. They are not willing to leave it all to President Wilson. The American people have a right to know where their soldiers are, for instance. They have a right to know something of the progress of our armies, something of the efficiency and work of our Navy. The people have a right to know whether their money is being wisely and economically expended in the progress of this war. For months to come we may expect to see the Democratic administration busily engaged in investigating itself to see what it has been doing. If the same mystery and secrecy that have heretofore marked the progress of this war shall hereafter prevail, all the powerful blows, so far as the country is concerned, that this Government is preparing to strike at the enemy will be struck in the dark, and all the mighty weapons which are being forged will be used in secret. This Democratic administration acts as though the war was a private musical at the White House, to be witnessed by and participated in only by the President and his closest friends. [Applause.]

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I believe I have two minutes remaining of the hour, if that is the correct interpretation of the agreement.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee). The Chair will state that the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] and the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLOOD] control all of the time for general debate, no matter how long it continues.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. That was my understanding of the agreement, but there were others who put a different interpretation upon it, and therefore I made the inquiry of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The agreement was that all of the time for general debate should be controlled by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLOOD] and the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER].

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. That is as I understood the agreement. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND].

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, it is evident from the temper of this House and of the American Congress that, with the exception of the gentleman from New York [Mr. LONDON], there will probably not be a vote cast against this resolution for a declaration of war against the Imperial Austro-Hungarian Government.

Some question may be raised as to whether we should also declare war against the remaining allies of the Germanic federation—Turkey and Bulgaria. I am free to say that I expect to vote in accordance with the suggestion of the State Department that the declaration be limited at this time to the Austro-Hungarian Government, and yet it seems to me that it is merely a prelude to a declaration of war against the remaining allies—Turkey and Bulgaria. The same causes, possibly in a less degree, which move us to declare a war against Austria must lead eventually, and that very soon, in my judgment, to a declaration against the remaining allies. These causes are the paramount necessity which to-day exists for the close cooperation between those engaged in fighting this great alliance of autocracy. [Applause.]

The outstanding lesson of the present stage of this war is the need for close cooperation between the allies and a unity of plan and purpose which will match the splendid unity and efficiency of Germany. It is apparent that Germany has reduced Austria, Bulgaria, and Turkey to a position of vassal States and that all plans of campaign are made from some central office in Germany. Germany is thus enabled to shift troops from one battle front to another and to provide for their equipment, supply, and reenforcement. As a result it strikes sudden, powerful, and effective blows at any point in the allied line which seems to offer a favorable opportunity.

The allies, on the contrary, have been working along single lines. There has been no concert of action, except so far as has been exhibited by France and England on the western front. The Italian campaign has been a single effort and the campaigns of Great Britain in western Asia have been conducted without cooperation with any of the other allies. The heroic efforts of Serbia and Roumania were not properly supported and resulted in disaster to the allied cause and in the material strengthening of Germany. It is not improbable that the Russian situation could have been much better controlled through such a council of the allies than in any other way. The supreme need of the hour is a permanent war council of the allies, sitting in Paris. [Applause.] This I understand to be the program of President Wilson and Mr. Lloyd-George.

On this permanent war council the United States should be represented by a civilian and a military expert. The war council should be in full touch with all of the battle plans of the allies. It should be completely and accurately informed of every change in the situation in the various countries, both external and internal. It should be advised at all times of the state of the resources of each country in each necessary line of military supplies. It should know the number of men available for any particular campaign, transportation problems, the time required for their transfer to the point where they are to be used, and generally the important facts upon which to base a plan of campaign which could be carried out effectively and promptly.

The element of surprise is not to be overlooked, and the allies ought to be in a position to strike against the weak points in the enemies' lines, wherever they may be found.

Much has been said of the need of a supreme military commander for the allied forces. This does not seem to me to be of the primary importance of a war council. Whether the armies shall be put under the command of one general, and if so, from what nation he shall be chosen, is, in my opinion, a secondary question. Such a commander in chief could lead the troops which were furnished him, but he could not control the great economic forces of the separate nations that would be necessary to assemble, transport, and supply those troops.

The commander in chief would necessarily rely upon the separate contributions of the several nations, unless he were supported by a joint body having power to coordinate all of the authorities of the allies. Each country should furnish not what it happens to be willing to furnish but what it can furnish best and quickest in accordance with a general plan.

No better illustration of the necessity for such cooperation is to be found than in the failure of the Italian campaign in the Alps. If an allied war council had been in existence, it should have been charged with the duty of passing upon every feature of the proposed campaign of Italy into Austria.

If it were determined that the campaign was sufficiently important to the cause of the allies to justify Italy in beginning it, then the full force of the allied nations should be pledged to guarantee its success. [Applause.] Italy should have been furnished with sufficient guns, ammunition, transportation, and reenforcements, if necessary, to make it humanly certain that it would succeed in its plans and make impossible such a disaster as did occur. If the allied war council had disapproved the plan of Italy, then Italy should not have been encouraged to pursue it by any supplies from the allies.

The council here suggested is not a mere consulting or advisory body—not a debating society. It should be empowered to formulate plans and make requisitions upon the allies which would have the full moral weight of all the allies behind them. The responsibility for the success of the war should be boldly assumed by the council, and the risk and odium of a failure to live up to the concerted plans should be placed squarely upon the shoulders of any nation that saw fit to default in its part of the program.

The effect of the repeated failure of plans of campaigns made by the allies has been to encourage the stubborn resistance of Germany and to strengthen the morale of the German Army and the public opinion of the German Nation. Similarly it has had the effect upon the allied nations of demoralizing in some degree their morale and inducing the feeling that Germany is invincible.

All statesmen recognize that if this prestige of success on the part of Germany can once be broken that the war can be brought to a speedy end. Germany is slowly weakening, and its misguided people are kept under the iron rule of Prussianism mainly by the carefully propagated doctrine of the invincibility of Prussian autocracy. This doctrine of the power of autocracy is the great danger to the democracy of the world to-day. If it succeeds, the world will not be safe for democracy.

With an allied war council in existence, general plans of campaign can be made which would be carried out so effectively that sledge-hammer blows will be struck on the German line at a point at which success seems most probable. Germany will be taught that these campaigns by the allies are not sporadic attempts of separate nations, which can be easily baffled, as has been true in the past. It will realize that a campaign once begun along a certain line will be carried through with determination to a final victory. This feeling on the part of Germany that there is no escape from the relentless pursuit of the allies will do more than any other one thing to break down the spirit of that country and bring the war to a speedy close, with a minimum expenditure of men and money.

The present method of independent action on the part of the allies is dragging the war out to an interminable length and has resulted in useless sacrifice of thousands of lives and an immense amount of property. Such a war council is the supreme need of the allies. It is the duty of Congress to authorize and provide for such a permanent council at the earliest possible moment, and then it is the duty of the allies to bend all of their energies to carry out harmoniously the plans so agreed upon.

Therefore, I am ready in the immediate future to vote for a declaration of war against Bulgaria and Turkey, in order that we may be able to cooperate fully with our allies in Europe and bring about a speedy, durable, and just peace. We are fighting the great battle of democracy; we are fighting the last remnant of autocracy in this world. Will peace come? Aye; peace will come, but it will be no patched-up peace; it will be no premature peace; it will be no armed truce, leading to another terrible struggle; it will be no peace with a monarch who claims that the most sacred international treaties are mere scraps of paper; it will be no peace with a despot who claims a partnership with Almighty God. It will be a peace founded upon the deep faith of nations; a peace between average men; a peace sealed by the voice of the people, beyond and above which we Americans recognize no power beneath the throne of God. [Applause.] Will peace come? When? Peace will come, as President Wilson told the Pope, when the flag of feudalism goes down forever in this world. [Applause.]

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I yield now to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SIEGEL].

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Chairman, the Senate has shown that the time for talk is over and that the time for action has come. When Grant stood before Vicksburg he was asked what he demanded. He demanded the unconditional surrender of Vicksburg. To-day the democracy of the world demands the unconditional surrender of autocracy. There is much more that I would like to say now, but time is short. One thing I do want to say. I say to my friend from New York, Mr. LONDON, that the people of his district and those Socialists who are in mine who voted for my opponent, Mr. Hillquitt, at the present time are behind the Government of the United States and behind the people of this country in their determination to see this war through. I hope that by the time a vote comes he will have reconsidered what he said here to-day and will stand shoulder to shoulder with the rest of the Members of this House and show the country and the world that the House of Representatives can do what the Senate has done, namely, vote unanimously for war against Austria.

Mr. Chairman, the Committee on Foreign Affairs has ably stated why we should declare war against Austria. I therefore deem it wise to read the important parts of that record and report. It is as follows:

ACTIVITIES OF AUSTRIAN AMBASSADOR AND CONSULS.

In September, 1915, it was discovered that Ambassador Dumba and Austrian consuls in St. Louis and elsewhere were implicated in instigating strikes in American manufacturing plants engaged in the production of munitions of war. An American citizen named Archibald, traveling under an American passport, had been intrusted with dispatches in regard to this matter from Dumba and Bernstorff to their Governments. These acts were admitted by Dumba. By reason of the admitted purpose and intent of Dumba to conspire to cripple business industries in the United States, and by reason of the flagrant violation of diplomatic propriety in employing an American citizen protected by an American passport as a secret bearer of official dispatches through the lines of an enemy of Austria-Hungary, the Austro-Hungarian Government was requested to recall Dumba.

The Austrian consuls at St. Louis and New York were implicated with Dumba in these transactions, particularly in the circulation of strike propaganda. They were implicated in procuring forged passports from the United States for the use of their countrymen in going home.

Long before the above activities were made public, our Government had evidence that the Austrian diplomatic and consular service was being used in this country for Germany's warlike purposes.

AUSTRIA'S POSITION AS TO SUBMARINE WARFARE.

While Austria's submarine warfare has been of a very limited character, they have adopted and adhered to the policy of the ruthless submarine warfare of the Imperial German Government.

After diplomatic relations with Germany had been broken the department on February 14, 1917, dispatched the following telegram to the American embassy at Vienna, surveying briefly the position of the Austrian Government on submarine warfare:

"In the American note of December 6, 1915, to the Austro-Hungarian Government in the Ancona case, this Government called attention to the views of the Government of the United States on the operations of submarines in naval warfare which had been expressed in no uncertain terms to the ally of Austria-Hungary, and of which full knowledge on the part of the Austro-Hungarian Government was presumed. In its reply of December 15, 1915, the Imperial and Royal Government stated that it was not possessed with authentic knowledge of all of the pertinent correspondence of the United States, nor was it of the opinion that such knowledge would be sufficient to cover the Ancona case, which was of essentially a different character from those under discussion with the Berlin Government. Nevertheless, in reply to the American note of December 19, 1915, the Austro-Hungarian Government, in its note of December 29, stated:

"'As concerns the principle expressed in the very esteemed note that hostile private ships, in so far as they do not flee or offer resistance, may not be destroyed without the persons on board having been placed in safety, the Imperial and Royal Government is able substantially to assent to this view of the Washington Cabinet.'"

Moreover, in the case of the Persia, the Austro-Hungarian Government, in January, 1916, stated in effect that while it had received no information with regard to the sinking of the Persia, yet, in case its responsibility were involved, the Government would be guided by the principles agreed to in the Ancona case.

"Within one month thereafter, the Imperial and Royal Government, coincidentally with the German declaration of February 10, 1916, on the treatment of armed merchantmen announced that 'All merchant vessels armed with cannon for whatever purpose, by this very fact lose the character of peaceable vessels,' and that, 'Under these conditions orders have been given to Austro-Hungarian naval forces to treat such ships as belligerent vessels.'

"In accordance with this declaration several vessels with Americans on board have been sunk in the Mediterranean, presumably by Austrian submarines, some of which were torpedoed without warning by submarines flying the Austrian flag, as in the cases of the British steamers Secondo and Welsh Prince. Inquiries made through the American ambassador at Vienna as to these cases have so far elicited no information and no reply.

"Again, on January 31, 1917, coincidently with the German declaration of submarine danger zones in waters washing the coasts of the entente countries, the Imperial and Royal Government announced to the United States Government that Austria-Hungary and its allies would from February 1 'prevent by every means any navigation whatsoever within a definite closed area.'

"From the foregoing it seems fair to conclude that the pledge given in the Ancona case and confirmed in the Persia case is essentially the same as that given in the note of the Imperial German Government dated May 4, 1916, viz, 'In accordance with the general principles of visit and search and destruction of merchant vessels recognized by international law, such vessels, both within and without the area declared as a naval war zone, shall not be sunk without warning and without saving human lives, unless these ships attempt to escape or offer resistance,' and that this pledge has been modified to a greater or less extent by the declarations of the Imperial and Royal Government of February 10, 1916, and January 31, 1917. In view, therefore, of the uncertainty as to the interpretation to be placed upon those declarations, and particularly this latter declaration, it is important that the United States Government be advised definitely and clearly of the attitude of the Imperial and Royal Government in regard to the prosecution of submarine warfare in these circumstances.

"Please bring this matter orally to the attention of the Austrian Government and request to be advised as to whether the pledge given in the Ancona and Persia cases is to be interpreted as modified or withdrawn by the declarations of February 10, 1916, and January 31, 1917. If after your conversation it seems advisable, you may hand to the minister for foreign affairs a paraphrase of this instruction, leaving the quoted texts verbatim."

In reply, the Austrian Government, in an aide memoire of March 2, 1917, after reviewing the illegal blockade measures of the allies, stated that "it now as heretofore firmly adheres to the assurances given by it" in the Ancona case.

The Austro-Hungarian Government also stated that Austro-Hungarian submarines had taken no part in the sinking of the British steamers Secondo and Welsh Prince, and that "the assurance which it gave the Washington Cabinet in the Ancona case, and renewed in the Persia case, has neither been withdrawn or restricted by its declarations of February 10, 1916, and January 31, 1917."

The Austro-Hungarian note endeavors, through a legal argument, to show consistency between these assurances and its declarations. In this way the Austro-Hungarian Government evades a direct answer to the American inquiry, but in its argument it substantially adheres to the declaration of January 31, 1917, for it states that—

"The entire declaration is essentially nothing else than a warning to the effect that no merchant ship may navigate the sea zones accurately defined in the declaration."

And that—

"The Imperial and Royal Government is, however, unable to accept a responsibility for the loss of human lives which, nevertheless, may result from the destruction of armed ships or ships encountered in the closed zones."

In view of this acceptance and avowal by the Austrian Government of the policy which had led to a breach of relations between the United States and Germany, the Government of the United States found it impossible to receive Dumba's successor, Count Tarnowski. The Government felt that it could not receive a new ambassador from a country which joined Germany in her submarine policy, even though its participation might be by verbal and not physical cooperation. This was communicated to the Austrian Government in a telegram from the department dated March 28, 1917.

In his message to Congress of April 2, 1917, the President said, in respect to the attitude of Austria-Hungary:

"I have said nothing of the Governments allied with the Imperial Government of Germany because they have not made war upon us or challenged us to defend our right and our honor. The Austro-Hungarian Government has, indeed, avowed its unqualified indorsement and acceptance of the reckless and lawless submarine warfare adopted now without disguise by the Imperial German Government, and it has therefore not been possible for this Government to receive Count Tarnowski, the ambassador recently accredited to this Government by the Imperial and Royal Government of Austria-Hungary; but that Government has not actually engaged in warfare against citizens of the United States on the seas, and I take the liberty, for the present at least, of postponing a discussion of our relations with the authorities at Vienna. We enter this war only where we are clearly forced into it because there are no other means of defending our rights."

The Austrian note of January 31, 1917, proclaimed the same submarine policy as that of Germany, and officially announced her intention, if she saw fit, to pursue the same ruthless submarine policy that Germany had inaugurated.

Many vessels have been sunk by submarines in the Mediterranean—the area in which Austrian submarines operate—by submarines which carried no flag or mark and the nationality of which was unknown. A great many of these undersea craft are believed to have been Austrian submarines or submarines commanded by Austrian officers, or supplied from Austrian bases or by Austrian means.

On April 4, 1917, the American four-masted schooner Marguerite was sunk by submarine 35 miles from the coast of Sardinia, while en route to Spain. The submarine carried no flag or marks to indicate its nationality. It is known, however, that Austrian was the language spoken by the officer of the submarine who came aboard the vessel with the boarding party, and it is believed that the submarine was Austrian.

On November 21, 1917, the Schuylkill was sunk off the coast of Algeria by an Austrian submarine; thus Austria is making, whenever opportunity affords, the same ruthless submarine warfare that Germany is making, in disregard of the promises made this Government, in violation of the law of nations and the instincts of humanity, and is as much at war with this country as Germany was after her note of January 31, 1917, and the subsequent sinking of American ships and the drowning of American citizens.

SEVERANCE OF DIPLOMATIC RELATIONS BY AUSTRIA-HUNGARY.

Before war was declared to exist between the United States and the Imperial German Government it was intimated to the United States Government that if war should be declared by the United States upon Germany, Austria-Hungary would be under obligation to break off diplomatic relations with the United States. Consequently after the declaration of war of April 6, 1917, the Austro-Hungarian Government informed the American chargé at Vienna on April 8 that diplomatic relations between the United States and Austria-Hungary were broken and handed him passports for himself and members of the embassy. The following is a translation of the note handed to the American chargé by the Austrian minister for foreign affairs:

IMPERIAL AND ROYAL MINISTRY OF THE IMPERIAL AND ROYAL HOUSE AND OF FOREIGN AFFAIRS,
Vienna, April 8, 1917.

Since the United States of America has declared that a state of war exists between it and the Imperial German Government, Austria-Hungary, as ally of the German Empire, has decided to break off the diplomatic relations with the United States, and the imperial and royal embassy in Washington has been instructed to inform the Department of State to that effect.

While regretting under these circumstances to see a termination of the personal relations which he has had the honor to hold with chargé d'affaires of the United States of America, the undersigned does not fail to place at the former's disposal herewith the passport for the departure from Austria-Hungary of himself and the other members of the embassy.

At the same time the undersigned avails himself of the opportunity to renew to the chargé d'affaires the expression of his most perfect consideration.

CZERNIN.

To Mr. JOSEPH CLARK GREW,
Chargé d'Affaires of the United States of America.

AUSTRO-GERMAN OPERATIONS AGAINST ITALY.

Until the present Austro-German drive in northern Italy, the Austrian forces were gradually being driven back by the forces of the Italian armies. With the assistance of German troops drawn from the Russian front a very serious catastrophy was inflicted upon the Italian arms, which if it had not been stemmed might have resulted in the total collapse of Italy. Such a result would have been a great blow to those with whom we are associated in this war, and as much to the United States as to any of her cobelligerents.

As a result of this situation the allies have rushed aid to Italy, and the United States is sending ships, money, and supplies, and will probably soon send troops, who will be facing and making war on Austrian soldiers, and before this takes place there should be a declaration of war, this country against Austria-Hungary.

The Italian situation is of the utmost importance in the present conduct of the war. A declaration of war by the United States against Austria-Hungary will hearten the people of Italy, who have been misled by the mischievous and deluding propaganda engineered by the Germans. It will strengthen from a military point of view the whole allied cause. These are strong reasons for a declaration of war against Austria-Hungary.

These considerations, and the fact that Austria-Hungary is adhering to the illegal and inhumane policy of ruthless submarine warfare, and is, as the committee believes, making war upon American vessels and American citizens upon the high seas, and other reasons which are not deemed necessary to recapitulate here, induced the committee to report unanimously the accompanying resolution declaring that a state of war exists between the Imperial and Royal Austro-Hungarian Government and the Government and people of the United States and making provision to prosecute the same.

I shall therefore vote for the resolution in order to show the world we are united. [Applause.]

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Chairman, I make the same request.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DYER].

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I would not take the time of the House in this matter, which I am sure will be practically unanimous, except for the fact that there have been times in the past when there were some misguided Americans who endeavored to formulate a doctrine that all parts of this country were not thoroughly in accord, as to this war, with the spirit of the American Nation. I am glad to-day to be able to testify, after this war has been going on with the Imperial German Government for some time, that the people of my section are thoroughly in accord with the patriotic utterances of the President here on Tuesday last. I represent in this House a portion of the city of St. Louis, where there are many thousands of men and women of German blood and ancestry, and after having had submitted to them every test, after having put to them every request of the President and of the Government for their support in furnishing men for the Army, subscribing to the bonds of the Government, in contributing to every cause connected with the war, I desire to say that they have more than met every test and more than doubled every request made of them. I am glad to-day to be here and to be permitted to speak in their behalf and say to this Congress and to the country that the city of St. Louis, one of the splendid municipalities of this Nation, is unanimously behind the President and behind the Government. [Applause.]

The few misguided Americans that we have in our city are not all men of German blood or of German extraction. They are of other nationalities, the same as we have in every other portion of the country, and the few that are there are no more in proportion to our great population than they are in any State of the Union. We, citizens of St. Louis, all propose to do that which every worthy American must do, and that is not only to stand up and say that we are going to do this or that for our country in this hour but, gentlemen, do it like men, giving the best that we have and giving it freely. Our country is at stake, and we are going to support the President. The patriotic utterances of the President on Tuesday last are the utterances of every true American, no matter from what section he hails, or to what party he belongs, and I have in the past and propose now and in the future to do the best I can to aid him in successfully carrying on the war. The man who opposes or who refuses to aid to the utmost his Government either in this House or in this country and gives utterance to anything except of pure and genuine patriotism is not worthy of the honor and privileges he enjoys and is not fit for American citizenship, and he should have it taken away from him and branded as an enemy of this Nation. [Applause.]

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. OSBORNE].

Mr. OSBORNE. Mr. Chairman, since the 6th day of April last no measure more important to the winning of the great world war has come before Congress than that which is now under consideration.

Austria is extending every power to bring victory to Germany. She has committed numerous aggressions upon the United States, including the sinking of our ships by her submarines, each of such aggressions constituting an act of war. Undoubtedly our failure to declare the state of war with Austria at the time that Congress took that action with respect to Germany, which we had ample jusification for doing, had a depressing, if not a disastrous, effect upon the fortunes of our gallant ally in the south of Europe—Italy.

But if we made an error, and a serious error, at that time, it is well that we correct it with the least delay possible to-day. Therefore this House will give a practically unanimous vote upon this momentous measure to-day, and again yield to the President every possible weapon which he may deem desirable with which to win the war.

It is a fine thing to witness this unanimity of loyalty and solidarity of support of the President in the carrying on of this supreme struggle for the freedom of the world without regard to party lines or political affiliations. All sections of our great country are equally loyal to the cause, and imbued with the spirit of self-sacrifice.

I have just returned from the great States beyond the Rockies and the Sierras that border upon the Pacific. The fires of patriotism are all alight from Puget Sound to the Mexican border.

I have never before seen my own great State of California so profoundly stirred and so nearly unanimous in any cause as it now is in the cause of our common country against the greed for world power of the central powers of Europe. California, with Oregon and Washington, are with their sister States of the Union in this great conflict, ready to make every sacrifice, however great, to win the war, and they will attest their devotion this day by voting "Aye" upon the joint resolution now before the House declaring war upon Austria-Hungary.

Our next step should be an early declaration of war upon Turkey and Bulgaria. [Applause.]

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. QUIN].

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I take it that every Member of this House is for this resolution to recognize that a state of war exists between this Government and the Imperial and Royal Government of Austria-Hungary. I said every Member. I beg the pardon of the gentleman from New York [Mr. LONDON]. It strikes me that the gentleman from New York does not represent the poor people of the country that the Socialist Party has always presumed to stand for, but, according to his argument, ever since we went into this war in April last, if what he preaches were carried out, the Imperial Government of Germany, the masters of Austria, and those people who would continue to oppress the poor not only in Europe but would endeavor to come over here and plunder and oppress the poor people of this country, that class would be in the saddle if the gentleman from New York had his argument carried out to its conclusion. Instead of the gentleman representing the poor people of this country as a Socialist, according to my conception of his argument, when we are rushing now waist deep in blood, he is representing flannel-mouthed anarchy, and all of those like him in high places, who pretend now to argue that this is a war of commerce and pelf and profit, are guilty of treason instead of statesmanship. [Applause.] If the argument of the gentleman from New York should be carried to its ultimate conclusion, he would now surrender everything that the poor people of the United States have and hand it over to the Kaiser and the lords of the Hapsburgs. He would have this country, instead of being a Government of free people, an adjunct of the Kaiser. He would have this country under the heel of autocratic oppression. It seems to me that those Socialists of the United States of whom the gentleman is a spokesman ought to repudiate him, as any Democratic constituency would repudiate and spew out of their mouth any pretended Democrat who would utter such a contemptible sentiment at this season of the war. [Applause.] The President is Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy of the country, and it is our business in this crisis to follow him. I lay aside my idea of a declaration of war on the barbarous countries of Turkey and Bulgaria. I do not know much about the Bulgarians. I want to say it is my personal opinion that of all the contemptible races that are allied against us in this war the Turks stand at the head of the list, and yet the gentleman from New York, who pretends to be the exponent of all that is good for the poor laboring people of this country, wants us to lie down and let these barbarians come over here, subjugate us, and put the poor people down to starvation wages, have them walking the streets begging for bread. He would have the poor farmer get nothing for his products, and the poor man in the shops that he pretends to love would be so poor that he would not have clothing to wear nor food to eat. Yet the gentleman has the audacity to rise up before 104,000,000 people and pretend that he represents socialism. I understand socialism stands for something.

And what the gentleman tells us in this great crisis should be considered treason by the people whom he has the honor to represent. I do not know that the American people will stand for such talk as that now. In some sections of this country men in private life who would utter the sentiments that the gentleman from New York has uttered might be dealt with rather harshly. I think in the grand old State of Mississippi, where everybody worships God according to his conscience, the gentleman would be in some danger there making that statement. [Laughter and applause.] In the good old seventh district of Mississippi, a man who would go in there among those patriotic people and utter such sentiments as the gentleman from New York uttered here to-day would have a rough time on the platform among that good, honest, patriotic constituency. [Applause.] My friends, the time has come that the American Congress should not tolerate treasonable utterances on this floor.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. QUIN. I will.

Mr. SNYDER. Does not the gentleman think he is considering the gentleman from New York too seriously?

Mr. QUIN. No, sir; I do not, because he is a spokesman of the Socialist Party on the floor of the House of Representatives. Any man who occupies the exalted position of a Member of the American Congress should be guarded in the language he uses for fear that the Kaiser and all those who surround him may be led to the view that in this great Republic of ours there is a division of sentiment, that there is perhaps a division suitable to the aims and ends of the Kaiser. [Applause.]

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER].

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, some discussion has been indulged in here as to whether or not this resolution goes far enough. Some gentlemen have expressed the sentiment that other allies of Germany ought to be included in the pending resolution. Frankly expressing my own views, I am inclined to share that sentiment. My judgment is this war will never be won, as it must and will be, until we have whipped all of our enemies. I believe we have assumed the task of whipping Germany and each and all of her allies, and that we must and will accomplish the task. But I am perfectly willing to follow the guidance of that man who has guided us so well thus far. I will therefore content myself to vote for the resolution as it is and against any amendment, should one be offered, until such time as the President in his wisdom invites Congress to pass a similar resolution with respect to other countries.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, before the committee rises, I will ask the indulgence of the House to say just a word.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia withdraws his motion temporarily. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] is recognized.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, in view of the action of the Senate, just reported to the House, I appreciate the desire of Members to have the business here speedily ended, and therefore I shall take time only very briefly to outline the reasons which will control my vote on the resolution.

This Nation became a party to the war in Europe when, in April last, Congress declared the existence of a state of war between the United States of America and the Imperial German Government. Therefore the question now before us is not whether we shall vote to plunge this country into war, for already it has entered the war—this most gigantic, most terrible of wars—which for more than three years has been raging across the sea and never more fiercely raging than now, eight months after we became a party to it.

This being the situation, there is nothing for us as loyal American citizens to do except to adapt ourselves to its consequences. One of these consequences—an inevitable consequence of the situation—is that the Imperial and Royal Austro-Hungarian Government is our enemy, because it is, and throughout the war has been, the active, powerful ally of the Imperial German Government, to which it is bound by solemn treaty for purposes offensive and defensive. It is true that since declaring war against Germany we have professed to maintain an attitude of neutrality toward Austria, but that, Mr. Chairman, is a purely fictitious neutrality from which the pending resolution proposes to remove the mask. This resolution recognizes what all American citizens have long recognized, that the United States can not be at war with one nation and remain at peace with that nation's great ally.

The facts are irresistible. To me my duty is plain, and I shall vote for the resolution. [Applause.]

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL].

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I take this time simply to state that any man upon the floor of this House or elsewhere who states that every member of the Socialist Party is opposed to the successful conduct of this war does not represent the loyal Socialists of this country who believe in certain economic and social principles but are loyal to the United States of America. I live in the county in which probably the greatest publication of the Socialist Party is published, The Appeal to Reason. The sons of the founder of that paper are thoroughly loyal to the United States and are for the prosecution of this war to a successful conclusion. [Applause.] They believe in doing everything essential for the successful conduct of the war. I do not believe that any man expresses the sentiments of the Socialists of this country who says that the Socialists are opposed to any measure or any declaration that would result in united action against the enemies of the United States or represents the real sentiment of those who adhere to certain economic and social principles advocated by the Socialist Party. The gentleman from New York [Mr. LONDON] may speak for himself and a few Socialists in New York City, but he does not speak for the midcontinent Socialists of the United States. They are loyal to the Government that has given them protection in the right to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. They are for the prosecution of this war against all the enemies of the United States to a successful conclusion. [Applause.]

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, there are two gentlemen who wish an opportunity to say a word, taking one minute each.

Mr. FLOOD. All right.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes to the lady from Montana [Miss RANKIN]. [Applause.]

Miss RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I still believe that war is a stupid and futile way of attempting to settle international difficulties. I believe that war can be avoided and will be avoided when the people, the men and women in America, as well as in Germany, have the controlling voice in their Government.

To-day special privileged commercial interests are controlling the world. When we declared war on Germany we virtually declared war on Germany's allies. The vote we are now to cast is not a vote on a declaration of war. If it were, I should vote against it. This is a vote on a mere technicality in the prosecution of a war already declared. I shall vote for this, as I voted for money and for men. [Applause.]

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia moves that the committee do now rise.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. One moment. I promised the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TIMBERLAKE] one minute.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Colorado is recognized for one minute.

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I came in late, thinking the general debate was not to close so early. I wanted to say before the vote was taken on this resolution, however, that I am in hearty accord with the same.

Having just returned from the war front I felt most keenly, however, that the duty of this country was to declare war not only on Germany, as our enemy, but also on all of the friends and allies of the German Empire. I found this expression among all the people with whom we came in contact during our recent trip in Europe, and especially did we find it reflected among those people in Italy who have suffered so much from the Austrian and Turkish drive. They felt that we were slow in attending to that part of this work.

I am in hearty accord with this resolution, but very much wish that it had been seen fit by the President, our Commander in Chief, to include Turkey and Bulgaria. [Applause.] But I bow to his will, and shall support heartily the resolution. [Applause.]

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration House joint resolution 169, declaring that a state of war exists between the Imperial and Royal Austro-Hungarian Government and the Government and the people of the United States and making provision to prosecute the same, had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Speaker, Members of the House know that the Senate has already unanimously passed a resolution practically the same as House joint resolution 169. There is some difference in the preamble and a slight difference in the verbiage of the resolution. I ask unanimous consent that we may consider the Senate resolution in lieu of the House resolution, with a view to moving later to lay the House resolution on the table, so that we can vote on the Senate resolution and the matter will not have to go back to the Senate; and if we do that in a short time the Senate will wait in session for us, so that the matter can be concluded to-day, and the House can adjourn over until one day next week, as I understand the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] proposes to move.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent that Senate joint resolution 111 be considered in lieu of House joint resolution 169, the two resolutions being almost identical.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, would the gentleman from Virginia not agree to have that read before his proposition is put? It is very brief.

Mr. FLOOD. I have no objection to its being read.

Mr. BORLAND. I think the Senate resolution ought to be read so that we can see what the difference is.

Mr. FLOOD. I have no objection to that.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the Senate joint resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (S. J. Res. 111) declaring that a state of war exists between the Imperial and Royal Austro-Hungarian Government and the Government and the people of the United States, and making provision to prosecute the same.

Whereas the Imperial and Royal Austro-Hungarian Government has committed repeated acts of war against the Government and people of the United States of America: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc.*, That a state of war is hereby declared to exist between the United States of America and the Imperial and Royal Austro-Hungarian Government; and that the President be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to employ the entire naval and military forces of the United States and the resources of the Government to carry on war against the Imperial and Royal Austro-Hungarian Government; and to bring the conflict to a successful termination all the resources of the country are hereby pledged by the Congress of the United States.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. Without objection, House resolution 169 will lie on the table.

There was no objection.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that we may vote on Senate joint resolution 111 without the formality of going into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. CRISP. Consider it in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. FLOOD. Yes. I ask that it be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent to consider this Senate resolution in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FLOOD. I move the previous question, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia moves the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate joint resolution.

The Senate joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on passing this resolution, and on that the gentleman from Virginia demands the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the roll. Those in favor will vote "yea"; those opposed will vote "nay" when their names are called.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 365, nays 1, not voting 68, as follows:

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call my name.

The Clerk called the name of Mr. CLARK of Missouri, and he answered in the affirmative.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, Mr. MANN, is unavoidably absent on account of serious illness. I wish to announce that if he were present he would vote "yea."

The SPEAKER. All such announcements will be in order after the announcement of the vote.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I wish to submit a request for unanimous consent. In view of the change in the hour for voting some Members were out during the roll call who have just come in, and I ask unanimous consent that all Members who appear before the announcement of the vote be permitted to vote. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that because of the change in the hour for voting as announced any gentleman who appears now be permitted to vote. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk called the names of Members appearing at the bar of the House, and they are recorded above.

So the joint resolution was passed.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. MCCORMICK, as we all know, went last summer on a visit to the battle fronts in Europe. He remained there during the latter part of the summer and a portion of the fall. He witnessed some of the great battles. He was in the battle front in France, and he also saw the terrific drive in Italy. I ask unanimous consent that immediately after the reading of the Journal on Friday of next week he be permitted to address the House for one hour on his experiences on the battle front. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that next Friday, immediately after the reading of the Journal and the disposition of papers on the Speaker's table, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MCCORMICK] be permitted to address the House for not exceeding one hour. Is there objection?

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I do not want to object to that, and I am anxious to hear the gentleman because I know he will give us interesting and valuable information, but I desire to call to the attention of the House the fact that Friday is private pension day. I wondered if that would interfere with it.

The SPEAKER. Oh, there will be plenty of time.

Mr. LANGLEY. I just wanted to call attention to it, because this is the first private pension bill of this Congress and I do not want to see that delayed. Most of the cases carried in the bill are those of old soldiers who will not live much longer.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD a digest of the defense of the realm act of Great Britain, particularly that part pertaining to food control, together with some comment thereon.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent to print in the RECORD the English statute referred to. Is there objection?

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Speaker, I would inquire the length of it?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I have a digest of the entire defense of the realm act, and I shall pick out certain portions of the statute pertaining to the control of food and undertake to show how punishments are meted out. It is of reasonable length.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOON, by direction of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, reported the bill (H. The SPEAKER. Is it a public or a private bill?

Mr. BLANTON. It is a public bill.

The SPEAKER. That change may be made when the request is made by the chairman of the committee after he is authorized to do so by the committee.

Mr. BLANTON. I will take it up with the chairman and the Appropriation Committee.

Mr. WILSON of Louisiana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that, beginning Monday next, the Committee on Elections No. 1 be authorized to sit during the sessions of the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by inserting in the RECORD a letter which I have written to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, in which I have undertaken to show, under the decisions of law in general, that the salaries of Congressmen are not exempt from the excess-profits tax, and that all of this outcry about Congress having exempted the salaries of its Members from that tax is unjustifiable.

The SPEAKER. What is the request? The Chair did not hear a word of it.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting a letter which I have written to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, the purport of which I have just stated to the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to inquire of the gentleman where there has been any outcry about this tax among the Members or where there would be an outcry among the Members if their salaries were doubled. However, I do not object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to print in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a letter which he wrote to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue about whether or not Congressmen's salaries were exempt from the income tax and the excess-profits tax. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Speaker, Congressman MILLER, of Seattle, Wash., has been on the firing line in France with the other Congressmen. He was one of the group that was under fire. Mr. MILLER has a West Point education and might bring some things before the body which the rest of us would not be able to do, and I therefore ask unanimous consent that he follow Mr. MCCORMICK on next Friday for an hour.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LITTLE] asks unanimous consent that next Friday, after Congressman MCCORMICK gets through, that the gentleman from Washington [Mr. MILLER] be permitted to address the House about his war experiences, not to exceed one hour. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE—BEAKES V. BACON.

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I desire to give notice to the House that on Thursday of next week I shall call up the contested-election case of Beakes against Bacon, second Michigan district. The report of the Committee on Elections in this case was filed October 5. As far as I know, Mr. Speaker, the report represents the unanimous conviction of the committee. It is my wish, sir, that the matter be disposed of before the Christmas holidays, and after consultation with Members of the House I am satisfied that Thursday of next week will be as convenient a time for the consideration of this question as any other day which could be selected.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. I will.

Mr. STAFFORD. I understood from the leader of the majority that the program was to take up the Post Office appropriation bill on next Tuesday. I assume that the gentleman's request will not interfere with the consideration of the Post Office appropriation bill.

Mr. KITCHIN. I rather think that whatever day is fixed for the contested-election case should be given for that purpose, because everybody will know that that is the day set.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman knows that it is rarely the practice to hold up a bill that is unfinished in its consideration for other matters. Does not the gentleman think this should follow the consideration of the appropriation bill?

Mr. KITCHIN. I think we can get through with the Post Office appropriation bill on Tuesday and Wednesday. I think the House will suspend Calendar Wednesday for that purpose.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to joint resolution of the following title:

SENATE.

MONDAY, December 10, 1917.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we seek Thy guidance and blessing for this day, at a time when the fate of nations may depend upon the policy of this Nation and when the life of a thousand boys may hang upon a word in this Chamber. We can face responsibilities so great only as we are guided and inspired and directed by the Holy Spirit of God. Fit us for the solemn and responsible duties of this day. May our hearts be right toward God and our hands clean in the work that Thou hast committed to us; and do Thou all things through us according to Thy will and for the accomplishment of Thy purpose in us as a Nation. For Christ's sake. Amen.

HIRAM W. JOHNSON, a Senator from the State of California; ANDRIEUS A. JONES, a Senator from the State of New Mexico; CHARLES L. MCNARY, a Senator from the State of Oregon; MILES POINDEXTER, a Senator from the State of Washington; and LAWRENCE Y. SHERMAN, a Senator from the State of Illinois, appeared in their seats to-day.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of Friday, December 7, 1917, when, on request of Mr. SMOOT and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

STATEMENT OF EXPENDITURES.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, pursuant to law, a statement of expenditures to December 1, 1917, under section 8 of the act of Congress approved April 24, 1917, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

ANNUAL REPORT OF UNITED STATES TARIFF COMMISSION.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the first annual report of the United States Tariff Commission, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed.

EXCHANGE OF TYPEWRITERS.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Civil Service Commission, transmitting, pursuant to law, a statement showing the typewriters, adding machines, and other labor-saving devices exchanged in part payment for new machines during the fiscal year 1917, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. JAMES. I present petitions numerously signed by citizens of Crittenden, Hardin, Knox, Pulaski, Bell, Robertson, Fleming, Franklin, Woodford, Scott, Grayson, Meade, Marion, and Bullitt Counties, all in the State of Kentucky, praying for the passage of the woman suffrage constitutional amendment. I move that the petitions be referred to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. FLETCHER presented petitions of sundry citizens of Pinellas County, Fla., praying for the submission of a Federal suffrage amendment to the legislatures of the several States, which were referred to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I ask to have printed in the RECORD a short resolution adopted by the lumbermen and logging contractors of Spokane and the Inland Empire, indorsing the eight-hour law for all branches of the lumber industry, in the United States. I wish also to state that this same proposition was indorsed by the Chamber of Commerce of Spokane.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SPOKANE, WASH., November 23, 1917.

We the undersigned lumbermen and logging contractors of Spokane and the Inland Empire earnestly petition the Congress of the United States of America to pass and give immediate effect, as an emergency at the December session of Congress for the year 1917, a universal basic eight-hour-day law for all branches of the lumber industry in the United States, which law is requested by both employer and employee and will tend to produce industrial peace.

We realize that standard of hours and wages can not be changed by different districts competing with each other independently without disastrous results, therefore, in the interest of industrial peace we ask that the application of the eight-hour basic standard day be made universal in the lumber industry throughout the United States.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have a telegram from the Pasadena (Cal.) Board of Trade in support of the resolution I offered a few days ago concerning the importation of Chinese farmers into this country. I ask that it be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, where the original resolution was referred.

There being no objection, the telegram was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PASADENA, CAL., December 8, 1917.

Hon. JACOB H. GALLINGER,
The Senate, Washington, D. C.:

The directors of the Pasadena Board of Trade recently passed a resolution favoring the securing of legislation permitting the importation of Chinese labor into the United States, under restrictions, to relieve the labor situation. As it effected the production of foodstuffs, so essential to our allies and this country, the resolution has been transmitted to the commercial bodies of California, asking them to adopt it and urge the Chamber of Commerce of the United States to lay the matter before its organization members by referendum. We are highly gratified that you have appreciated the seriousness of the situation and taken the lead in the matter and sincerely hope you will be successful in securing the passage of your bill.

PROMOTION OF EXPORT TRADE.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Concurrent and other resolutions are in order. [After a pause.] The morning business is closed, and the calendar under Rule VIII is in order.

Mr. POMERENE. Unless there is objection, I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of House bill 2316, the unfinished business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 2316) to promote export trade, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The pending question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS].

Mr. POMERENE. The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG] will speak upon the bill, and I should like very much that there should be a full attendance. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Mr. POMERENE. I desire to announce that the junior Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH[is detained on account of illness.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I wish to announce that my colleague, the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. WOLCOTT], is detained from the Senate by illness.

Mr. GERRY. I was requested to announce that the Senator from Kansas [Mr. THOMPSON], the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS], and the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] are detained on official business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-four Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, I ask the indulgence of the Senate for a few moments to submit some considerations upon the so-called Webb-Pomerene export bill. It is inconceivable to me that a country so vitally interested in the commerce of the world should bind its own merchants and its own manufacturers by restrictions and rules in foreign commerce which no other country on the face of the earth tries to impose. The question is not whether the principles of the Sherman Act ought to be applied to all the world. The fact is those principles are not applied in foreign countries where we must meet the competition of foreign manufacturers and merchants, and if we have the power to do so it is unwise to try to enforce against our merchants dealing in those countries rules which are not enforced against their foreign competitors.

Mr. President, do we realize the tremendous importance of our foreign commerce, not only now but the importance it will assume after the close of this great conflict?

I listened with great interest to the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS], whose wide knowledge of the subject is entitled to the highest consideration. I beg, however, to differ with the Senator upon some points.

He said, as I recollect, that notwithstanding the Sherman Act our commerce had continued to grow during the last 10, 15, and 20 years. That is true; but our commerce did not grow as rapidly as the commerce of Germany, England, France, and some other countries, and in the race for foreign commerce we were falling to the rear when this war broke out and forced upon us the tremendous trade that we are now carrying on.

At the beginning of the present century, in 1901 to 1903, the United States ranked first among the three great exporting countries in the value of domestic products exported. The average annual exports of these respective countries for 1901 to 1903 was for the United States, $1,410,000,000; England, $1,387,000,000; and Germany, $1,120,000,000. Ten years later the United States ranked second. The average values for the years 1911 to 1913 were: England, $2,379,000,000; the United States, $2,290,000,000; and Germany, $2,155,000,000. The progress of the other two countries had been greater than that of the United States, the per cent of increase being in Germany, 92 per cent; in England, 71 per cent; and in the United States, 62 per cent.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. KELLOGG. I yield to the Senator from Missouri for a question.

Mr. REED. Are the figures which the Senator has given for manufactured products or for agricultural and manufactured products?

Mr. KELLOGG. For all exports, I understand.

Mr. REED. Will the Senator enlighten us as to whether the decrease in our shipments has not been from our agricultural products rather than from our manufactured products?

Mr. KELLOGG. It has to a considerable extent.

Mr. REED. Is it not that to which it is due entirely? Has there not been an increase in our manufactured products?

Mr. KELLOGG. There has been an increase in the export of manufactured products from this country and from all other countries, but we have not increased as rapidly as those other countries.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. KELLOGG. I do.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator has stated, undoubtedly with correctness, the export trade of different countries, including our own. I will ask the Senator if he has at any time made inquiry into the percentage that the different countries consume of their products? In other words, it has been stated, and I think with some accuracy, that in this country we consume over 90 per cent of the products of our farms and our factories. Can the Senator tell even approximately what percentage is consumed by England, France, and Germany of their products?

Mr. KELLOGG. I can not give the figures exactly. Of course of the agricultural products they consume a much greater percentage than we do. I have looked into it some, but I am not able to give the figures.

Mr. President, the point I desire to impress upon the Senate is that notwithstanding we are the producers of the great raw materials for the manufactures of the world—lumber, iron, steel, coal, copper, and other products—we were prior to 1914 being surpassed by other nations of the world in our export commerce, and the reasons are not difficult to determine.

But before discussing that question I desire to call the attention of the Senate to the tremendous importance of our foreign commerce, especially our exports at the present time. I send to the desk two statements which I ask to be incorporated in my remarks.

The statements referred to are as follows:

Aggregate amount (in dollars) of imports and exports for fiscal years ending June 30 of each of the following years, showing excess of exports over imports.

	Imports.	Exports.	Excess.
1910	$1,556,947,430	$1,744,984,720	$188,037,290
1911	1,527,226,105	2,049,320,199	522,094,094
1912	1,653,264,934	2,204,322,409	551,057,475
1913	1,813,008,234	2,465,884,149	652,875,915
1914	1,893,925,657	2,364,579,148	470,653,491
1915	1,674,169,740	2,768,589,340	1,094,419,600
1916	2,197,883,510	4,333,482,885	2,135,599,375
1917	2,659,335,185	6,294,000,000	3,634,664,815

Aggregate amount (in dollars) of imports and exports for fiscal years ending June 30 of each of the following years.

[For merchandise only.]

	Imports.	Exports.	Total.
1910	$1,555,947,430	$1,744,984,720	$3,301,932,150
1911	1,527,226,105	2,049,320,199	3,576,546,301
1912	1,653,264,934	2,204,322,409	3,857,587,343
1913	1,813,008,234	2,465,881,149	4,278,892,383
1914	1,893,925,657	2,364,579,148	4,258,504,805
1915	1,674,169,740	2,768,589,340	4,442,759,080
1916	2,197,883,510	4,333,482,885	6,531,366,395
1917	2,659,335,185	6,294,000,000	8,953,335,185

Mr. KELLOGG. It will be seen that one statement gives the aggregate amount in dollars of imports and exports for the fiscal years ending June 30 of each of the following years from 1910 to 1917, showing excess of exports over imports, and the other is the aggregate amount in dollars of imports and exports for the fiscal years ending June 30 of each of the following years from 1910 to 1917.

It will be seen by a glance at these statements that our exports have increased since 1914 from $2,364,579,148 to $6,294,000,000 in 1917, while our imports have also increased from $1,893,925,657 in 1914 to $2,659,335,185 in 1917. But the great increase of this country has been in our exports, forced upon us (without any effort from our merchants and manufacturers) by the necessities of the world. A most significant, and, in our financial condition to-day a most important fact, is that the balance of trade from 1914 to the present time has increased in favor of this country beyond anything ever known in any country, from $470,633,491 in 1914 to $3,634,664,815 in 1917, thus pouring into this country a tremendous amount of credit and gold.

We must not delude ourselves with the idea that this receipt of gold from foreign commerce will forever continue. Of course, when the war closes and commerce again begins to assume its normal trend the extraordinary demands of foreign countries which can not be met in any other country except this will, of course, fall off. Argentina, Australia, Russia, and Canada will furnish their wheat and other farm products to all the countries of the world, and England, Germany, France, and Italy will again meet us in competition in the markets of the world with their products.

It is idle to say that these countries are going to be crushed by the war and can not compete with us. While war may burden the people with debt and may destroy property, it does not take away from the nation its efficiency in manufacture and commerce. The foreign commerce of Great Britain to-day is greater than it has ever been in the history of that country, and, notwithstanding the war, we are importing into this country from Great Britain and from other foreign countries, with the exception of Germany, more products than we have ever heretofore imported. When the war closes we shall have to pay for those products, and we can only pay for them with exports from this country or with credits which we purchase from foreign countries. Foreign nations will not without contest allow us to hold the great mass of gold which we have taken by reason of their necessity. The only way we can hold it is to buy their securities and sell them our products. Therefore I say that anything which will tend to strengthen our manufacturers and our merchants in producing and selling in any place in the world we should not neglect, even though we face the European war. England is not neglecting it. England and France to-day are making preparations to meet not only the conditions after the war, but to continue and to increase their commerce during the war. Let me call the attention of the Senate to one thing which is significant, and I will send to the desk a copy of this statement and ask that it be placed at the end of my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, within the last few months the British Board of Trade has been considering its foreign commerce and has made a report which, according to my recollection, was made in March or April of this year. In that report it recommended the establishment of an institution for the following primary objects—I will not stop to read them all, but I wish to call the attention of the Senate to two or three of them:

To afford advice and financial assistance to British commercial and industrial undertakings from their inception, and generally to further the development of British trade, industry, and commerce.

To make advances for the enlargement of works and the extension of plants and for the amalgamation and coordination of works and businesses, with a view to effecting economies in the course of production.

To render financial assistance in connection with transactions involving long periods of credit.

To assist in obtaining orders from abroad for British manufacturers and traders and to grant financial facilities for the execution of such orders, especially when such orders are intended to be executed in the United Kingdom.

* * * * * * * *

To act as an agent for carrying through overseas commercial and financial transactions in which your Majesty's Government may be interested, and to receive official recognition and assistance.

To undertake trading operations and business on their own account, or, jointly, with others, either through the medium of syndicates or otherwise.

And as late as April 21, 1917, the British Parliament created a large corporation with all of these powers for the purpose of extending, consolidating, and increasing Great Britain's foreign commerce. So we see that those countries are not neglecting preparation during the time when they are facing the greatest struggle in history which is commanding their entire resources.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

Mr. KELLOGG. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I am interested in the Senator's explanation of what is being done by Great Britain, and in that connection I should like to ask him a question. I presume he has examined the matter carefully. In the law passed by Great Britain has there been any stipulation that will permit exporters to do in their export work what by English law is made a crime if done in England, as this law proposes?

Mr. KELLOGG. This law authorizes British manufacturers and merchants to consolidate through the medium of an export company, and not only that but all the leading articles exported from Great Britain, such as coal, iron, and steel, are exported under agreements, syndicates, and combinations, and not only have they never opposed such agreements, but they are considered valid in Great Britain.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator further?

Mr. KELLOGG. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I hardly think the Senator's answer meets the question. I wanted to know whether the English law legalizes something done by a corporation in a foreign country which if done in England would be illegal?

Mr. KELLOGG. I do not say that it does; but they are now doing in England the things that we propose in this bill, and have been for years, as well as in all other foreign countries competing with us.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. KELLOGG. For a question, I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. REED. I simply wanted to ask the Senator if it was not also true that, while England had been permitting combinations to be organized to control England's foreign market, England's people had been impoverished almost to the point of revolution before the war, and that poverty had stalked abroad in England among the common people to an extent never before known?

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, England was not impoverished by reason of her foreign commerce; that commerce was the very lifeblood of England. The laboring men of England were impoverished for other reasons, and if it had not been for England's foreign commerce the poverty in England would have been greater.

Now, Mr. President, when the war closes, if we are going to hold a fair proportion of the foreign commerce of the world, we must do what our competitors in European countries have been doing for more than a quarter of a century. First, we must procure a large merchant marine; second, we must extend our banking facilities; and, third, we must cooperate in encouraging foreign trade. This cooperation must include common selling agencies, a study of the needs of foreign countries, the kinds of goods which suit their convenience, their tastes, or necessities, and many other things. Foreign countries have fostered their trade very largely through the agencies which I have named.

I am not, of course, going to discuss the shipping question or the banking question, but, to show how they are related to common selling agencies and so-called combinations in the foreign trade in other countries, let me mention in passing what those countries have done with their merchant marine. They have pursued a different policy from that pursued by this country. With a blind confidence in the supremacy of American industry or a want of knowledge of conditions in the world, we allowed our merchant marine practically to disappear from the ocean anterior to the war. European countries use their merchant marine in various ways. In connection with their railroads, they give preferential rates to their own merchants and to their own manufacturers, and they give preference in service. In each one of our competitor nations it is possible to bill goods from a country station to any place in the world, and the railroad company will guarantee freight charges to point of delivery, so that a manufacturer may know what obligations he has to meet. I defy any merchant in this country, unless he has a large traffic department, to be able to find out, even in ordinary times of peace, what the freight rate would be to Africa or to South America; he must take his chances, first, in shipping on the railway and then finding vacant space in a foreign ship. Not only that, but foreign shipowners discriminate against our merchants as to service, bringing about delays in the transit of American goods, as well as discrimination in rates.

It is true that as to a few articles in this country we have given preferential rates on railroads, but in nearly everything shipped from foreign countries preferential rates are given to exports, and preferential rates are given by rail and steamship to imports of raw material for the manufacturers. Nothing is neglected which will build up their commerce.

Again, every shipowner and every banker is a drummer for the business of his country. Foreign shipowners and foreign bankers handling our export business furnish the details of our business to our competitors in Europe; they furnish them our invoices; they furnish them the selling prices, the costs, and much other information which is of great importance to those countries in meeting our competition in the markets of the world. We have allowed our merchant marine to disintegrate, and that is why I say that during this war it is better for this country to allow no foreign ships to be built upon our ways, but to commandeer every ship that is being built so that at the close of the war we may have the greatest merchant marine in the world to push a commerce which is going to be vital to the prosperity of this people.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. KELLOGG. I do.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I have been figuring a little on the preliminary statement made by the Senator from Minnesota, and I think, if he goes over the figures again, he will find this to be the fact, that taking the merchandise exports of the United States for the period he names, the United States increased as much as any other country—about 90 per cent—and that the only reason our increase is not as large in the aggregate is because our export of agricultural products did not increase; but we did export all the surplus that we had. So that the Senator's premises rather fall to the ground, for we did advance as fast as other countries during the period he names as to those exports which we could control, and the reason we did not advance further in agricultural products, which previously had been our chief export, was that we could not grow them.

Mr. GALLINGER. And we consumed them ourselves.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. If the Senator will pardon me, as the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] suggests, our rapidly growing industries have resulted in a larger consumption at home.

Mr. KELLOGG. It is true that as to certain countries in certain commodities we have almost a monopoly, as in the case of certain manufactured products exported to Canada; but in countries where we have to meet foreign competition with very few exceptions we have not held our own and we have not carried on as large a commerce as our great resources should justify. Our business men and merchants have been at a disadvantage through the want of shipping and banking facilities, and because of local restrictions which foreign countries do not place upon their merchants and their business men.

We might mention in passing the banking facilities. Foreign countries have extended their banking systems all over the world. They not only loan money to foreign governments but they have financed railways, electric-power companies, tramways, mining companies, and industrial projects of all kinds, making agreements wherever they could that these concerns should make their purchases of materials and machinery and other things in the country furnishing the finances, and using their financial and banking influence to further the commerce of the parent country. So that I say, working in harmony with the banking and shipping facilities, those countries, with natural resources inferior to ours, have been able to push their commerce beyond anything that we have been able to do in this country.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. KELLOGG. I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. REED. I apologize for interrupting so often, but I think sometimes a question may make the point clearer. I take it the Senator thinks that the lack of a merchant marine has been one of our very great disadvantages. I am correct in that, am I not?

Mr. KELLOGG. Yes, sir; I think so.

Mr. REED. And that the lack of banking facilities has been another great disadvantage. Now, notwithstanding the fact that we have labored under those two disadvantages, which are separate and distinct from any proposition that this bill touches, it appears from the figures just given by the Senator from Nebraska, and which were in accordance with my recollection, as I suggested some time ago, that we have been increasing our foreign trade in manufactured products as rapidly as any other country on earth. Does it not follow, therefore, from the very argument the Senator has made—namely, that two of our chief difficulties are the lack of banking, which has already been remedied, by the way, and the lack of shipping, which the Senator says will be remedied by the war—that we do not need this law at all in order to meet the competition abroad if we have remedied the two defects of which the Senator has spoken?

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, if the Senator will examine the reports of the Trade Commission in detail, he will find that in many articles where we have the superiority in raw materials, foreign countries, through their agencies, have been enabled to take a large part of the trade away from us, and that it is not true that we have not suffered by reason of lack of coordination of our resources in that foreign commerce.

It is true, as I said, that banking facilities have been very important factors in developing the foreign commerce of other nations—not only facilities in the banking line, but they have acted as agents, and they have pushed foreign commerce, and their influence has been for England and for France and for Germany, according to the country in which their parent banks were located. But beyond that, in exchange alone they have been enabled to be of great benefit to foreign countries.

Formerly, if we shipped anything to a foreign country, it had to be by a foreign ship, and our banking had to be done through London. Since this war began, for the first time in the history of this country our exchange is being sold over the world; and it is not because we have in times of peace, with forethought, extended our foreign commerce and banking facilities, but because foreign countries were to a certain extent disabled, and had to look to us to finance great commercial and other transactions. I believe that when the war closes we will be in a position, if we will go at it intelligently and thoroughly, to extend our banking facilities, so that we may be the first nation in the world in financing business institutions and foreign Governments; but if we pursue a narrow policy, as we did for many years in our shipping and our banking laws, which refused to allow a bank to establish a branch, we will not accomplish our object.

Perhaps I have taken too much time to discuss these various agencies of foreign commerce, but they are so linked together that it seemed to me necessary to mention those in passing. I come now to the question involved in this bill—a so-called combination in foreign trade.

Every country with which we compete permits and in many cases encourages its merchants and manufacturers to cooperate in foreign trade. They therefore organize combinations to push and in every way encourage this trade.

These combinations, so called, take various forms—selling agencies; agreements between independent manufacturers, where each agrees to furnish a percentage of a certain class of goods at certain times and at certain prices, to be sold by a corporation or agency in foreign countries; agreements as to kinds of goods to be manufactured, the manner and time of shipment, the manner of packing, and various other things to meet the demands of consumers. In this way a large number of independent merchants and manufacturers, through their agencies, act in harmony in pushing their foreign trade.

These combinations in England, France, Italy, Switzerland, Holland, Japan, Austria-Hungary, and, in fact, nearly all countries with which we compete, include practically every article that we manufacture and export, and some of our raw materials—cotton and cotton products, phosphates, lumber, all kinds of manufactured goods, including textiles, iron and steel products, food products, cement, and other things.

For example, take phosphates. We produce over 50 per cent of the phosphates of the world, and, with the exception of certain islands in the Pacific, I think, we produce the highest grade phosphates, and yet we have to meet not only the combined capital and ability of foreign countries but combinations in purchasing from us, as I shall show.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. KELLOGG. I do.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not rise to interrupt the argument of the Senator from Minnesota; but I want him to point out, before he has finished, the law of Great Britain which authorizes or permits the combinations of which he has spoken, if he has that law at hand.

Mr. KELLOGG. I have not the law at hand; but these combinations in foreign commerce, like common selling agencies, iron and steel agencies, and agencies for the prosecution of their other business, have been formed for years, and are in existence and operating in England to-day.

Mr. CUMMINS. Precisely; and the Senator from Minnesota, who has been very closely identified with the administration of the antitrust law, knows that our Supreme Court has said that it is simply declaratory of the common law, and Great Britain has the same common law in that regard that we have.

Mr. KELLOGG. Well, after all the refinements, they do it in Great Britain, and they do it in all other countries, with the approval of their legal authorities, and Great Britain chartered a company on the 21st day of April of this year to act as agent for their manufacturers.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, have not we practically chartered, or at least permitted the creation of, a single selling and purchasing agency in this country for foreign governments, as a war measure? Has Great Britain gone beyond that?

Mr. KELLOGG. We have taken over certain industries, and we will not permit foreign countries to buy any of the products of those industries except they buy through that agency; but that is temporary and simply in time of war.

Mr. REED. That is what I am asking. Is not the English arrangement temporary, too?

Mr. KELLOGG. No; it is permanent.

Now, I say, when a large number of manufacturers in this country seek to compete with foreign manufacturers they must act singly. They must act by themselves. There is, of course, a certain amount of coordination, such as obtaining information through associations, but, for instance, they can not form a single selling agency, we will say, for a certain article of commerce manufactured by different manufacturers, which agency shall have the right to sell their various products. It is absolutely impossible for each one of hundreds of manufacturers scattered over this country to pursue or build up a foreign commerce, selling their products, obtaining information, drumming up business, and doing the various things that are necessary to introduce their products in foreign countries; and the failure to permit them to coordinate as separate manufacturing companies tends to drive them into great combinations.

The very fact that some foreign countries have permitted their manufacturers to act together in their foreign commerce through common selling agencies, through agencies created to further their particular line of business, has tended to keep them separate and to maintain the autonomy of their business—their separate enterprise at home—while our laws have tended to drive them into combination.

For instance, it is asked, If the Sherman Act is a good thing at home—and I believe it is—why is it not good abroad? This argument on its face seems very plausible; but, like many plausible arguments, it will not bear inspection, and it is, nevertheless, a specious argument.

First, we make the laws for this country and can enforce one policy against everyone doing business within our territory, whether he lives in a foreign country or whether he lives here. We do not make the laws for foreign countries, and therefore the most we can do is to enforce on our own merchants dealing in foreign countries a policy of noncoordination, leaving them to fight coordinated and combined capital and energy abroad.

As a matter of fact, that is exactly what we are doing. If the world were willing to adopt the sole policy of separate business and competition in all lines and at all times, I do not say that it would not be better; but the world has not adopted it. While we can enforce it here, we can not enforce it in a foreign country. Therefore, as against a solid phalanx of industry in England in one enterprise, pushing with their combined capital, energy, and enterprise their commerce, why should we say that our men must split up into a thousand factions and not only fight foreign commerce but fight among themselves? I say we should permit them to combine in selling agencies, to combine their capital, at all times protecting those who do not wish to go into the combination in foreign trade against oppression and unfair methods of competition. They should be protected.

To illustrate, not only do foreign manufacturers combine in pushing their enterprises in countries in which we are selling but they combine in selling to us, while our manufacturers must act separately in selling to them. In purchases of many articles that we buy in enormous quantities in this country foreign manufacturers get together and name a single selling agency, and force our manufacturers and merchants to buy from that selling agency, and they go further. In buying from us raw materials they combine. In many articles which we sell foreign countries, like phosphates, lumber, coal, and other products—I can not now name them all—our producers, exporting their goods, meet combinations of purchasers. For instance, the manufacturers of fertilizers in France, Germany, and England, buying phosphate rock in this country, form themselves into a syndicate and act through a single purchasing agent, while our producers must act separately. Thus they are placed at a disadvantage. I think the Senator from Florida will substantiate this. That is true in the sale of lumber. It is true in the sale of many other articles.

So, I say, wherever foreign countries can do it, they permit their manufacturers and merchants to have joint selling and purchasing agents, and they join in advertising their foreign commerce and doing all things necessary to build it up. All I claim is that we should permit our manufacturers and merchants to do the same thing in competition with them.

Mr. FLETCHER. If the Senator will allow me, I will state that his remark is absolutely correct, and it applies also to naval stores as well as other products.

Mr. POMERENE. And to cotton.

Mr. KELLOGG. As to phosphates, as I said, we produce and sell over 50 per cent of the phosphates of the world for the manufacture of fertilizers and other things; our 30 or 40 producers must act by themselves, and when they meet the purchasers of France, Germany, Great Britain, Spain, and Italy they meet one man who is acting for those purchasers. They have combined not only their purchasing power but they combine their selling power.

Mr. GORE. One man for each country.

Mr. KELLOGG. Yes; one man, but sometimes one purchaser represents the manufacturers of several countries.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Can the Senator state how long that practice has been going on?

Mr. KELLOGG. It has been going on for 25 years.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Is it not remarkable, in view of that fact, that our exports of merchandise have grown as fast as those of other countries?

Mr. KELLOGG. Our exports have not grown as rapidly as those of foreign countries in proportion to the amount of our commerce.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. If the Senator will look at the Statistical Abstract, he will see that our exports of merchandise during the period he mentions, 1900 to 1913, increased over $1,157,000,000, and I have drawn the Senator's attention to the reason why our exports of agricultural products did not increase in as large a per cent—that it was simply due to the fact that we were consuming them ourselves. If under a condition of competition our manufacturing exports have increased practically as rapidly as the exports of these other countries, is it not a sure evidence that our system is as good as their system?

Mr. KELLOGG. Of course, since the war broke out we have had the world to ourselves.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I was not taking the war period. The Senator misunderstood me. I am taking the period ending with 1913—from 1900 to 1913—and during that period our exports of merchandise, including manufactured products, increased $1,157,000,000, which was almost as much as the other countries the Senator has named increased with their scheme of combination.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, I have no desire in any way to destroy or weaken the effect of the Sherman Antitrust Act as applied to the great corporations and combinations of this country. I believe it is necessary that we should keep open the avenues of enterprise so that any man with sufficient capital and energy and resourcefulness may engage in a separate business without being crushed by inordinate capital or by the unfair methods of competition which have in the past been pursued. But the main object of the law is to permit men to have a fair and open field in commerce, and the greatest obstacle to that fair and open field has been unfair methods of competition, crushing out the competitors by an advantage in freight rates and ocean rates and various other devices which in the past have been used to eliminate the competitor in business.

There is nothing illegal about a combination of capital. I heard it stated on the floor that if it was illegal in this country, and if it was wrong in this country, it was wrong the world over. It is not illegal to combine capital any more than it is illegal to combine labor. Both are legal. It depends upon what combined capital does or what combined labor does. It is only illegal to make combinations when they are in restraint of trade, and only wrong because the statute says that that form of combination shall not be permitted.

But many lawyers hold that it is perfectly legal to create common selling agents to sell goods in foreign countries. In other words, that the Sherman law, like all other laws in this country, has no extraterritorial effect and that when an enterprise or agreement is to be executed in Germany or France or some other country, we have a right to carry out the contract according to the laws of that country. Let me illustrate: Some years ago some of our manufacturers, desiring to sell goods in Germany, were confronted with the proposition of joining with the German and English manufacturers in an agreement whereby they were to furnish a certain percentage of the products at a definite price. The agreement was approved by the German Government. Our manufacturers were afraid to participate, because after taking the advice of four or five lawyers, who disagreed as to its legality, they were afraid of being prosecuted, and withdrew from the transaction.

It is inconceivable that when the English, German, or French Governments permit their manufacturers to combine in one selling agency, to sell in South America, backed by their combined capital, energy, and enterprise, that we should force our merchants to have separate agencies, because if they were selling in this country we would not permit it. I can not understand why we should apply to our merchants, dealing in foreign countries, a different rule than foreign countries apply to their merchants dealing in the same country, when we can protect our producers and consumers at home, as I believe this act does protect them.

Now, let me consider this bill. I have no doubt that many Senators believe that they could draw a better bill. That is common in the Senate. I have often thought that I could draw a better bill than the one I voted for. But the question is, Does this bill reasonably effectuate the object which we have in mind?

It was said that if we permit common selling agencies a coordination of their capital and enterprise in foreign commerce we will open the door and they will combine in everything pertaining to domestic commerce. Let us see. The bill carefully defines what export trade is. It provides—

> That the words "export trade" wherever used in this act mean solely trade or commerce in goods, wares, or merchandise exported, or in the course of being exported from the United States or any Territory thereof to any foreign country; but the words "export trade"—

As amended by the amendment of the Senator from Ohio—> shall not be deemed to include the production, manufacture, or selling for consumption or for resale within the United States or any Territory thereof of such goods, wares, or merchandise, or any act in the course of such production, manufacture, or selling for consumption or for resale.

I do not see how it is possible to more accurately confine the bill to purely export trade than is done in this clause.

Under this, a selling agency could only be formed for the purpose of disposing of the goods in export trade. The next provision of the bill permits associations entered into for the sole purpose of engaging in export trade. But in order that such agreement made or done in the course of such export trade, such as a common trading agency, shall not be used to injure the manufacturers or producers, who do not join in the common selling agency or other agreement, the following provision of the bill is inserted:

> Provided such association, agreement, or act is not in restraint of trade within the United States, and is not in restraint of the export trade of any domestic competitor of such association: And provided further, That such association does not, either in the United States or elsewhere, enter into any agreement, understanding, or conspiracy, or do any act which artificially or intentionally and unduly enhances or depresses prices within the United States of commodities of the class exported by such association.

Not only that, but the bill contains further provisions that prohibit the use of unfair methods of competition in foreign commerce. Let me illustrate: Some years ago a large oil company was selling lubricating oil in South Africa. It was the largest exporter, although there were many others, and it made an arrangement with steamship companies whereby its freight rates were to be reduced and the freight rates to its competitors were to be increased. That was investigated and prohibited. That is a species of unfair methods of competition which the bill fully covers. The American exporter who does not wish to go into the export business through a common selling agency is protected.

Mr. HARDING. The Senator is aware, is he not, that any such action as that would be illegal and impossible under the Federal shipping law?

Mr. KELLOGG. Absolutely. But I gave it simply as an illustration.

So the bill not only protects the competitor in the export trade, but it gives the Federal Trade Commission jurisdiction over the entire subject. It provides that—

> Whenever the Federal Trade Commission shall have reason to believe that an association or any agreement made or act done by such association is in restraint of trade within the United States or in restraint of the export trade of any domestic competitor of such association, or that an association either in the United States or elsewhere has entered into any agreement, understanding, or conspiracy, or done any act which artificially or intentionally and unduly enhances or depresses prices within the United States of commodities of the class exported by such association, it shall summon such association, its officers—

And so forth, and gives the Federal Trade Commission power to remedy the evil.

Mr. President, it is not possible to permit our manufacturers, through their combined capital and energy, to have joint selling agencies to push their commerce in foreign countries unless we permit them to coordinate in some such way as this, and I do not believe it is possible to grant them any relief with greater restrictions for the protection of the people of this country and for the protection of their competitors than this bill grants.

I am quite aware, as I said before, that lawyers disagree as to the validity of common selling agencies and the validity of the coordination of separate concerns purely in the export business. I, for one, believe them to be legal; that upon well-established legal principles it never could have been the intention nor within the letter of the law to extend the Sherman Act to foreign countries and there regulate matter of selling and other negotiations.

Suppose, as I said before, the German Government should approve a cartel which limited the amount and fixed the price at which all manufacturers should sell their products in Germany. Is it possible that under our laws, our manufacturers could not sell in that country under those conditions? It certainly could not be in violation of the public policy of this country for an American merchant, engaged in competing for the commerce of the world, to enter into agreements which were approved by the public policy of nations with which we are competing, certainly they could do business in France, England, Germany, or Italy according to the laws of those countries. But so long as lawyers disagree, then we ought to make it clear. If that is now the law, the bill can do no harm. If it is not the law, it makes our business men safe and they can go on and push their foreign commerce when the war closes.

I know it is said that there is no necessity for this act now that the great calamity which has overtaken the world has forced those nations to come to us for the necessaries of life, for manufactured articles, and for munitions of war. But, Mr. President, those countries have not neglected their foreign commerce even in the hour of their peril.

Mr. President, the war will close some day; God knows, I hope it will close soon, and when the war closes and we must again assemble the tangled threads of the commercial, industrial, and economic life of the world, let us be prepared to hold our place in a commerce which goes to the very vitals, to the very foundation of the prosperity of this Nation, which furnishes to labor a large part of its opportunity and wage, which furnishes our merchants their occupation, and employs millions of our capital.

We are a great surplus-producing people; we must continue to be surplus-producing people; we have the greatest fields of raw material, as yet almost untouched; unlimited fields of coal, beyond anything known anywhere in the world; copper, iron, steel, lumber, and agricultural products; and a soil rich beyond that known even to ancient civilization. Why not organize a merchant marine to sail the ocean and enter every port, and banking facilities to reach the commerce of the world; and why not permit our merchants and manufacturers to combine their energies, while maintaining their separate organizations, in pushing a commerce of such vast benefit to the people?

This would tend to build up individual enterprise. I say that when you permit them to have joint selling agencies, when you permit them to coordinate their industries simply in their foreign commerce, it takes the surplus of their products, it encourages them to maintain the independence of their separate industries. It is my belief that the great future of this country does not depend upon large combinations of capital. It depends more upon individual enterprise, on the proprietor of the small farm, the small or reasonably sized independent manufacturer, the proprietor of the mercantile business, where the individual can, by his energy and enterprise, build up his own business and leave it as a heritage to his children. I do not believe there is any danger in permitting, under such restrictions as this bill imposes, our industries to coordinate their capital, labor, and enterprise in meeting the competition of the world.

[APPENDIX.]

The report of the Board of Trade committee on financial facilities for trade, particularly with reference to financing over-seas contracts, recommended the establishment of an institution with the following primary objects:

(A) To afford advice and financial assistance to British commercial and industrial undertakings from their inception and generally to further the development of British trade industry and commerce.

(B) To make advances for the enlargement of works and the extension of plant and for the amalgamation and coordination of works and businesses with a view to effecting economies in the cost of production.

(C) To render financial assistance in connection with transactions involving long periods of credit.

(D) To assist in obtaining orders from abroad for British manufacturers and traders and to grant financial facilities for the execution of such orders, especially when such orders are intended to be executed in the United Kingdom.

(E) To undertake credit operations and to draw and accept bills.

(F) To acquaint themselves with the conditions of trade and with the business requirements of all countries of the world and to enter into banking agency arrangements in such countries with colonial or British foreign banks or where necessary to open up branches and agencies in such countries.

(G) To establish, equip, and maintain information bureaus in close touch with the department of commercial intelligence of the Board of Trade for furnishing British merchants and manufacturers and the business community generally with reliable data and information upon openings for trade, new contracts, State and other loan and issue proposals, and generally upon all matters relating to foreign trade and business, and to undertake the examination of industrial projects.

(H) To act as an agent for carrying through over-seas commercial and financial transactions in which your Majesty's Government may be interested and to receive official recognition and assistance.

(J) To undertake trading operations and business on their own account or jointly with others, either through the medium of syndicate or otherwise.

In accordance with this recommendation the British Government chose Baron Faringdon and others to organize the British Trade Corporation. Upon presentation of their petition, setting forth the purposes of the proposed corporation in accordance with the recommendations of the Board of Trade committee, royal charter was granted on April 21, 1917, conferring upon the corporation the following power:

(A) To act as agents for any governments or authorities, or for any bankers, manufacturers, merchants, shippers, and others, and to carry on agency business of any description, including the power to act as attorneys, and to give discharges and receipts.

(B) To carry on business as contractors, merchants, or traders on their own account.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVAL.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Sharkey, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on the 7th instant approved and signed the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 111) declaring that a state of war exists between the Imperial and Royal Austro-Hungarian Government and the Government and the people of the United States, and making provision to prosecute the same.

HOMESTEAD SETTLERS AND ENTRYMEN.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN in the chair) laid before the Senate the following amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2334) to authorize absence by homestead settlers and entrymen, and for other purposes, which was to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That during the pendency of the existing war any homestead settler or entryman shall be entitled to a leave of absence from his land for the purpose of performing farm labor, and such absence, while actually engaged in farm labor, shall, upon compliance with the terms of this act, be counted as constructive residence: Provided, That each settler or entryman within 15 days after leaving his claim for the purpose herein provided shall file notice thereof in the United States Land Office, and at the expiration of the calendar year file in said land office of the district wherein his claim is situated a written statement, under oath and corroborated by two witnesses, giving the date or dates when he left his claim, date or dates of return thereto, and where and for whom he was engaged in farm labor during such period or periods of absence: Provided further, That nothing herein shall excuse any homestead settler or entryman from making improvements or performing the cultivation required by applicable law upon his claim or entry: Provided further, That the provisions of this act shall apply only to homestead settlers and entrymen who may have filed their application prior to the passage of this act. The Secretary of the Interior is authorized to provide rules and regulations for carrying this act into effect.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, this is a bill which was introduced by the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS] and passed the Senate during the extraordinary session. It has been passed by the House in amended form, but the amendment is not of any great consequence. In my judgment, it rather improves the bill. The Senator from Montana has requested me, when the amendment was laid before the Senate, to move that it be concurred in. I therefore make that motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Colorado that the amendment of the House of Representatives be concurred in.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. What is the title of the bill?

Mr. SHAFROTH. The title of the bill is "To authorize absence by homestead settlers and entrymen, and for other purposes." I will state to the Senator that it simply gives a homesteader the right to leave his homestead if he does other productive work on the farm. Some of these homesteads are grazing homesteads, and it is very important at this crisis that we should have as large a production of food products as we can possibly secure. For this reason the bill provides that absence for such a purpose shall not run against the time the entryman is required to remain on the homestead as provided by law.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I have no objection to the proposition contained in the bill, but I wondered why, if the amendment is only immaterial and unimportant, it was necessary to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill and insert an entirely new construction.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I do not know as to that; but the copy which has been handed to me by the clerk of the Committee on Public Lands simply shows the insertion of the words "within 15 days" at a certain point, and at the end of the bill the addition of a provision reading:

Provided further, That the provisions of this act shall apply only to homestead settlers and entrymen who may have filed their application prior to the passage of this act.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I make no objection at all. I simply did not understand why the Senate bill should have been stricken out after the enacting clause and a new bill inserted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the amendment of the House of Representatives.

The amendment was concurred in.

PROMOTION OF EXPORT TRADE.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I should be very glad if there is any Senator present who cares to speak, if he will take the floor now. One or two Senators desire to speak on the bill to-morrow, and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] also desires to speak, but does not feel quite equal to the task this afternoon. Under these circumstances I hardly know what to suggest. I dislike to lose the entire afternoon, but I want to accommodate Senators.

Mr. REED. I think the proper thing to do is to adjourn. The Senate has practically disbanded voluntarily; there are now in the Chamber about 12 Senators, and during the latter part of the remarks of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG] there were probably 15 or 16 present. This bill involves a complete change of the policy of the United States with reference to trust legislation, and it ought to be at least briefly heard by the Senate. The Senate is very thin, and I think we should adjourn.

Mr. POMERENE. I do not want to allow that statement to go unchallenged, but I do not care to discuss it now. As there is no other Senator who desires to speak this afternoon, I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 1 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, December 11, 1917, at 12 o'clock meridian.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, December 11, 1917.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we thank Thee for the abundant evidence of Thy continued providence and care for us as a Nation. Thou art leading us upon a path that we have not known, but we are sure it is Thy way and Thy path. We thank Thee to-day that the land of our most precious memories and of our sacred shrines has been rescued from the hand of the infidel and fallen once more into the hands and control of a Christian nation. May this be the token to us of the speedy and final conquest of truth and law and justice in all the earth. For Christ's sake. Amen.

WILLIAM S. KENYON, a Senator from the State of Iowa; WILLIAM H. KING, a Senator from the State of Utah; JAMES HAMILTON LEWIS, a Senator from the State of Illinois; WILLIAM H. THOMPSON, a Senator from the State of Kansas; and JAMES E. WATSON, a Senator from the State of Indiana, appeared in their seats to-day.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. SMOOT and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

Doc. No. 126), which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Sergeant at Arms of the United States Senate, transmitting, pursuant to law, a complete account of all property in his possession on the 3d day of December, 1917 (S. Doc, No. 125), which, with the accompanying paper, was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I present resolutions adopted by the Buffalo (N. Y.) Chamber of Commerce, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD. They are short.

There being no objection, the resolutions were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolutions adopted by the Buffalo Chamber of Commerce, November 13, 1917.

Whereas the foreign trade of the United States for the last fiscal year shows a balance in favor of this country of nearly $4,000,000,000; and

Whereas loans to our allies greatly exceed our "favorable balance of trade"; and

Whereas the continuance of any set of conditions which tend to curtail imports because imports represent the only form of cash payment which our entire foreign trade is yielding; and

Whereas high foreign exchange premiums penalize imports and tend indirectly to increase the enormous inflationary debit balance which the Nation is rolling up against the future in the form of foreign loans; and

Whereas the advances to our allies are now proving a boomerang leading to the depreciation of the American dollar in foreign markets, because of lack of governmental regulation; and

Whereas all of our allies are now taking every step necessary to protect their own currencies abroad; and

Whereas the American dollar is now at a discount of from 3 to 20 per cent in neutral foreign countries: Be it

Resolved, That the United States Government, through its proper departments, take whatever action may be necessary to keep at parity the American dollar in every country of the world; and be it further

Resolved, That the Buffalo Chamber of Commerce express to Congress a keen sense of appreciation of the splendid constructive work done by our Senators and Representatives in enacting legislation to provide for the effective conduct of the war; and be it further

Resolved, That we point out that the remarkable record of Congress in this regard, together with the wonderful work being done by the President and Cabinet and Council of National Defense, is such as to merit the gratitude of the public and, in fact, of all liberty-loving peoples throughout the world. It is but fair that opportunity be taken to fully convey to them these sentiments of the American people. Those who know their work will be inspired by the splendid example of their official representatives to render the largest measure of individual effort and sacrifice. The quality and unity of service that has been rendered to the Nation during the past few months, regardless of party lines, is unparalleled in history.

Mr. GRONNA. I present petitions very numerously signed by citizens of a number of counties in my State praying for the immediate submission of a Federal suffrage amendment to the legislatures of the several States. I ask that the body of one of the petitions be printed in the RECORD and that they be referred to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

There being no objection, the petitions were referred to the Committee on Woman Suffrage, and one was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

To Senator GRONNA:

The undersigned women of ——— County, State of North Dakota, do hereby petition you to work and vote for the immediate submission of a Federal suffrage amendment to the legislatures of the several States in order that the women of the United States may become the political equals of those of Great Britain, Australia, New Zealand, Canada, and the Scandinavian countries.

Mr. GRONNA. I present a resolution adopted by the Commercial Club of Grand Forks, N. Dak., which I ask may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

GRAND FORKS, N. DAK., November 27, 1917.

Hon. A. J. GRONNA,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: The following resolutions received a unanimous vote of our board of directors on Monday, November 26. Copies of these resolutions have been mailed to Representatives, Senators, committee men at Washington, and to the commercial organizations of the Northwest. We shall appreciate very much your aid in this very important matter.

We, the directors of the Grand Forks Commercial Club, in session on Monday, November 26, 1917, having duly considered the work and benefits of the war-camp community recreation fund, appreciate very much the value of this work as it is being carried out and believe that it is, indeed, worthy, but that in part it must duplicate the work of the Army Y. M. C. A.

We are anxious and willing to cooperate heartily with the Government at this time and of the world's crisis, as is proven by our record for the first and second liberty loan, the Red Cross, and Army Y. M. C. A. work. We are not only reaching our quotas but in many instances passing the standards set up for us. However, we feel that in these matters we have all we should undertake. For that reason we are inclined to discourage the raising of this war-camp community recreation fund in this popular way and have in session on this day adopted the following resolutions:

Be it resolved, That we, the directors of the Grand Forks Commercial Club, having sons in training camps, the interests of the Government at heart, and certainly the best wishes for a victorious outcome of the world's war, feel that the character of the environment surrounding the military camps should be under the best possible influence: Be it further

Resolved, That in order to bring about the best moral atmosphere for our training camps that we recommend to our Government at Washington that the matter of proper recreation of our soldiers in the camps and cantonments be placed under military control and that the moral and physical life of our soldiers be considered as important in their training as food and clothing. We recommend the Government's close watch through military control of our war camps and in case more funds are needed the placing of a liberty loan for this purpose.

BOARD OF DIRECTORS COMMERCIAL CLUB OF GRAND FORKS, C. W. GRAVES, Secretary.

Mr. GRONNA presented a petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, of Fairmount, N. Dak., praying for national prohibition, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of the Wells County Rural Letter Carriers' Association, of Harvey, N. Dak., praying for an increase in the salaries of the rural letter carriers, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

The motion was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SMOOT. I did not hear the title. I ask that the Secretary may report the bill by title.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the bill.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the county of Hardeman be, and it hereby is, transferred from the Fort Worth division to the Wichita Falls division of the northern judicial district of Texas.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SHORTAGE OF SUGAR AND COAL.

Mr. LODGE. I submit a resolution, and I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The resolution (S. Res. 163) was read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Manufactures be directed to inquire into the causes of the shortage of sugar and coal and report to the Senate thereon, together with their recommendation of any steps which they may deem it necessary to take with a view to remedying the conditions and, if possible, preventing their recurrence.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the consideration of the resolution?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do not object to its consideration, but in connection with the resolution I desire to have read from the desk an article which is very pertinent to the inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will read.

The Secretary read as follows:

BEER AND THE RAILROADS.

Did you ever stop to think that while our Federal food-control authorities are drafting the patriotism of the United States in every department and the President has enforced a reduction of 25 per cent in the amount of grain used in the manufacture of beer by cutting the amount of alcohol in beer 25 per cent, the greatest saving now, when most needed, would be made by stopping entirely the shipping of beer and also the returning of barrels, kegs, and cases of bottles, which take as much freight space as the original shipment? The railroads formerly carried these "returns" free.

You will see sidetracks full of cars loaded with coal, while people are suffering for the want of coal and factories shut down, throwing employees out of work, because of the lack of coal, but you will see trainloads of beer going by on schedule time.

For the life of me I can not understand why the German saloonkeeper and the German brewers are so favored by legislation and rulings in this country. I can not understand why the railroad presidents and their vice presidents who operate the roads should be unable to move coal, food, paper, and the things which people need, want, and pay for, and yet can get through carloads of beer with perfect regularity. Of course, it is just such favoritism in nonessentials that has broken down the use of the railroads for necessities and will compel the United States Government to take over the operation of the railroads very likely for good.

The Blade's readers have not seen, nor have I, this question of beer and the railroads brought to the attention of the public. The transporting of beer in barrels, kegs, and bottles amounts to more in mile tons, which is the basis railroads figure on, than the cars used to transport more than half the wheat crop of the United States. Even with the 25 per cent reduction in the amount of alcohol there will be wasted in the manufacture of beer 54,000,000 bushels of grain a year, and the weight of the water in the beer and the kegs and bottles multiplies this by 8, so you have, on a transportation basis, the weight of more than 432,000,000 bushels of grain used up for beer shipment alone, or 1,080,000 carload lots a year, enough to relieve the railroad congestion of the United States for all time.

When the President ordered a reduction of 25 per cent in the amount of alcohol in beer this left the percentage of alcohol 3 instead of 4. But the result is only an increase in the amount of water, which increases the profits of the brewer and saloonkeeper. Beer drinkers who want to get the same amount of alcohol as before will have to drink one-third more beer than they formerly did.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I hope the resolution will pass, and I hope the committee will investigate the statement made in the article which has been read.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

LIEU LAND CLAIMS.

Mr. JONES of Washington submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 164), which was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

HEARINGS BEFORE THE COMMITTEE ON MANUFACTURES.

Mr. REED submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 166), which was read and referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

THE WHITE HOUSE, 10 December, 1917.

PROMOTION OF EXPORT TRADE.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The morning business is closed.

Mr. POMERENE. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business, House bill 2316, be laid before the Senate and proceeded with.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 2316) to promote export trade, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The pending amendment is the amendment of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS].

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I wish to take a few moments to complete what I began the other day and especially to reply to certain suggestions that were made by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG].

To recall to the minds of the Senators present the exact question I may be allowed to repeat that the bill before the Senate is intended to repeal the antitrust law and section 7 of the Clayton Act, in so far as our foreign trade is concerned. The amendment which I have offered, and which is the pending question, proposes to make lawful the establishment and conduct of a common selling agency in foreign countries entered into by those who manufacture or sell competitive products.

I said the other day, and further reflection has only deepened my conviction upon that point, that the proposal to establish a common selling agency in a foreign country by producers or manufacturers in this country is entirely lawful under the law as it is. There are two reasons for my belief in this respect. In the first place there is a territorial immunity, if I may term it so. Acts done in a foreign country by citizens of the United States, even though they are in restraint of trade, are not offenses against our antitrust law if they are lawful under the laws of the country in which they are done or performed. This is not an original conclusion upon my part, for it has been so determined by the Supreme Court of the United States. The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG] I think fully recognizes that proposition and does not controvert it; nor do I understand that the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] disputes the correctness of the statement I have made.

In order, however, that there may remain no doubt whatsoever about it, I refer the Senate to a case which is very well known by students of this subject, known as the American Banana Co. against the United Fruit Co., reported in Two hundred and thirteenth United States Supreme Court Reports. In that case the American Banana Co., which was a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Alabama, as I remember, brought suit against the United Fruit Co., a corporation organized under the laws of the State of New Jersey, asserting that the United Fruit Co. had monopolized, or attempted to monopolize, the entire foreign fruit business coming from the West Indies; that it had pursued a series of practices which had been condemned by the Supreme Court in many cases; and that the United Fruit Co. had finally and through the intervention of the Government of Costa Rica, entirely destroyed the plantations and the business of the American Banana Co.

There are many questions in that case, and the one which would naturally be suggested by the last statement I have made is probably not material, namely, the difficulty of asserting and proving that the acts of a foreign government could under any circumstances be unlawful as against a law of the United States. I do not dwell upon that particular phase of the matter. However, the Supreme Court of the United States, after carefully considering the whole field, held that the acts that were done, performed, and committed by a citizen of the United States in Costa Rica or Panama—because these things were done in a territory formerly claimed by Colombia and which was in dispute as between the State of Panama and the Government of Costa Rica, but which afterwards came to the State of Panama under the revolution and organization which followed—could not be in violation of the antitrust act. I shall not go into the details, but shall content myself with reading three brief extracts from the decision. The court said, on page 355, after stating the case with great particularity:

> It is obvious that, however stated, the plaintiff's case depends on several rather startling propositions. In the first place, the acts causing the damage were done, so far as appears, outside the jurisdiction of the United States and within that of other States. It is surprising to hear it argued that they were governed by the act of Congress.

Do not mistake the meaning of that sentence. This is stated not because these acts, or some of them, were committed by an organized government, not because they were committed by the Government of Costa Rica, for the acts of the United Fruit Co. itself, its officers and agents, were quite sufficient to bring the case within the antitrust law if territorial immunity did not exist. Again, on page 357, the court said:

> In the case of the present statute the improbability of the United States attempting to make acts done in Panama or Costa Rica criminal is obvious, yet the law begins by making criminal the acts for which it gives a right to sue—

Referring, of course, to the first section of the antitrust law, which declares to be unlawful certain acts committed in restraint of trade. The court continued:

> We think it entirely plain that what the defendant—

Speaking of the United Fruit Co.—

> did in Panama or Costa Rica is not within the scope of the statute so far as the present suit is concerned. Other objections of a serious nature are urged, but need not be discussed.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. KELLOGG. If the Senator from Iowa will permit me, I desire to make a suggestion which I wish he would consider. In the United Fruit Co. case the acts which the United Fruit Co. procured to be done in Yucatan were acts of destruction of competitors' property in a foreign country.

Mr. CUMMINS. They were; that is, some of the acts were for the purpose of inducing the Government of Costa Rica to destroy the property of the American Banana Co.

Mr. KELLOGG. Yes. In the question of a common selling agency the manufacturers, we will say, of this country must get together and must agree that John Jones shall be their agent in Yucatan and that they will furnish him certain goods, possibly for a certain price, which he may place for them in that country. Now, the difficulty arises between the banana case and the corn-selling agency case, whether or not an agreement in this country by American manufacturers to create a foreign selling agency and to furnish them goods is not partly affecting commerce in this country, and is therefore within the Sherman law. I agree with the Senator that it is not, but some of the best lawyers in this country disagree with us and advise their clients that they can not make such an agreement. For instance, the Federal Trade Commission has reported that leading business concerns on the Pacific coast have initiated a selling agency which has not gone into effect because of their fear of the law. If they already have the right, then to give them the right to create common selling agencies can not do any harm.

Mr. CUMMINS. But, Mr. President, in the bill which is proposed we not only give them the right which the Senator from Minnesota thinks is undisputed, but we give them a great number of other privileges, which are condemned, in my opinion, by the best sense of the commercial world. In order to remove the doubt which the Senator from Minnesota has in mind I have introduced the amendment which is now pending; but I do not desire to go further than to remove the doubt.

I refer again to the case from which I have been reading. It must be remembered by the Senate, and especially by the Senator from Minnesota, who is perfectly familiar with the case and with the circumstances, I know, that the acts alleged against the United Fruit Co. were mainly committed in the United States; that is to say, the plan was made in the United States; the officers and agents and employers were hired within the United States; there were more things done by the United Fruit Co. in the United States in the case to which I am referring than could possibly be done in the United States by different producers or manufacturers agreeing to select a common agency in a foreign country, and to maintain that agency.

I read now the last paragraph of the opinion, which will make the thought I have just expressed perfectly clear:

> Giving to this complaint every reasonable latitude of interpretation, we are of opinion that it alleges no case under the act of Congress and discloses nothing that we can suppose to have been a tort where it was done.

Now, mark you—

> A conspiracy in this country to do acts in another jurisdiction does not draw to itself those acts and make them unlawful, if they are permitted by the local law.

By the "local law" the Supreme Court in this case means, of course, the law of the Government of Costa Rica or of Panama, as the case may be.

Mr. President, I have cited this case and indulged in these observations not because I think it is moral or upright for a citizen of this country to organize combinations in restraint of trade to be operated elsewhere, but I have done it for the purpose of showing that under no circumstances is there any reason for the present modification of the antitrust law in order to meet the desires or the alleged needs of the exporters of the United States. The more satisfactory reason which I gave the other day, and which is not seriously disputed, is this, that the cooperation or combination of producers in this country for the purpose of marketing their goods abroad fairly and honestly and conducting their business in a spirit and under methods which commend themselves to the average sense of the country is not a violation of the antitrust law, has never been held to be a violation of the law, and never will be held to be a violation of the law.

The Supreme Court of the United States went further upon this immediate subject in the early cases known as the Traffic Association cases than it has ever gone since; that is, with regard to a voluntary agreement among competitors intended to stifle or restrain competition. There is some language in those early cases from which it might be deduced that any reduction of competition would constitute a violation of the law, but if any such conclusion can be drawn from those cases it was overturned completely and entirely by the decisions of the Supreme Court in the Standard Oil Co. case and in the American Tobacco Co. case. No man will assert, if there are a hundred rivals, competitors in this country, manufacturing or producing a particular commodity or a series of commodities, that it is in violation of the law for two of them to consolidate, two of them to unite, and in that way and to that degree lessen competition; no one has ever contended for any such construction of the law.

There must be something more than the mere elimination of competition between a reasonable number, of a larger number, engaged in the same business; otherwise there has not been a consolidation in the United States in 25 years that is not condemned by the law; otherwise there could be no concentration of business between rival or competitive producers or manufacturers.

The most obvious or clearest case with respect to that is the case of the United States Steel Corporation. Does the Senator from Ohio contend that the mere consolidation of 25 per cent or 30 per cent or 40 per cent of a particular kind of business in one ownership or under one agency is in and of itself a restraint of trade? It may be, and it may not be. It depends entirely upon the consequences which follow from the consolidation or concentration, and with that of course is inseparably connected the manner in which the business is transacted. After all the final inquiry of the court is, Does the agreement, no matter what form it takes—whether it is an incorporation or whether it is an independent agreement—restrain trade in the United States, or, in the present instance, does it restrain the foreign trade of the United States?

It would be monstrous to contend that if we had 100 exporters desiring to sell goods in Brazil or in the Argentine Republic two of them could not unite in establishing a common representative, and I care not whether it is established through one form or the other the effect would be to eliminate competition as between those two producers or manufacturers. But in and of itself the elimination of that combination, if the channels of trade are open for all who desire to enter that trade, and if no unfair and dishonest practices are employed, would not constitute a violation of the antitrust law.

There have been great clouds of misapprehension, a perfect spasm of hysteria, with regard to the antitrust law. I think it is one of the most beneficent laws ever enacted. I think it has done more for the development of the United States than any other enactment of an economic character. I think it has done more and will do more to promote and expand foreign trade than any other legislative provision that we could conceive. But when either the fears or the malicious design of manufacturers or their counsel, in order to rid themselves of its general beneficial effect, put upon the law a construction which no court has ever put upon it, and which the common sense of mankind instantly repudiates, in order to secure some advantages for themselves, I protest, and, while I do not impute any such motive to those who are furthering this legislation so far as this Chamber is concerned, that is the underlying reason for the attack upon the statute.

Mr. President, I conclude that phase of my remarks by the repeated assertion that what the exporters of this country desire to do, so far as they have disclosed their desires to the committee, so far as they have revealed them to the public, can be done under the law as it is; and if there be a timid or shrinking producer anywhere who needs further assurance, the amendment which I have offered will give it to him. It will say to him: "If you doubt the legality of uniting with some other producer or some other manufacturer and of establishing a common selling agency for your goods abroad, in order to reduce the expenses of your business or in order to enable you to make organizations and conduct preliminary advertising and arrangements that you can not afford to do alone, this amendment will give you that assurance." But the producer must remember, and he ought to remember, that whether he adopts a common selling agency or not, he must do nothing that will restrain the foreign trade of the United States, just as he must be careful to do nothing that will restrain the domestic trade of the United States.

The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG] made a very interesting and, I think, a very instructive argument in favor of the expansion of our foreign trade. There is nothing that he can say or that any other Senator can say looking toward that very desirable end that will not meet my hearty concurrence. I believe in adopting every policy consistent with morals that will tend to enlarge our foreign trade. But, Mr. President, if there is no difference of opinion—and there can be none—with respect to that fundamental proposition, wherein does the difference of opinion among the people of this country lie if there is any real difference of opinion? It lies in the methods which are best adapted to enlarge or to expand our foreign trade.

The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG] apparently believes, and the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE], who has given the subject much thought and consideration, clearly believes, that our foreign trade will be enlarged and fortified if we repeal the antitrust law with regard to it. I do not. I think the repeal of the antitrust law, so far as our foreign trade is concerned, will have a certain and a disastrous tendency to restrict our foreign trade. I think it will do much to destroy a structure which we have already reared and which is the admiration of every man who is proud of American enterprise and ingenuity. I want to retain this protection for American foreign trade. It will do for our foreign trade just what it has done for our domestic trade.

I remarked the other day, and I seem to have been somewhat misunderstood in the remark, that the growth and development of the United States in foreign trade has been more rapid than that of any other country in the world in the last 5 or 10 years. I assume that those who heard me understood me to confine that observation to the part of our foreign trade which is affected by the antitrust law or could be affected by the antitrust law. I assume that I was not understood to say that our exports of foodstuffs, which are always limited to the production influenced by favorable or unfavorable conditions, were included in that suggestion. But I repeat now the statement that we have advanced in domestic production in the last 10 years—and I will take the 10 years before the war—more rapidly than any other country in the world; and I assert again that we have increased our foreign trade, the volume of our exports, more rapidly than any other country in the world, so far as exports are concerned which by any possibility could be controlled by the antitrust law.

I will exclude foodstuffs now and lay before the Senate just two items of information which any Senator can verify by reference to the Statistical Abstract. May I premise it by one other suggestion?

I take the 10 years before the war. I agree with the Senator from Minnesota that what has happened since the war furnishes no valuable information and furnishes no real standard for determining what we can do in competition with the rest of the world. It is only fair, in order to ascertain what we can do, to go back to the years before the war, and I have taken for my comparison the 10 years immediately preceding the war—that is, the years from 1904 to 1913, both inclusive.

In 1904 the United States exported to all countries, of all commodities, except foodstuffs, products of the value of $890,593,716. In 1913 we exported of the same commodities, again excluding foodstuffs, merchandise and products of the value of $1,925,394,719. In the 10 years we increased our exports of these manufactured and semimanufactured commodities and raw material which enters into manufactures by more than 116 per cent; and there is no country on earth that can exhibit a like growth in the like products.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do.

Mr. KELLOGG. I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa why he excludes from the exports of this country manufactured food products, because as to some of those manufactured food products they come in competition with the products of foreign countries. Furthermore, the figures which I gave were taken from a report of the Federal Trade Commission, after years of investigation, and are substantiated by the reports of the various departments of the Government.

Mr. CUMMINS. I am not doubting the correctness of the table which was introduced by the Senator from Minnesota. Whether the table is of value or not depends entirely upon the manner of making it up; and I do not think it is of any value in this controversy, because it can not be asserted that the exportation of our foodstuffs, whether manufactured or otherwise, has been in any degree affected by the antitrust law, at least from my standpoint.

So, Mr. President, we have done under the antitrust law what no other country has done; and had not the war intervened I have no doubt that our experience during the three years or more which have elapsed would have been as fortunate and as happy as our experience in the 10 years preceding the war. I can not see, therefore, why we should undertake at this time and under these circumstances the repeal of the antitrust law.

Is it not somewhat illogical for a Senator who is speaking for the expansion—the enlargement of our trade to ask the repeal of a law the only prohibition of which is against a restraint of trade? All that the Congress has said—and this represents the policy of the United States—is that there shall be no contract or combination in restraint of foreign trade. It was not intended, of course, to aim a blow at foreign trade. It was intended to fortify foreign trade and to help build it up, and the statute declared that no one should lawfully restrain it. Now, whether our policy is better than the German policy, or whether it is better than the policy outlined in the report of the British Board of Trade and read by the Senator from Minnesota, is a subject upon which each Senator must make up his own mind. As for myself, as I said the other day, I am a believer in the American policy, which declares against restraint of trade. I am against the German policy, which seeks to establish a monopoly in every phase or branch of either civil or military life. The German policy is not confined to the mere permission to organize cartels and the agreements under which Germans do business abroad. The German policy goes very much further. I should like to know whether the Senator from Ohio favors the adoption in the United States of that policy. The German Government has not only permitted her merchants and manufacturers to enter into agreements which establish for the time being a monopoly in the particular business in which they are engaged, but it compels these merchants and manufacturers to do what it regards as best adapted for the empire as a whole.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. President——

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. McLEAN. I will not interrupt the Senator if he objects to the interruption.

Mr. CUMMINS. I have no objection.

Mr. McLEAN. The Senator has just read to the Senate some figures which indicate that our foreign trade has grown very rapidly from 1904 until 1914 or 1913.

Mr. CUMMINS. Including 1913.

Mr. McLEAN. Including 1913. I am informed that the entire foreign trade of the world in 1913 was something like $40,000,000,000—a little less. It seems to me that the question is not what we may get—and, of course, our trade has increased very rapidly—but whether we get our proportion in comparison with the proportion secured by other nations. To get that proportion we must take into consideration, it seems to me, the population. A nation with 2,000,000 people and 50,000 square miles of land would not be expected to get as large a percentage of foreign trade as a nation having 3,000,000 square miles of land and 100,000,000 people.

If the Senator will examine the figures based upon population, he will find that they are very startling, and I think contradict somewhat his theory that we have increased our foreign trade as rapidly as we should. If the Senator does not object, I should like to read a statement of the increase in foreign trade of Great Britain, Germany, and the United States for the period of 30 years from 1880 to 1910.

Mr. CUMMINS. If the statement is not too long, I shall not object.

Mr. McLEAN. It is a brief statement.

In 1880 Germany, with a population of 46,000,000, had a foreign trade of $1,430,000,000, or $31 per capita. The United States, with a population of 50,000,000, had a foreign trade of $1,600,000,000, or $32 per capita. Great Britain, with a population of 35,000,000, had a foreign trade of $3,500,000,000, or $100 per capita.

In 1910 Germany's population had increased to 64,000,000. Her foreign trade was $3,960,000,000, or $62 per capita. The United States, with 90,000,000 people, had a foreign trade of $3,300,000,000, or $37 per capita. The United Kingdom, with a population of 44,000,000, had a foreign trade of $5,550,000,000, or $126 per capita.

So we see that in this 30-year period Great Britain increased her foreign trade twice as fast as the United States, and Germany a little more than eight times as fast as the United States.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I think the basis is entirely erroneous. The United States until very recently exported practically nothing in manufactured products. If you will turn to the period of 30 years ago you will find that all the exports of manufactured products in the United States were so small as to be practically negligible. We are taking care of our own people first, and we have not been in a position until very recently to export practically anything of a manufactured kind. Now, we have put ourselves in that position. We have developed our industries so that they can compete with foreign countries in manufactured things, and we are going ahead, or were going ahead, according to my estimate, in a very satisfactory way.

Mr. McLEAN. I think the Senator will find that the proportionate increase in both Germany and Great Britain, certainly in Germany, was as rapid during the last 5 or 10 years as the increase in this country.

Mr. CUMMINS. I question that, Mr. President, although I would not want to dispute any conclusion announced by the Senator from Connecticut if he has examined it. I have already given the figures for our exports in manufactured goods and raw materials for manufacture.

The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG] a few days ago gave the percentage of increase for Great Britain and Germany, and for one or two other countries. Great Britain and Germany have no exports of agriculture products practically. Substantially all their exports are manufactured goods or goods partially manufactured. Therefore it is entirely correct to compare their growth in exports of such things with our growth in exports of such things.

The Senator from Minnesota said—I have not verified the statement, but I assume it is correct—that for a number of years—I have forgotten the number of years; whatever the years the percentage of increase was about 90 per cent. Now, our increase in 10 years has been more than 116 per cent. I cite this for the purpose of showing that the antitrust law has not seriously if at all prevented exports from the United States. On the contrary I believe that if there had been unlimited right of combination, unlimited right of monopoly, if there had been pursued the same policy with regard to foreign trade that was begun along about 1880 and which reached its culmination about 1901 in our domestic trade, our foreign trade would have met the same disaster which was plainly invited by that policy of monopoly, combination, unfair and unjust practices in business and other things of that sort.

Mr. President, I have said all that I desire to say with regard to the amendment I have offered and the merits of the bill which it seeks to amend. I sincerely hope that the Congress of the United States will not without the most serious reflection and careful study repeal an act which, in my judgment, has done more for the trade and commerce and industrial freedom of the people of this country than any other measure which ever passed the Congress of the United States.

Mr. WEEKS. Before the Senator from Iowa takes his seat I should like to ask him a question, and that is whether in his opinion this bill would not clear up the situation sufficiently so that manufacturers and exporters would know what they could do under the terms of the Sherman Antitrust Act. I am led to make that inquiry because I recall that Senator Hoar, of Massachusetts, was the chairman of the Judiciary Committee when that legislation was framed, and a little time after that he gave an opinion to what was known as the wire pool, as to what they could do under the terms of the bill. Later these people, going on and doing what he advised them they could do—and he was certainly the principal framer of the law—were prosecuted by the Government and were fined, having plead guilty by the advice of their attorneys, from one to five thousand dollars apiece for doing just what the framer of the law said they could do. Now, will not this proposed bill clear up the situation so that men engaged in foreign trade will know what their rights are?

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I am very glad to have an opportunity to answer that question. I am very familiar with the letter which Senator Hoar wrote to a great manufacturing establishment in Worcester shortly after the passage of the law, and I know also that he put upon the law an interpretation which the courts in the early days of the law did not adopt. But it is incorrect, I think, to say that the then Senator from Massachusetts was the author of the law, and had any better opportunity for knowing what it meant than others. The Senator from Massachusetts will remember that when Senator

Sherman of Ohio, introduced the bill it contained not a prohibition against restraint of trade; it contained simply a prohibition against interference with competition. The bill was referred to the Judiciary Committee and was considered by the committee and reported and debated at very great length along those lines, and with very great learning, too, and was finally again referred to the Judiciary Committee, and there, at least so it is claimed, the then Senator from Vermont, who for years occupied a very high place in the legal fraternity of the United States, presented what we now have as a substitute for the original Sherman bill as it had been amended in the Senate. That substitute was reported by the Judiciary Committee and Senator Hoar of Massachusetts took an active part, of course, in its discussion. I think some of his descendants have claimed that he had something to do with its composition. I will not attempt to settle that controversy, which is not material, anyhow; but, at any rate, I do not think the fact that the Senator from Massachusetts did not correctly interpret the law, as determined by the decisions which were made immediately afterwards, ought to have any weight whatever in the present interpretation of the law, because now for 27 years this law has been going through an evolution. It has passed through the courts in every possible form, and the decisions of the courts in my judgment at this time, leave no doubt whatsoever with regard to the rights of exporters into foreign countries. But even assuming that there is still doubt, I have attempted to remove the doubt, to the point of safety at any rate, by the amendment which I have offered, which explicitly declares that rival manufacturers in this country can unite in a foreign market in a common selling agency in order to lessen competition between themselves and in order to reduce the cost of doing business. More than this the exporters ought not to ask. More than this we can not safely give them. But I will frankly say that if we repeal the entire law as the bill proposes to do, so far as foreign trade is concerned, it would remove all doubt, for we would have no legislation whatever upon the subject and exporters and business men would be remitted to what is ordinarily known as the common law to guide them in the conduct of their business.

I hope I have answered the question.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, the Senator from Iowa has several times made the statement that it was the intention of this bill to repeal the Sherman antitrust law in so far as it applies to our foreign trade. I submit to the Senator that that overstates the purpose of the bill. We are very careful in this bill to provide that where restraint is due to unfair methods of competition they will be subject to control by the Federal Trade Commission, and also they have the power after investigation to refer these matters to the Department of Justice for such action as that department may deem proper. It is true it authorizes combination and associations, and to that extent it does repeal the act, but it does not permit the use of any unfair method of competition in the way of interfering with the foreign trade.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I can not speak for the intent in the mind of the Senator from Ohio, but if he intends to preserve any legislation upon the subject of foreign trade he must have carried out his purpose in the use of the words in lines 21 and 22 on page 2. The proviso in which these words are found reads in this way:

> Provided such association, agreement, or act is not in restraint of trade within the United States and is not in restraint of the export trade of any domestic competitor of such association.

I do not know what those last words mean. I think they are unknown to the law. I do not know what it would be simply to restrain the export trade of a domestic competitor, but I call the attention of the Senator from Ohio to the obvious fact that there is a wide fundamental difference between restraining the trade of a competitor and restraining trade considered generically. Every sale that a merchant makes restrains in some degree the trade of his competitor, or may restrain the trade of his competitor, but sales made by one engaged in business in a regular, fair, and honest way can not by any possibility be held to restrain trade.

So I think the Senator from Ohio is mistaken with regard to his interpretation of the proposed statute, and, while I have great confidence in his legal opinion and absolute confidence in the sincerity of his purpose, I adhere to my statement that this does repeal the antitrust law so far as foreign trade is concerned.

Mr. WEEKS. The statement which has just been made by the Senator from Iowa would seem to bear out the doubt which I had in my mind about the construction of the law. Of course, until they are construed by the courts, there must be doubt in the mind of even the soundest attorney.

Everyone will concede that the Senator from Iowa is such an attorney, and yet he says that he does not know what certain language which is in this bill means.

I want to get back once again to Senator Hoar, who, I think, at the time was the chairman of the Judiciary Committee. He states explicitly in his autobiography that he framed the Sherman Antitrust Act as it now stands on the statute books. Of course, whether he entirely framed it or not may be a question of doubt in the mind of the Senator from Iowa; but I am taking his language.

Mr. CUMMINS. I have never attempted to settle that controversy. I know that Senator Edmunds has claimed to be the author of this law, and his claim is supported by a good deal of proof.

Mr. WEEKS. That is not important; but Senator Hoar was an able lawyer——

Mr. CUMMINS. He was a very able lawyer.

Mr. WEEKS. And generally conceded to have been such; and yet he evidently, from the standpoint of the court, did not know what the law meant. Now, we are attempting to clear the situation so far as foreign trade is concerned, and the Senator from Iowa confesses on the floor of the Senate that he does not know what the language of the proposed bill means.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I confess that I do not know what the language I have quoted from the bill means, for, so far as I remember, it has never been used before and never been construed by any court; but I do know what the antitrust law means in so far as it has been construed by the Supreme Court of the United States, and I have attempted to show, and I hope successfully, that the construction of the Supreme Court removes all the doubt which the Senator from Massachusetts now has in his mind, and which may still linger in the minds of some manufacturers and producers.

Mr. WEEKS. Does the Senator from Iowa know how many cases are now pending for the dissolution of combinations or trusts, or whatever they may be called, under the provisions of the Sherman antitrust law?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not.

Mr. WEEKS. I do not know the number, but I know that there are a great many such cases. I assume that such companies or combinations have employed the best attorneys to advise them what they could do within the terms of the law. Evidently from the standpoint of the Government they have not been well advised, notwithstanding the decisions of the courts.

Mr. CUMMINS. That is true. I do not know anything about the facts which underlie these various cases. Some of them may be good cases and some of them may be poor cases; but, at any rate, the argument which the Senator from Massachusetts is inferentially making would lead to but one conclusion; that is, that we ought not to have any law on any subject, lest there should be differences of opinion about its application and interpretation.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. WOLCOTT] is ill at home and unable to attend the sessions of the Senate.

Mr. JAMES. I desire to announce the absence of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS], the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON], the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX], the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], and the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] on official business.

Mr. THOMPSON. I desire to announce the absence of the junior Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] on account of illness.

Mr. SHIELDS. I wish to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. MCKELLAR] on account of illness.

Mr. GERRY. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] on official business.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I desire to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. HUGHES] on account of illness.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-four Senators having answered to their names, a quorum of the Senate is present.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I wish it were possible to enlist the attention of the Members of the Senate to this very important bill. We have just called the roll, a quorum has answered "present," and yet there is not in the Chamber at this moment one-third of the membership. The fact illustrates the vice of undertaking to chain the attention of the Senate to legislation of this kind when a great war is pending and the mind of every Senator is occupied with the tremendous problems and responsibilities incident to that conflict.

Mr. President, if there ever was a time in the history of this country when this kind of legislation was not needed now is the moment. It deals with the question of foreign commerce and with the right to effect combinations to control foreign commerce. Yet it is brought forward at a time when the entire foreign commerce of the United States is absolutely in the hands of the President of the United States, when a partial embargo has been declared upon all of our products which are to be shipped abroad, when every kind of foreign commerce has been brought within a common control, and when conditions exist which for the present render such legislation as is now proposed absolutely without effect.

It is brought forward at a time, Mr. President, when the attention of this Congress ought to be devoted to great and vital issues. Our forces are dissolving upon the western battle lines of Europe. Russia has apparently retired from the field, and in so doing has withdrawn from the conflict over 15,000,000 soldiers who were relied upon to help carry the war against Germany to a successful issue. The very provisions and munitions that the United States has sent to Russia to be used in the war against Germany are now in serious jeopardy.

The question whether the German forces will not be fed from the fields of Russia during the coming year is one of such pressing importance that we can not afford to disregard its consideration. The further question whether Germany will not draw supplies of workmen, if not of soldiers, from Russia during the coming year, is one demanding our serious attention.

The Italian forces have been driven back from positions which a few months ago were regarded as impregnable. We are told that these defeats, amounting to great catastrophes, have been caused, in part at least, by a failure of the allies of Italy to supply her with enough munitions and cannon to meet on equal terms the on-coming hosts of Germany and Austria. We are one of Italy's allies. What share of the responsibility for the defeat is ours? This does not complete the story of fecund disasters. Roumania is suing for peace. Serbia is a conquered province.

In our own country the most serious conditions confront us. In the Capital of the Nation, we are told, there is not enough coal to keep the people in a condition of ordinary comfort. From every part of the country comes the cry for coal. Whether the shortage is the result of a failure of the mines to produce as they ought or a failure of the railroads to carry as they should, or whether it is chargeable to conspiracies among middle men to deprive the people of coal, or whether it has resulted from an ill-advised and ignorant interference with coal production and distribution, the stern fact nevertheless confronts us that there is to-day an unprecedented and serious coal shortage.

We are likewise confronted with the fact that staples that have been in use in every family of the country since the Government has existed, and in which there has never before been a shortage, are now so scarce in this land of plenty that men and women are clamoring for tickets which will entitle them to purchase such necessities as sugar.

We are told, Mr. President, that there is a shortage of guns with which to equip our newly raised armies. We are informed that there is a shortage of cannon with which to equip the great armies we are preparing to send abroad. We know there is a shortage of ships to carry our troops and to carry munitions of war. We understand that there has been delay, and still more and more delay, in carrying out these great enterprises.

At such a time as this, when Congress ought to be devoting the last ounce of its energy and the best of its intellect to the solution of the mighty problems confronting the country and the world, we sit here in smug self-content and proceed to legislate in favor of the trusts and combinations! We can not get the attention of Congress to this legislation as we could in normal times. The lack of interest is manifest here this afternoon, and it is not wonderful that there is a lack of interest, for I say to the Senate and I say to the American people that it is time the war should be the supreme and the only thought in the mind of Congress.

Let me call your attention to something, Senators—not a pleasant task, but one that somebody must perform. Let me call your attention to the fact, to which I have already adverted, that we have lost in the last 90 days 15,000,000 soldiers from the side on which we contend. The withdrawal of Russia from this conflict at the present time appears to be complete. What the womb of the future may hold no man can tell. Let me call your attention to the fact that that leaves Germany and her allies with a preponderance of fighting force at the present time. Whereas 90 days ago we had a preponderance, counting Russia, to-day Austria and Germany and Turkey and Bulgaria have a numerically superior force on the battle fields of the world. Let me challenge your thought to the fact that they occupy a united territory; they are not divided by arms of the sea; they are trained soldiers, every one of them. Even the unspeakable Turks, who a few years ago advanced in barbaric hordes that broke upon the bayonets of the English squares, are to-day among the best disciplined soldiers of the world. Germany began the training of that army many years ago. I invite your thought to the fact that Congress can not put aside these great issues or escape these mighty responsibilities. We should be giving study to the economic questions that concern the carrying on of this war. We should be considering the creation of greater armaments and greater armies.

I have no hesitancy in saying that unless something of a most fortunate character transpires, which we can not now confidently predict, the time will speedily come when there will be new levies upon our citizens. Common prudence demands to-day that we should begin training the boys from 18 to 21, if not to send them to foreign fields, at least that they may be prepared to defend the coasts of this country against any eventualities of this conflict. Suppose that one or two other nations disappear from the contest. As Russia has gone, as Roumania has gone, as Serbia has gone, so others may go. The time may come when the mighty force of the German war engine will beat with such terrific power against our remaining allies that we will find it necessary to have an army upon the coasts of North America.

You may regard that as the talk of an alarmist, if you please; you may pass it by lightly if you choose; but it is within the possibilities of the future, and it is our business to be prepared for possibilities. We should be studying these great questions. And at this time, under these circumstances, this legislation is forced forward.

Mr. President, I regret the fact. I regret the spirit of Congress, which has been for many months: "Shift all responsibility to the President. Heap all these burdens upon the Executive. Let us wash our hands of responsibility. Let us say that the Government during the war consists of the Executive and his advisers." Such, sir, is not the case. We can not escape these responsibilities. They rest upon Congress heavily. If disaster shall come to our beloved land the Congressman who has failed to do his duty will offer but a sorry excuse when he pleads: "I put the responsibility upon the President." The Constitution puts it upon the Government, and Congress is still a part of the Government.

Mr. President, if Congress can ever be gotten into a room long enough to analyze this bill, it will not pass. I heard the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] this morning deliver a very clean-cut argument that was absolutely destructive of this bill, and there were not upon the Democratic side to exceed three or four Members during the time he spoke. Now, why? Because the minds of these Members are occupied, I take it, with the weighty problems to which I referred a little while ago.

There is no use in trying to discuss this bill to empty benches. The Senate was almost empty when I took the floor. It is even emptier now. If this occurred only during my remarks I would understand that it was because the Senators were not interested in anything that I might say, and I would feel fittingly rebuked and would take my seat. But, Mr. President, it occurs habitually these days, no matter who has the floor. This bill is not being considered and it is useless to argue it in the absence of the Senate.

Mr. President, I move that the Senate adjourn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POINDEXTER in the chair). The Senator from Missouri moves that the Senate adjourn. [Putting the question.] The Chair is unable to decide.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I call for a division.

On a division the Senate refused to adjourn.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	James	Newlands	Smith, Md.

Mr. JAMES. I wish to announce the absence of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN], the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX], the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS], the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS], the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH], and the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] on official business.

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to announce the absence of the junior Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS]. He is attending a meeting of the Committee on Rules.

Mr. McNARY. I wish to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague, the senior Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN], on official business.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I take it that possibly an announcement as to the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] has been made; but noting that the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] is absent, I beg to announce the absence of the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] because of illness. I ask that this announcement shall remain for the day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-one Senators have answered to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I understand that the Senator from Missouri made a motion for adjournment because of the insufficiency of the attendance of the Senate. As I understand it, a great many Members of the Senate have very extensive engagements with the departments, and particularly with the Departments of War and Navy. One Senator told me this morning that he had at least a hundred matters to attend to of that kind. In addition to that, committees are meeting, shaping the legislation for this session. A joint committee upon interstate commerce, among others, is in session, having realized that events were hurrying on into legislation which will come within the province of that joint committee, and in that way they expect to conduct it with greater deliberation.

In view of this condition, it seems to me that we might well resort to the custom which we indulged in in the early part of the former session of meeting at 2 o'clock in the afternoon, thus enabling the committees to conduct their sessions for at least three hours or three hours and a half and enabling Members of the Senate to discharge their obligations to their constituents with reference to departmental matters.

I hesitate to make any motion to that effect whilst the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN] is absent, but I call it to the attention of the Senator from Ohio who has the bill in charge, and suggest that we would dispatch business more rapidly and secure a better attendance of the Senate by following some rule of that kind.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I take it that I am right when I say that a motion of that kind at the present moment would be out of order, as the unfinished business is now before the Senate. I regret exceedingly that there is not a larger attendance. It is not because this is an unimportant bill. It is a very important bill. Senators are interested in it and the public is interested in it. Let there be no mistake about that fact. The conditions which are complained of to-day are not very different from conditions that prevail under our rules here at almost any part of any session of the Senate. I have been hoping that this bill could be debated and that we could arrive at a speedy conclusion. I still believe that that can be done, and it will then be out of the way and not interfere with other business.

There is very much force in what the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] has said with regard to the engagements of other Senators. We all have such engagements and we are all anxious to attend to those affairs for our constituents, but this is an affair of our constituents as well.

If Senators are of the opinion that the people at large, their business people, are not interested in this kind of legislation it is because they have not taken the pains to inform themselves. There is no piece of legislation affecting our business interests which is more nearly in their hearts than this. But I do not care to take the time of the Senate to discuss that now.

It seems to me that the suggestion made by the Senator from Nevada might be well taken up during the morning hour, and I shall be content with any disposition that the Senate will then make of it.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I hope that the suggestion made by the Senator from Nevada will not be favorably acted upon at any time. I have noticed in the past when the Senate met at 2 o'clock very little was accomplished upon any day. After the morning hour was over there was but a short time left to discuss any question and the result was usually a waste of time. At the beginning of a session Senators do not feel inclined, and I do not blame them, to remain in the Senate Chamber after 5 o'clock, and, generally speaking, they would like to get out a little before. They have their mail to attend to after that hour. To the suggestion of the Senator from Nevada that all Senators have an extra amount of work to do at the present time we all agree.

Mr. President, the proper way to meet the present situation is to adjourn over for a day if we have no special business to attend to, or to adjourn over for a couple of days, and give Senators all the time from morning until night to attend to their work in the departments and also to their mail without interruption. We will accomplish more in that way than if we undertake to meet at 2 o'clock each day and remain in session for an hour or two and then adjourn.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I ask the Senator what would be the necessity of remaining in session for only an hour or two and then adjourning? If the Senator will permit me, under the suggestion made by the Senator from Nevada we would meet after the hour for luncheon has passed; and there would be nothing to interrupt a Senator in the performance of his duty upon the floor of the Chamber until a convenient time, at 5 or 6 o'clock, when we would adjourn. I think there is a great deal of wisdom in the suggestion, and I think it would result in an economy of time if it should be adopted.

Mr. SMOOT. If we meet at 2 o'clock, quite often the morning business would extend until after 3 o'clock, and then there would be little accomplished by way of considering legislation after that time during that day. We all understand that the committees at the beginning of every session must meet and act upon the bills referred to the committees, and that is what the important committees are doing now. There will be more time of the Senate ultimately saved by having the committees attend to the committee work in the early part of the session and get the work upon the calendar and then hold sessions during the hours we generally hold them after the holidays.

I fully agree with the Senator from Nevada that there ought to be some change made in the program and we should not hold sessions as we have been doing for the last few days. We meet at noon, and Senators who are always in attendance make no afternoon appointments, thinking the Senate will remain in session the balance of the day, but at 2 or 3 o'clock, as the case may be, the Senate adjourns until the following day. It is then too late to attend to the work that they could have attended to, and virtually the greater part of the afternoon is lost.

It seems to me that the proper thing to do would be in the early days of this session to adjourn over for a day or two and let all Senators know that they would have full days to do whatever is required of them either at their office work or departmental work, and ultimately, as I said, there would be more accomplished than to hold sessions as we have been holding them.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Let me call the attention of the Senator from Utah to the fact that during the early part of the session, while the rule provides that two hours shall be devoted to the business of the morning hour, as a matter of fact, only a few minutes are occupied with the business of the morning hour. Hence, pursuing the custom that we have pursued in the past few days, if we meet at 2 o'clock we will find that we will be able to spend most of the time from 2 until 5 in general legislative business, and in that way we can quickly dispose of the bill which is now pending and proceed to other legislative matters.

Mr. SMOOT. My suggestion to the Senator having the bill in charge is, if there is any real necessity for the early consideration and passage of the bill, to hold it before the Senate at least until 5 o'clock, and let us get through with it and then take an adjournment, as I suggested. But it does seem to me that we ought to have some kind of a program, so that Senators may know in advance what time they will have for work outside of the Chamber, and so that they may arrange their work accordingly.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, just a word further. This bill has twice passed the House, and it has been reported to the Senate. We tried to have it considered at the last session. It did not seem to be an opportune time, and it was suggested by various Senators that we make it the unfinished business. I asked that it be made the unfinished business, and that was done, with a view to having it disposed of early in this session. I did not suppose that it was going to interfere materially with committee work, at least no more than any other legislation, because we have always had committee work during the entire year. I desire, of course, to consult the convenience of Senators as much as I can, but I thought we would be able to have this matter disposed of at an early day, and we could then devote our attention to something else.

On yesterday I moved to adjourn at an early hour out of respect to the wishes of several Senators, who wanted to speak to-day and did not at that time feel disposed to occupy the attention of the Senate. I should like to have the debate go on if Senators feel disposed so to do.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I have just been told by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES] that it is the opinion of the Committee on Rules——

Mr. JAMES. Not expressed formally.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Not expressed formally, that the session should commence at 2 o'clock during this period. I hesitate to make a motion to that effect, because the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN] is not in his seat, but I understand he is out of town and I have been urged to make the motion. I am willing to do it unless it is objectionable to the Senator from Ohio. If so, I will not make it.

Mr. POMERENE. The unfinished business is now before the Senate and I do not see how that can be done without displacing the unfinished business. It may be done during the morning hour. It seems to me if we contemplate that change in our program it should be done during the morning hour when Senators will be here and have an opportunity to take part in the discussion.

Mr. JAMES. If the Senator from Nevada will permit me, the Committee on Rules is in session and had information that such a motion was either made or contemplated. I am satisfied that a considerable majority of the committee are in favor of meeting at 2 o'clock, because we have so much business before the various departments that it is impossible to attend to it and attend committee meetings and get here at 12 o'clock. We really would make time by meeting at 2 o'clock. By reason of the war situation the departmental business is so heavy that in view of that, together with the committee work, it seems to me it would be wise to meet at 2 o'clock. But of course I recognize that a point of order could be made and that the motion could not be properly acted upon except in the morning hour. Personally, I am very heartily in favor of such a program.

Mr. VARDAMAN. May I suggest to the Senator from Kentucky that a motion, with the consent of the Senator from Ohio, would be in order now to move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it adjourn until 2 o'clock to-morrow?

Mr. JAMES. I will say to the Senator from Mississippi that I have no desire to interfere with the consideration of the bill now before the Senate, but the thought that I was bringing to the attention of the Senate was that it ought to be definitely settled that the Senate will meet at 2 o'clock. Every Senator knows that all of us have a great deal more departmental work now than we ever had before. We have constituents here practically all the time and we have to go with them to see about various matters and to get information for them, and so forth. When we do that we can not attend committee meetings. I myself was down at the department this morning and I found when I got here the committee I had been called to meet with had been in session for quite a little while. If the Senate will meet at 2 o'clock, it will give us two hours' additional time.

Mr. SMOOT. Do I understand the Senator from Kentucky to say that the Committee on Rules decided the question?

Mr. JAMES. Oh, no; I did not state that the Committee on Rules decided it. They were meeting to consider some other matters, and a page came down and gave the information to the chairman that this matter was up before the Senate. It was merely informally spoken of by the committee. No action whatever was taken by the Committee on Rules upon the subject. I came up myself to vote upon it and do what I could to have it adopted, and several Senators said to me if their votes were needed to let them know. That is all that was done. No formal action was taken.

Mr. SMOOT. The reason why I asked the question was because I have never known the Committee on Rules to take that question under consideration unless it was referred to them.

Mr. JAMES. No; there was no intention of that sort at all, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES] was not present when I made a statement. If this question is to be voted upon now, I want a quorum present, and we will discuss the question as to what is the best policy. My opinion is that we ought to adjourn over and give Senators a full day, so they will not be interrupted in their work at the departments or work in their offices. If we are compelled to meet at 2 o'clock that breaks into the afternoon with little accomplished. When we do hold sessions let us hold a full day's session and let every Senator know it will be from 12 o'clock until 5 or 6 o'clock. The result ultimately will be a great deal better than to meet at 2 o'clock every day.

Mr. JAMES. The Senator knows we can not adjourn from day to day in order to give time to Senators to look after other business. My idea was that 2 o'clock should be fixed as the regular hour each day.

Mr. SMOOT. I think the best thing to do is to meet at 12 o'clock and have a full day to consider any question before the Senate, and not simply get started and then adjourn. I believe that legislation would be hastened in that way very much faster than it has been under the practice of the last few days.

I agree with the Senator from Kentucky that the work Senators are compelled to do now at the departments is greater than was ever known, and therefore when they start out to attend to the work they ought to have ample time in which to accomplish it.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I believe that a motion to adjourn to a time certain is always in order. I believe the motion would be in order now, but I do not feel that it is advisable to make it. I feel that we ought to go on to-day, and to-morrow morning this discussion will have had the effect of giving notice. Perhaps the subject will be brought up then, and we can determine whether we shall meet at 2 o'clock hereafter or not. I believe we ought to proceed now in the regular way, and then at the session to-morrow morning determine the question about the hour of meeting, although I am of the opinion that a motion to adjourn to a time to-morrow would be in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly it is.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Ohio will insist on keeping this bill before the Senate. While I appreciate all Senators have said relative to the amount of work which is required in committee and departments, I am confident from my own experience here that if we meet at 2 o'clock we will experience the same difficulty in having Senators in their seats that we have now. The bill which the Senator from Ohio has in charge was debated at the last session of Congress and certain amendments were made. It has been debated now for several days, and a vote can be had upon it in a very short time if the Senator insists upon keeping it before the Senate.

Ever since I have been a Member of the Senate we have been obliged from time to time to have the roll called to bring Senators to their seats. They were found in the corridors and in their offices doing work—I suppose necessary work. There are enough Senators always present to make a quorum when they desire to be in their seats, but there is no rule that compels them to be in their seats if they have some excuse to be away.

This is one of the measures that has been set forth as being necessary for action upon at this session of Congress. We have made considerable progress in reference to it. I should like to see it out of the way. All those measures can be put behind us, and let us do it, because otherwise we will have the same experience we have always had during the latter part of a session. During the heated season we will be rushing bills, working at night to dispose of those that could with more care and better attention be disposed of at the beginning of the session.

We will all find time to look after the necessary things at the departments.

As the Senator from Utah has said, if we meet at 2 o'clock, we will do practically nothing in the way of legislation. Senators will not be in their seats if the meeting is at 2 o'clock any more than they would be at any other hour. They have engagements in the afternoon at the departments. I have met them there very frequently in the afternoon. The fact is it is our business to legislate here in the Senate Chamber when we have had a bill presented to us that has had the consideration this bill has received. It has been passed by the other House twice. It was considered by the Senate in the last session of Congress and made the unfinished business. If we insist on taking action on this measure, a vote can be had on it in two days. Ought we to adjourn at the convenience of every Senator? If we do this, that, and the other thing to retard action, of course, nothing will receive proper consideration and the session will be unnecessarily prolonged.

I hope the Senator from Ohio will insist on keeping this bill before the Senate until it is disposed of. If nobody is ready to go on, as a matter of accommodation to Senators to-day, I do not object to an adjournment until 12 o'clock to-morrow, but certainly any Senator who desires to debate the measure should go on to-morrow.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] has expressed my views exactly. There is no bill before the Senate that has had more consideration than this measure. I have been on a committee considering this subject for five or six years, and I think I know whereof I speak. It does seem there is a disposition not to go on with the discussion this afternoon, and therefore I am disposed——

Mr. REED (to Mr. POMERENE). I will go on if you wish me to do so.

Mr. POMERENE. Very well

Mr. REED. Mr. President, if I can have the attention of Senators who are present for about 30 minutes I will try to conclude all that I have to say. My only desire is that Senators shall really consider this bill.

The Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] states that it has been before his committee for five years. If it has taken the committee five years to make up its mind whether this bill ought to pass, it surely comes here under a considerable cloud of suspicion and distrust.

I affirm that this bill ought to be entitled "An act to take the European markets from the people of the United States and give them to the trusts." We are presented to-day with the spectacle of a Democratic administration attempting to repeal or devitalize that trust legislation which the Republican Party put on the statute books under the leadership of John Sherman 27 years ago.

This is a bill to enable the trusts to capture and control the foreign markets of the American people. It is presented as a bill which will enable American merchants to capture foreign markets. It is, in fact, a bill which will result in the creation of single purchasing agencies for American products and in a complete denial of free European markets to the American citizen. It repeals every vestige of that system of antitrust statutes built up during 27 years by the Federal Government so far as they apply to commerce with foreign powers. It is intended to directly authorize the creation of combinations and trusts to control every foreign market in which the American citizen may seek to sell his goods. Indirectly it will enable these same combinations to control the domestic market because a control of the price of the surplus, the part of the product which goes abroad to find a market, will control the price of the product sold at home.

I call attention now to three outstanding facts:

First, this legislation has the enthusiastic support of the allied trusts of the United States together with their servants, agents, employees, and sympathizers. There is not a trust in the United States that is not for this bill. It will be supported by every newspaper that believes in the supremacy of "big business," and which regards every effort to limit or to circumscribe the powers of capital as undesirable and dangerous. It will be supported by every man who delights to boast of "our captains of industry" or who takes greater pride in the wealth of the classes than in the prosperity of the masses.

The second outstanding fact is that the system of antitrust statutes which were originally passed by the Republican Party on the 2d day of July, 1890, and during the intervening years have been frequently amended and laboriously construed, until they have become a great code of virile laws, behind which the honest business man took refuge, are now sought to be disemboweled during a Democratic administration, and at a time when the clouds and anxieties of war have distracted the attention of the country from any legislation except that pertaining to the pending conflict.

The third outstanding fact is that the trusts and monopolies which have hitherto sought to accomplish the direct repeal of antitrust legislation have now divided their attack. In this bill they seek to destroy the antitrust statutes so far as they apply to foreign markets, and, at the same time, substantially the same forces are back of a bill, known as the fair-trade or one-price bill, which proposes to give the right to manufacturers and wholesalers to fix the prices upon articles produced or handled by them and sold in the domestic market, so that the manufacturer or wholesaler will be able to control the price clear down to the ultimate consumer. The two bills "fit each other like the upper and lower jaws of a wild beast," and if enacted into law will completely destroy the entire fabric of antitrust legislation.

It is not to be denied that these twin legislative schemes are backed by men of high purpose as well as by the trusts and combines; but it is singular to find men of intelligence repeating, apparently without knowing the fact, the stale arguments that have been upon the lips of every trust advocate and trust-hired attorney from the days when John Sherman introduced the first Federal antitrust statute. These protagonists rehash the ancient trust arguments with the glibness and enthusiasm of original discoverers, as oblivious to the fact that they are mildewed by time and covered with the dust of ages as was Roosevelt of the circumstance that at the time of his "original discovery" of the River of Doubt the stream was already mapped, surveyed, and, according to some authorities, bridged.

The ancient trust argument was that competition is ruinous and wasteful; that a monopoly, because of its size, can produce cheaper than a great number of small competing concerns; and that, therefore, monopoly ought to be allowed to exist. It was especially argued that we must permit great combinations of capital in our country in order to meet the competition in our domestic market of great foreign combinations doing business in our midst. The identical argument is now pressed by the proponents of this bill and made to apply to the foreign markets; for, say these gentlemen in almost identical language, a large number of American producers can not sell in the foreign market because the expense is too great; they must, therefore, be permitted to combine, and this is especially true because they must meet great European combinations in the foreign market. At the same time the advocates of the one-price bill, which is coming fast on the heels of the trust measure, assert a very similar right to control prices in the domestic market.

The trouble with all these arguments is that they proceed wholly from the standpoint of the gentleman who is to organize the trust for his own benefit or fix a price for his own enrichment. They both leave out of account the interesting and somewhat important fact that all the people of the country, or mayhap of the world, are to be plundered and robbed of their natural rights by these buccaneers of the financial and commercial world. Yet we behold the spectacle of trust magnates everywhere, each crying out to his own Government that he can not carry out his scheme and make money for himself unless he is permitted to pursue these evil practices. It is as though the leader of a pack of gray wolves were to insist upon his right to devour the lambs and sheep of the community in order that he might be as swift of foot, as keen of fang, and as stout of muscle as other leaders of other packs of wolves in adjoining countries. The argument leaves out of the question the fate of the sheep. What does it avail to us as a people that American goods and products shall be sold abroad in great quantities if the benefits of such sales are to be covered into the pockets of a very few people?

I assert, second, that the bill will not only enable the great trusts to monopolize the foreign market but that the possession of that power will enable them to almost completely dominate and control the domestic market. If I can chain the attention of the Senate to that one thought, this bill will be defeated.

The proponents of this bill declare that in order to compete in foreign markets with foreign sellers they must be allowed themselves to do business through a common selling agency. If this was all they desired, the right exists now, unrestricted by any law whatsoever, human or divine, and I challenge proof to the contrary. But this is not what they intend; this is not what they desire. If such were their purpose, they would be content with a provision like that contained in the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS], which specifically and in terms gives them the right to create a common selling agency; they would not be here resisting that which is the specific thing they pretend they want. Nay, more, they would be content with an amendment to the proposition of the Senator from Iowa, which would provide for the establishment of a common agency, available to every citizen of the United States, under Government rules and regulations.

What they want is the right to organize their combinations and make them sufficiently powerful, so that they can occupy the entire field, so far as America's foreign market is concerned, to compel all to come to them, and to thus become the keepers of the gate through which all the foreign commerce in the particular line they have chosen to control shall pass. That is what they want; that is what the Steel Trust wants; it is back of this bill, and has sent its advocates here to advocate this bill. That is what Westinghouse wants; he is back of this bill, and he has sent his advocate here to urge this bill. That is what the Harvester Trust wants; it is back of this bill, and it has sent its men here to urge the passage of this bill. That is what other great combinations want.

They want to control the gate through which the surplus products of America shall flow to foreign lands. They want to be the sole purchasers and sole handlers. They want to be the exclusive agents. They want to be the one purchasing agent. This bill will legalize the kind of combinations that can force that kind of condition.

If they can establish such an agency, mark you, an agency that will control the sale of our goods in European markets, then they can fix the price of those goods in the European markets. Indeed, why should they want a common agency except for that purpose? And if they can fix the price for America's surplus products in the European market, they thus fix the price of America's products in the domestic market, for whoever fixes the price of the surplus that goes abroad fixes the price of the product that remains at home. Can you escape that? Can any man answer that economic fact? It is graven among the economic laws of the world.

In the aggregate, these various combinations created for the purpose of controlling the foreign market of America's surplus products will control all of America's exports. They will become so powerful that no one can hope to do business except through them or through the organization of some combination powerful enough to meet them in European fields, and this they propose to render impossible. It is thus proposed that in each line of endeavor we shall have a single selling agency in foreign countries. I want Senators to get that thought—it is thus proposed in each line of endeavor to have a single selling agency in foreign countries. A single selling agency for exports necessarily implies a single buying agency to export, for if there is only one man to sell, he is the only man who can buy. A single buying and selling agency for each line of American exports! Men from the cotton States, how would you like to have the market for all your export cotton in the hands of one combination?

And yet under this bill such a combination can be created and bear the sanction of the law and the stamp of the authority of the United States. Whoever controls the export price of cotton controls the price of cotton. The same gentleman, mark you, who will organize the combination to control the export price of cotton will probably be the individual who deals in that part of the cotton crop which goes into domestic consumption.

Whoever helps to set up this monstrous thing to control the European markets of America will, if he be an honest man, live to regret the day. The only men who will not regret it will be those who fatten and batten off of it.

If there be but one agency through which goods can be sold abroad, then clearly none but that agency can buy goods at home to be shipped abroad. The proposition is, of course, to monopolize the foreign market; and not only to monopolize that market but to fix the price of our exports handled by this common agency or single agency. It is a familiar maxim that the price of the surplus of an article fixes the price of the article. I have said that, and I repeat it. Democrats for years have contended that the price of wheat and grain and other farm products in Liverpool fixes the price at home. That law of economics has never been successfully disputed. If, then, great combinations are allowed to be created which will completely control the price of our surplus products which are exported, the same combinations by virtue of the control of the price of the surplus will, to a large extent, if not entirely, regulate and fix the price of goods sold on the domestic market.

Moreover, it is well understood that these combinations to control the foreign market are to be composed of the great exporting concerns of this country; at least they are vigorously pushing this legislation. They have organized themselves into a society for that purpose. They represent hundreds of millions of dollars. It is fair, therefore, to assume that it is their intent to combine themselves into great concerns and to cooperate each with the other in the control of the foreign markets of America. The far-reaching scope of such a combination would embrace the fortunes of the farmer, the middleman, and the consumer.

A simple illustration will make this plain, and I wish Senators from the agricultural States would follow this illustration and see if the argument be not sound. I choose the packing companies, not because they are better or worse than other great aggregations of capital and industry, but because they afford a very keen illustration. We shipped in meat and meat products in 1913, in round numbers, $151,000,000—I am omitting the odd thousands—in 1914, $143,000,000; in 1915, $205,000,000; and in 1916, $266,000,000.

Substantially all of these meats were exported by a few great packing houses in the United States. A combination of all of these houses could be readily effected. With that combination completed—and it goes without saying that it would be completed—what would be the result? First, they would seek to take the European market from their competitors, to a sufficient extent at least to enable them to sell their entire surplus product. As they would be acting through one common selling agency, to wit, a subsidiary owned by themselves in common, they would be likely to cut the price enough to get control of the foreign market. They could do this without the loss of a penny, because they could reduce the price on the tanners' products and recoup the loss. Thus they would certainly reduce the price, unless they could combine with their foreign trust competitors, a thing very likely to result and a thing that has resulted in the past. Already we have substantially world trusts. This bill will insure world trusts.

Under the terms of this bill, if the Swifts, the Armours, the Cudahys, and the other great packers of this country, against whom I say nothing, were to go to Europe and organize themselves into a great combination for the purpose of controlling the European market, they could take into that combination, without violating the letter of the law and without in any way violating the terms of this bill, the packing houses of the world and agree upon prices for all Europe and Asia and Africa and South America, and when they would have done that, as I shall show, they would have ipso facto fixed the price upon the cattle, hogs, and sheep of the United States. They could certainly combine with foreign trust competitors—and that is a thing very likely to result—in which event, having gained control of the world market all parties to the transaction could rob the producers and consumers of all countries alike, their ability to do so being limited only by the patience of the people and the rapacity of the combination. Just now, when the consumers of this country are being hard pressed for the necessities of life, it is proposed to put into the hands of a few men the power to control the provisions of the world.

If it be argued that this robbery in selling prices would be limited to consumers in foreign lands, I have four replies to make.

First. At a time when we are sacrificing the lives of America's sons and husbands in order to break the shackles political tyranny has welded upon the limbs of half the world, I am unwilling to fasten the shackles of financial tyranny upon these same people. I am unwilling to tear from the throats of the peasantry of the Old World the iron grip of a hereditary financial and military autocracy in order that American combinations may exploit those same starving and oppressed millions. I am not of that facile disposition that enables me to be a reformer, conferring benefits with my right hand, and a thief, picking the pockets of people with my left hand. The Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE], interrupting, says in that respect I am exceptional.

Second. The robbery, if perpetrated, would not be limited to those in foreign lands, because world prices, having been brought within the control of these combinations, those exercising that control would fix prices so as to realize profits for themselves not only on their foreign business but upon their domestic business. In a word, the consumers of America would be within the grip of this world conspiracy.

That domestic prices would be controlled by such a combination is too plain for dispute. It is not conceivable that the great packing houses of this country would create one selling agency for all their surplus in Europe, and through that agency fix one common price, without such action directly resulting in a common price in America.

Think of it! Follow that. It would be as impossible for these men to have a common price in Europe and a real competition here in America as it would be to have a number of reservoirs filled with water standing at different levels while all the reservoirs were connected by one common system of pipes and the pipes open for the water to flow through.

Let me, I say, follow that a minute. Let me simplify it by assuming that all the packing business of America is in the hands of the Armours and the Swifts and the Cudahys; that they are now competing in the American market for American cattle and sheep and hogs; that they are selling in competition in Europe their surplus products, and that they are selling in competition in America the rest of their products. Assume, now, that these three concerns get together and organize themselves into a European combination known as the Armour-Swift-Cudahy Export Co., and that this company immediately contracts with all of its principals to take all of their surplus, and that immediately they agree in Europe to fix the price of beef at any figure, I will say, 15 cents a pound. That, then, becomes the price of all the surplus America has to export, for that surplus is all controlled by the three companies which compose the European company.

Now, these three concerns are buying cattle in Chicago, in Kansas City, and in Fort Worth, Tex. They know that about 20 per cent of all that they produce is to go abroad and is to be sold through the common selling agency in which they are all partners. Knowing that, they go out to buy on the market, and they know that one-fifth of all they buy must go through that one common selling agency and be sold at one common price. Does it not inevitably follow that they will fix the price they pay for every hoof of cattle or hogs or sheep they buy in this market by the price they have fixed for the part they must send abroad? Does it not also follow that the price of every pound of meat these concerns sell to the American people will be summarily fixed? Does it not likewise follow that the Siamese-twin attachment which unites the three concerns in their export business connects them in fact? Is it not too plain for argument that the unification of these companies for the purpose of controlling the European market accomplishes a unification in America for the purpose of controlling the American market?

Desiring to employ moderate language, I nevertheless declare that any man who can believe that such a combination as that would not have its effect upon the American market, upon the prices these companies would pay the farmer, and upon the prices these companies would charge the consumer, any man who does not know that it would reach every farmer and every stock ranch of the United States and every table in the United States, is, in my opinion, very dull, indeed. Yet that is permitted by this bill, and that will be done when this bill is passed. You will have created a thing so powerful and so far-reaching that, in my opinion, it will speedily combine with all the other great packing houses of the world, and a few men will fix the prices upon all the countless herds of the farmers, and the same men will fix the price and limit the quantity of the meat that is to be upon the tables of all God's creatures. That is the sort of bill it is intended must be driven through in hot haste, with whip and spur, while the country wars, and while it does not have opportunity to pause and deliberate.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, while the Senator is on that point of his very able discussion, I should like him to touch upon the question of whether or not the passage of this bill is necessary at this time. Even if the legislation were, as the proponents of the bill hope it to be, for the good of the masses of the people, does the Senator feel that it could be put into operation now? Is there any necessity for it? Is there any combination over there that would have to be met by a combination here?

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I have already stated that this is the most inopportune time in the world to pass such a bill. The Senator happened to be out at that moment.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I will not ask the Senator to repeat it, then.

Mr. REED. No; I thank the Senator, and I shall answer him in just a word, but not at the same length that I would otherwise.

The Congress has placed in the hands of the President of the United States during the period of the war the power to declare embargoes upon everything produced in this country, and under that power we understand that single agencies have been created through which goods are permitted to be sent to foreign countries. All this is the condition of affairs during the war. It follows, therefore, that whatever is necessary to be done in order to protect our commerce can now be done by the President, and that after this war is over, and after we have returned to normal conditions, legislation such as we now have before us would be pertinent to the then pending conditions. It is being forced, I say, now because the attention of the country can not be riveted upon it. If the attention of the country could be riveted upon it, we would hear from somebody besides the directly interested parties.

We would begin to hear from farmers' organizations. We would begin to hear from consumers' organizations. We would begin to hear from labor organizations. We would hear from somebody besides the United States Chamber of Commerce; the Steel Trust; Mr. Carson, the president of the Carson Naval Stores; the president of the Lackawanna Steel Co.; the managing director of the Westinghouse Electric Co.; the great Washburn-Crosby mills; the president of the International Mercantile Marine; Mr. McCormick, president of the International Harvester Co.; and Mr. Vanderlip, president of the National City Bank of New York—all of them very good men, but all of them on one side of the case, and they have been there always.

In the fourth place, I remark, a common selling price in Europe would mean a common buying price for Europe; and this common buying price for Europe would inevitably fix the domestic price. The certain result is that a combination controlling the export markets of the United States will control the prices paid to the producers of the United States. In a word, every farmer of the United States who has a single animal to sell on the market will be brought within the control of the gigantic combination which it is proposed to create in order to control the world market for our foreign products. What has been said, of course, applies to every other product as well as to meats.

Let us take the question as it will apply to the farmer upon his wheat. There are only a limited number of exporters. The ordinary farmer can not send his grain from his farm through to European markets. Accordingly, he sells to an exporter. That exporter is in competition with the domestic buyer. The farmer has the benefit of a buyer in Europe bidding against a buyer in the United States, but he only has that benefit because there are a number of exporters in the United States, each anxious to secure grain to ship, and each bidding against the others for grain to send to Europe. Under this bill these several buyers for the European market are authorized to come together in a room and to organize themselves into a corporation, to create agents and to put them into the market, and to cease competing with each other, because they are buying grain to sell to the European market. The moment that is done the active competition between Europe and the United States ceases. Moreover, the same man who ships abroad to-day is also a buyer for the domestic market. In the great majority of cases the man or the institution engaged in buying grain for the European market also handles grain for the domestic market.

Accordingly, when you permit these exporters of grain to Europe to combine for the purpose of taking over the European market and fixing a price, which, of course, they will do, you have arranged a scheme by which they, being the sole shippers of grain to Europe, can reduce the European market for our grains to any point they desire, short, of course, of some absurd figure.

The minute you have taken away from the farmer his competition in Europe and the bidding of Europe against the domestic purchaser has ceased, you have the farmer in this sort of shape: He has two markets, one of which is the domestic market, and which is insufficient to take all of his grain. The other his foreign market which is controlled by a monopoly. He must therefore sell in a market which is overfilled with grain or he must sell to a monopoly at its price. Such a condition would be ruinous to the agriculturist.

How easy, now, it is for exporters thus to combine. There are only, speaking broadly, a few men who export any great quantities of wheat to Europe. Why should those men continue to compete when the Federal Government authorizes them to come together and to create one common corporation?

The argument that is presented in support of this bill is that our poor grain dealers have to meet in Europe the competition of combinations and therefore we ought to let our grain dealers combine so that they can beat the continental octopus. But that leaves out of consideration the fact that when you have permitted that combination, great enough to control the European purchasing market, you have at the same time permitted a combination great enough to control the American selling market. That is to say, you have put the farmer of the United States in the hands of that combination.

That is not all you have done. You have put the American consumer in his hands, for that combination which can control the price of wheat and control the entire foreign shipment of wheat can at the same time, by virtue of that control, dominate the American market. Why should they not also combine over in Europe with the grain shippers from Australia and Canada? Why should not all these get together in a great world monopoly? Why should not that world monopoly take toll from the crust poverty raises to the mouth of hunger?

Senators, you may pass this bill in haste. You will repent it in leisure. You will repent it with the curses of a world ringing in your ears. It is a bill to enthrone monopoly, to authorize the creation of trusts. It is the denial of every line of Democratic history. It is a libel upon the traditions of our party. It is a surrender to the great sinister influences with which we have contended. It proposes to do that which we have always denounced as immoral and unjust and wicked.

The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN] asked me a few minutes ago, What reason is there for it? Less reason now than at any time in the history of our country; less reason now than at any time in the history of the world; and why? I have already given the reason that our markets are in the control of the President, but I will give you additional reasons.

During the years that have passed our export business in manufacturing has been increasing. Our export business in farm products has been decreasing. The decrease in the shipment of farm products abroad is brought about by the fact that there is a greater home market for those farm products. So far as the farmer is concerned, he has never asked for this bill for his protection. It will be used for his despoilment. It will be employed for his robbery; but he has never asked for its passage. The men who claim they need it are the manufacturers.

I listened to some figures that were given here the other day by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG], and I want very briefly to consider those figures. Before I do so I desire to call attention to the fact that the Senator from Minnesota claimed that our merchants shipping abroad found their trade dwindling in proportion to the other business of the United States. Later on in my remarks I intend to give the figures. I assert now, broadly, that the export business of the United States has increased ever since this Government was formed. Every year the volume has increased. Every year of that time the proportion of our manufactured goods sent abroad to the total of all our products has increased. In recent years the proportionate increase has been large, and has indicated a high degree of prosperity and expansion, so that there is no emergency in the shape of a present existing calamitous condition.

Second, the Senator from Minnesota, having given figures that were misleading—of course, not intentionally so—proceeded to tell us that the reason was that our merchants were not allowed to combine, and that they had to meet the combinations authorized by the Prussian Government.

Mr. President, I am a little tired of hearing Prussia and Prussian methods cited as the proper example for America to follow.

The Prussian method in business is a part of the general Prussian governmental policy, which has for its central thought the idea that every human being born in Prussia belongs to the state, lives for the state, is a slave to the state, and must, at the will of an imperious master, die for the state; that God Almighty put all the power and all the right and all the intellect in the brains of one family and poured upon their heads the divine oil which authorizes them to roam over this world the masters of other men.

Proceeding upon the hypothesis that all power is concentered in them and that the rights and privileges of other men are to be doled out to them as gracious benefactions, the Hohenzollerns have done many things. They have assumed to set up a complete centralized Government, and a centralized financial power, a centralized commercial power, and a centralized military power. A part of that iniquitous system has brought forth a governmental authorization of combinations and trusts in the foreign markets of the world, and another part has authorized combinations in the domestic trade. The same Government gentlemen cite as an example to follow has brought forth other organizations. One of them is an organization of chemists, who make poisonous gases to burn out the lungs of men. Other organizations make bombs to be hurled upon sleeping babes and women at night. Such is the Prussian system; it should be treated as a whole.

I am not going to take my lessons in morals or my lessons in business from the house of Hohenzollern until pan-Germanism shall be a dream realized and the world shall lie prostrate at the feet of the monsters who occupy the throne of Prussia to the disgrace of civilization. "Germany does it." Yes; and Germany has made her people to eat the bread of sorrow: "Germany does it." Yes; and Germany teaches the doctrine that children are born that they may be food for cannon if the war lord so decrees. "Germany does it." Yes; and Germany has stood with a sneer upon her lips and watched the people of the conquered countries starve, and boasted that German craft would make the starvation work for Germany. And Germany has done it by compelling conquered people to labor in trenches and to set up cannon that are to kill their own compatriots who have not yet been starved into submission. We have not had to resort to the German system of government yet in the United States. I do not think we have to resort to the German system in order that our commerce shall prosper in other lands.

But while I listened to the Senator from Minnesota as he presented his argument that the whole trouble with our foreign business—an imaginary trouble, a trouble that does not exist—grew out of the fact that our merchants had to meet combinations over there, I wondered how long it would be until the Senator from Minnesota and other gentlemen of like philosophy would be saying that our merchants have likewise to meet combinations of foreigners selling goods in this country, and therefore we should permit combinations here to be created to compete with the combinations from abroad that are selling goods in this country.

But I wondered further than that, since the Senator assigned the lack of combinations as a cause for the decay of our foreign trade, which, as I have remarked, has not been decaying but growing—I wondered how long it was since the Senator abandoned the good old Republican doctrine that the reason why our merchants and our manufacturers could not compete in Europe was because of the difference in wages. That has been the Republican doctrine for 30 years; and upon every husting, upon every stump, you have stood and told the workingman that it was because of the difference in wages that our products could not compete abroad. When did you abandon that and conclude to tell them that it was the absence of combinations and of trusts?

But that is not the only argument we have heard as a reason why our merchants were at a disadvantage. We were told that it was the lack of merchant ships, and the Senator from Minnesota recognized that fact. Will the creation of combinations to control American markets result in building merchant ships? That must be done by some other means and some other method than by a law like this, and we are already doing it. The shipyards of America resound with the music of countless hammers as they are driving in the rivets to create that great fleet which will bear our arms, our sons, and our provisions to European shores during this war, and that later on, if in the providence of God we shall succeed, as we believe we will, will carry the merchandise of America to every port of the world. So that disadvantage will be removed.

But if that disadvantage exists now it would account in a large part perhaps for the discrepancy the Senator sees between our business as it is and as he thinks it should be.

Again, we have been told by the party to which the Senator belongs, and which he ornaments and graces, that one of the great things that made it possible for us to have a foreign business was the tariff, and that the taking off of that tariff was the reason why our foreign business fell off or the balance of trade did not run so strongly in our favor.

How many months is it since the distinguished Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], leader of the other side of this Chamber, stood in the center aisle and read us long columns of figures, from which he undertook to demonstrate that we were losing the trade of the world, because we had reduced the tariff? Is that all forgotten? Is that Republican argument put into the dust-covered pigeonhole, to be stored away simply in order that the trusts may by the passage of this bill have the benefit of all these cumulative arguments that have been advanced in the past?

It is also said that we have been without foreign branch banks, That was another reason offered, but foreign branch banks have been established. Great American banks can be found in all the principal South American countries, in European countries, and in Asiatic countries. Thus we are gaining the financial support which must go with our foreign commerce everywhere.

Now, let me bring these threads together in answer to the argument of the Senator from Minnesota. His position was that our American commerce was not what it ought to be, and he urges to us one reason is the lack of ships. The other reason is the lack of banks. If the reasons are as he has stated them, then it is indeed nearly conclusive proof that our merchants with the banks and with the ships can meet competition anywhere without being empowered to combine and create great trusts and monopolies. The Senator's argument went too far and proved too much.

Now, Mr. President, the point I am trying to get to the Senate is this: We have been told that you must have combinations in order that the man who is selling goods in Europe may make money. We are asked to have our attention concentrated upon that, gentleman. But I want you to turn your back to that man and look at the American people and recognize the fact that the European market is their market; that they reach that market through human agencies, and that when you permit those human agencies through which they must reach that market to combine into a single agency, then all the producers of the United States are at the mercy of that one agency. When you have put into the hands of a single foreign selling agency the control of the surplus of a product you will at the same time have yielded to them the control of the prices received in the domestic markets for that same product.

Before closing I must refer to certain clauses in the bill which were, I think, intended as soothing sirup for doubting Democrats. I refer to one such provision. It will serve as a sample:

Provided, That such association does not, either in the United States or elsewhere, enter into any agreement, understanding, or conspiracy, or do any act which artificially or intentionally and unduly enhances or depresses prices within the United States of commodities of the class exported by such association.

Mr. President, once you have created this concern no agreement is necessary, no conspiracy is necessary. You have made a single foreign selling agency, and having made a single foreign selling agency, it fixes its own price, without conspiracy with anybody; there is nobody to conspire with. Having fixed a single foreign selling price, you have by virtue of that practically fixed the domestic price.

There are other clauses similar to the one quoted in the bill. They are as innocuous as a declaration that you shall be thrown into a den of lions and devoured, "provided, however, that the lions shall not hurt you in the operation." You confer the power; you create the Frankenstein; you set it in motion; you license it to do everything necessary in order to control the price; and then you say, "provided, however, that in doing the thing we have told you you can do you shall not do any harm."

Let me say to these men who represent agricultural States, Take this bill and study it. Who is back of it? Some good men who think they are opposed to the existence of trusts. Some other good men have been opposed to all kinds of antitrust legislation and have been from the first. There are always some good men opposed to any kind of governmental control. Such men have said that usury laws were a bad thing and that the usurer ought to be allowed to extort whatever he pleased; and the usurer, every 10-per-cent-a-month man on earth, has believed in that sort of philosophy and has been an advocate of that doctrine. But the consensus of human judgment has been that there must be limits upon human rapacity and human greed.

There are other men who believe that corporations ought to be allowed to grow as large as they desire, that there should be no limit placed upon them. But that philosophy was repudiated in this country 28 years ago. Long and laboriously we have climbed the hill. It has taken all these years to finally amend those laws and to have them construed so that they possess virility and force and the courts and litigants understand what they mean. Now that this has been accomplished, we find, as I said in the beginning, two bills pressed upon the attention of Congress. One is to permit a few great concerns to monopolize the foreign market of the United States, and by monopolizing the foreign market of the United States to deny to the American producer access to that market.

The other is a bill to permit the manufacturers of the United States and wholesalers to fix a single price upon their products and to have that price continue with the product clear down to the ultimate consumer, thus reducing every middleman in the country, every merchant in the country, to the capacity of a mere factor or broker working for a fee fixed by the wholesaler or the manufacturer, and thus at the same time making the consumers of the country pay the price arbitrarily fixed by a manufacturer, and thus also affording a means by which manufacturers can in fact combine to rob the whole American people. These two bills, one affecting our foreign commerce, the other affecting our domestic commerce, are being urged.

Mr. President, I want to challenge your thought and the thought of the country to the monstrous and infamous thing proposed. It is proposed to permit a monopolization of our foreign market, and yet at this time we have hundreds of thousands of our boys upon the plains of France in training to fight and preparing their souls to die in the trenches, and the reason for that fight is that we have insisted that the seas of the world shall be kept open for the commerce of America. You propose to turn that commerce over to monopoly while you are asking the boys to die that the seas shall be kept open and free for its passage. Of what avail is the liberty of the seas, of what value is the liberty of the seas, why should vessels plow the waves of the ocean, except that our goods and our people may reach European ports?

Yet, sir, it is proposed that when the seas have been cleared for our commerce to pass we shall have ready great monopolies to seize that commerce. Our soldiers shall die that the combinations may grow rich. If that, sir, is to be the means to which this war is to be put, if we are to fight this battle for freedom of the seas and then turn over our foreign trade to a few trusts and combinations, then let those trusts and combinations fight this war. If we are to have East India companies, as suggested to me, to exploit the commerce of the world, let those who are to take the gold shed the blood. But if we are to wage this war, as I understand we do wage it, because a free people are entitled to free trade and free commerce of the world and, therefore, we propose to keep the highways of the seas open for man and for goods, for human beings, and for the grosser tonnage from whence we get our dollars and cents—if that is what we fight this war for, then well and good, our boys will die with cheers upon their lips, our women will send forth sons and brothers with tears upon their cheeks and benedictions for the cause they serve. Our soldiers will fight for these things because they are a part of America's greatness, but at the moment we fight, while the boys are prepared to die, let us not turn over an important part of that for which they fight and die to great monopolies and combinations that will despoil America while they also plunder the people of other lands.

Mr. President, you may do it, but an indignant people will repudiate it.

Mr. POMERENE. If there is no other Senator who desires to speak to-night, I move that the Senate adjourn until 12 o'clock meridian to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 3 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, December 12, 1917, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, December 11, 1917.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Take us Almighty God, our Heavenly Father, into Thy care and keeping, and guide us by the light of Heaven, in the vale of tears, through which we are passing, to a larger conception of Thee and of our fellow men; that the world may come through it better prepared to fulfill the trust Thou has reposed in us; that Liberty, Truth, Justice, Righteousness, may shine on, as the stars in the firmament, when we have passed into the realm where the wicked cease from troubling and where the weary are at rest; and all glory and honor be Thine, through Him, who taught us the way, and the truth, and the life. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday, December 7, 1917, was read and approved.

SWEARING IN OF MEMBER.

Mr. BROWNING. Mr. Speaker, my colleague from New Jersey Mr. CAPSTICK is here and desires to take the oath of office.

Mr. CAPSTICK appeared at the bar of the House and took the oath of office.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing a letter which I wrote to the Central Labor Union on the subject of the prohibition amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing a letter which he wrote to somebody about prohibition. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, on Friday last the House granted unanimous consent for the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MCCORMICK] to address the House on Friday of the present week, immediately after the reading of the Journal, for one hour. I have just received a telegram from Mr. MCCORMICK, in which he says:

By invitation of the National Council of Defense I am speaking before a State-wide meeting of the Indiana councils at Indianapolis Thursday. The severe weather has so upset all train schedules that it is gravely improbable that I can reach Washington on time Friday.

And then he asks the courtesy of the House for unanimous consent to postpone his remarks until Tuesday of next week, immediately after the reading of the Journal, and I ask unanimous consent that he may do so.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that the leave extended to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MCCORMICK] to address the House for one hour next Friday be changed until next Tuesday.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] if, as I understood, next Monday and Tuesday would be given to the consideration of the two constitutional amendments?

Mr. KITCHIN. I understood that probably Monday next we would take a vote on the prohibition amendment.

Mr. GILLETT. And then on Tuesday——

Mr. KITCHIN. I understood that in all probability we would have the woman's suffrage amendment on Tuesday, but there seems to be some hitch in that, and possibly the House will not vote on that then but during the first week after we get back in January.

Mr. GILLETT. I thought the Members would like to know, if you can tell definitely, what the program is.

Mr. KITCHIN. I can not tell definitely now about woman's suffrage. I suggest that if anything would interfere with either one of these subjects we could fix some other time for it. I think we can arrange that matter so that it will be satisfactory to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, then I understand it is definitely understood that next Monday we will take up the prohibition amendment?

Mr. KITCHIN. I ask unanimous consent now that the House consider the prohibition amendment on next Monday.

Mr. GILLETT. Will it be reported by then?

Mr. KITCHIN. It will be reported. So we will set that day, in order that everybody will have a week's notice.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The same resolution that passed the Senate is being considered by the Committee on the Judiciary of the House?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes. And we will make it after the reading of the Journal next Monday, so that everybody will have notice, and it will not be necessary to bring in a rule.

Mr. SLAYDEN. What debate will there be on the resolution?

Mr. KITCHIN. I imagine it will run on. We can take a day on it.

Mr. SLAYDEN. On the constitutional amendment?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. What has become of my request for unanimous consent?

The SPEAKER. Well, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] impinged on the scene and started this interlocutory proceeding. The Chair will put the gentleman's request.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I thought the gentleman from North Carolina was suggesting to the gentleman from Wisconsin, in order to get his unanimous consent, that we make this arrangement he requested first, when we could determine whether or not the question could be taken up on Tuesday.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Is the gentleman asking now that Monday be set aside for the consideration of the prohibition resolution?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Would it not be well enough to include in the unanimous consent that the resolution be voted on before adjournment on Monday?

Mr. KITCHIN. We can come to that that morning, I will say to the gentleman from Kansas. We can get unanimous consent to come to an agreement.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Otherwise general debate will run indefinitely.

Mr. GARNER. The House can control the question of general debate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] asks unanimous consent that the leave granted to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MCCORMICK] to address the House immediately after the reading of the Journal on next Friday be shifted until next Tuesday.

Mr. GARNER. Subject to privileged business.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] agree to that?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Privileged business having preference?

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER]?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. That means that the gentleman from Washington [Mr. MILLER] will begin immediately after the reading of the Journal, and so forth, Friday, with his hour. Now, has the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] anything to suggest?

Mr. KITCHIN. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, that on next Monday it will be in order to consider and vote on the prohibition amendment.

Mr. STAFFORD. Immediately after the reading of the Journal?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes; immediately after the reading of the Journal.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that next Monday, immediately after the reading of the Journal and the clearing up of business on the Speaker's table, the resolution submitting a constitutional prohibition amendment be taken up for consideration. Did the gentleman include voting on it on Monday?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes, sir.

Mr. CANNON. I think the gentleman should suggest that the House can take care of that.

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes; I will modify my proposition in that respect.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Speaker, I am requested by my colleague, Mr. HOWARD, to ask for leave of absence in his behalf for 10 days, on account of illness in his family.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent that his colleague, Mr. HOWARD, be granted leave of absence for 10 days on account of illness in his family. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, I want to make a similar request.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that the right way to get these requests is to write them on slips of paper and hand them to the Clerk, and then they will all go through together. Individual Members rising to make such requests consume unnecessary time.

Mr. GARNER. I will adopt that suggestion.

Mr. ELLSWORTH, by unanimous consent, obtained leave of absence, indefinitely, on account of the death of his father.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed joint resolution of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. J. Res. 106. Joint resolution extending until January 1, 1919, the effective date of section 10 of the act entitled "An act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes," approved October 15, 1914.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2334) to authorize absence by homestead settlers and entrymen, and for other purposes.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

Sundry messages, in writing, from the President of the United States were communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. Sharkey, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House of Representatives that the President had, on December 8, 1917, approved and signed bill of the following title:

H. R. 5833. An act granting six months' pay to Ida Cottrell Hodgson, widow of Frederick Grady Hodgson, deceased, colonel, United States Army, retired.

POST OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House take up for consideration the bill (H. R. 7237) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and for other purposes; and, pending that motion, I ask unanimous consent that the general debate on this bill shall proceed not longer than 5.30 o'clock to-day, and that the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON] shall control one half of the time and the chairman of the committee the other half.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the Post Office appropriation bill; and pending that, he asks unanimous consent that general debate shall not run later than 5.30 o'clock to-day, and that the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON] control one half of the time and the chairman control the other half.

Mr. STEENERSON. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I would like to inquire of the Chair if it would not be satisfactory to have five hours and a half of general debate? If we fix the hour, other business might interfere with us and we would be shut out. I have got requests for two hours and a half already. We might not have a quorum.

Mr. MOON. I will give the gentleman 30 minutes of my time.

Mr. STEENERSON. Could we not fix the business ourselves?

Mr. MOON. I do not object, if we can conclude it to-day.

Mr. STEENERSON. We can conclude it to-day, I hope. I shall do all I can to have it concluded to-day. I would like to have five hours' general debate.

Mr. MOON. Suppose we continue until 6 o'clock?

Mr. STEENERSON. Let us have five hours' general debate. I want my two and a half hours out of that.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Speaker, I modify my request, then, in compliance with the request of the gentleman from Minnesota, that the debate shall proceed not longer than five hours to-day.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOON. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. I understand, then, that the bill will not be taken up under the five-minute rule to-day?

Mr. MOON. I want to take up a page or two and get started.

Mr. STAFFORD. I understand that we will have only one paragraph read. With that understanding, I have no objection to it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the general debate be limited to five hours, he to control one half and the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON] the other half. Is there objection?

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOON. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. CANNON. I am not inclined to object. I take it for granted, however, that when the bill is read under the five-minute rule there will be some liberal chance, possibly, if it is indicated, or unanimous consent is given—at least that the gentleman will not be wolfish in rushing his bill. [Laughter.]

Mr. MOON. The gentleman from Tennessee will not be "wolfish." He will give you all the time he can. Of course, Mr. Speaker, there will be liberality in the discussion of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion to go into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] will take the chair.

Thereupon the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 7237, the Post Office appropriation bill, with Mr. FERRIS in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 7237, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 7237) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON] is recognized.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee is recognized.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to speak very long on the items of this bill. The estimates of the department, revised, are about $335,000,000, in round numbers. The bill itself carries one or two million dollars less. The amount recommended by the committee this year is about $900,000 less than was recommended last year.

I will not undertake to go into a detailed statement as to the amounts of expenditure in each of the offices of the Post Office Department. The report shows very fully and clearly the amount asked for, the amount recommended, the amount appropriated, and the purposes for which it is to be used, and I ask unanimous consent that the report of the committee setting forth the figures of the different items of the appropriations may be printed in the RECORD in connection with my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the report of the committee presented by him be printed as a part of his remarks. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOON. If I may be excused for a few moments and may have your attention, I will call to your consideration only a few of the main features of this bill.

Perhaps no bills are ever introduced into this House of late years that carry as much general legislation as the Post Office appropriation bills. I believe one recent bill carried thirty-odd new laws. Of course, we have had very much contention always over these questions of legislation, but the bill presented to you to-day is almost in conformity with the rules of the House, for it carries no new legislation except as to one or two items that are made necessary by the existence of the pending war. There is no material difference in the appropriations for this fiscal year from those of last year. Existing conditions and the normal increases in the service have made it necessary to increase some of the appropriations. The changes in the administration of postal affairs have brought about decreases in some of the bureaus in the department, and the fact that we appropriated more money in the last bill than heretofore has caused some large unexpended balances to appear in the adjustment of accounts of the department. Until a few years past this department has not been self-sustaining. It is estimated that under the bill for the current fiscal year there will probably be a surplus of $8,000,000 to go into the General Treasury of the United States, but that is yet to be determined by the balance of accounts on June 30 next.

About a year ago we passed some very material legislation affecting the Post Office Department, when we changed the basis of the computation of pay for railroads and passed from the weighing system to the space system under the provisions of the bill that gave the control of that question to the Interstate Commerce Commission. About 90 per cent of the mail is now being carried on the new basis, under the direction of the commission. It appears from the report of the expenditures and balances that under the new law we have been enabled to save about $5,600,000, and the appropriation for inland transportation of mails is therefore reduced about that sum in this bill.

I hope I may be excused if I take up these questions and discuss them for a moment as they occur to me, without attempting to take them up in the order in which they appear in the bill. The Post Office Department is still contending with a loss in the Rural Delivery Service. If I recollect correctly, the appropriation for the Rural Delivery Service last year was about $52,000,000, the same amount that is carried in this bill. The difference between the receipts from this service and the amount expended to carry it on is nearly $35,000,000.

Whether you call it a loss or not is hardly material. Whether you calculate in your computation the special benefits that arise to the people is not material to my present purposes. The actual loss, or the difference against the Government, is estimated by the department to be nearly $35,000,000. We have 43,000 rural routes. The average pay of a rural carrier for a year's work is about $1,175. Each carrier, on an average, works during the year a little less than four hours a day. Now, it would seem that from a business standpoint there ought to be some readjustment of this service. It hardly looks proper that the average daily service should be not longer than four hours and that the average yearly pay should be $1,175, yet that is true. On the other hand, the equipment that the rural carrier has to use is very costly now, and the money that he has to pay out for the care of his horses is greater than it ever has been, and the cost of his living is greater than it ever has been. I am not here to suggest that the rural carrier shall not have more compensation; but, regardless of the interest that I feel in these employees, I believe it is due to the people of the United States that in a legislative bill upon this subject there should be some change in the system. There is no legislation on this bill, because it is purely an appropriation bill, and new legislation can not be had in this bill. A close estimate of the cost shows that this same service could be performed as effectually by the contract method at a saving of more than $20,000,000, in comparison with the amount that we are now paying. In other words, under the present system of carrying the rural mails we are losing $35,000,000 per annum. If they were carried under a star-route system or some system similar to that, and the carriers were paid for the time that they actually serve in proportion to the amount that they are now receiving or a larger figure, there could be a saving to the Government of more than $20,000,000. I feel it my duty to call your attention to these facts.

I know that nearly every Member in this House representing a country district—I do not say it offensively—feels that he is the especial guardian of the rural carrier in some way. I want to speak about this now before the time comes when you will be excited about your carriers, and to ask you to take a little interest in the Treasury of the United States. It will be proposed after a while not to take from you your carriers but to adjust their pay and compensate them in proportion to the service that they render to the Government under a system of contracts. When we are voting billions of money, I call a small economy if we can save $20,000,000 on one item, and that is something that ought to be thought of. We do not change the appropriation at all for this purpose. I only mention the matter now that justice may be done to carriers who do the work, and that the pay shall be in proportion to the service rendered. I express no opinion now as to merits of claims for reduced or increased compensation of rural carriers. We must do justice to them and to the public.

Mr. RUCKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOON. I will.

Mr. RUCKER. I notice that the amount in this bill is the same as in the existing law.

Mr. MOON. Exactly.

Mr. RUCKER. There are more routes in operation to-day than there were a year ago.

Mr. MOON. Yes.

Mr. RUCKER. Ought not the appropriation be increased?

Mr. MOON. No; not in this bill. They can be adjusted so that the department does not need any more money. I want to say to the gentleman from Missouri that the committee hardly ever thinks of increasing an appropriation asked for by the department, because we have always found that they ask for a little more than they need.

Mr. RUCKER. They have never done that in reference to rural carriers.

Mr. MOON. Oh, yes.

Mr. RUCKER. This bill does not contemplate any reduction in the number of routes.

Mr. MOON. No.

Mr. RUCKER. The gentleman says that the average work of the rural carriers is four hours a day. Of course the gentleman knows that during a large part of the time the carrier goes out early in the morning and returns late at night.

Mr. MOON. That is true of some carriers; I am speaking of the average. The carrier who starts early in the morning and returns late at night ought to have more compensation than the man who goes out and spends only four hours on the route. The man who works 4 hours ought not to have the same compensation as the man who works 10 hours.

Mr. RUCKER. If the gentleman will pardon me, the carrier practically puts in his entire day in the service for the reason that under the regulations the carrier is not permitted to engage in any other work or business.

Mr. MOON. That regulation might be changed.

Mr. RUCKER. It ought to be changed. If a carrier can perform his work in six hours and then wants to work on something else, he ought to be permitted to do so.

Mr. SABATH. Will the gentleman from Tennessee yield?

Mr. MOON. I will.

Mr. SABATH. Do I understand that the rural carrier is not permitted to do any other work than that which is in direct line with his duty?

Mr. MOON. No; that is not the law, but the rule is that the letter carrier must be subject to the order of the department during all that time.

Mr. SABATH. He can work on his farm or his place, and is not precluded from doing it.

Mr. MOON. Oh, no.

Mr. RUCKER. The gentleman from Tennessee is no doubt accurate in one sense and not in another, in my judgment.

Mr. MOON. The fact that he is an employee of the Government makes him subject to the order and control of the Government. Of course, in idle hours he must make some preparation for the work he is to perform.

Mr. RUCKER. They will not allow a carrier to sell fire or life insurance when he is off duty.

Mr. MOON. I think it would be a good thing if they did not allow any of them to do it.

Mr. RUCKER. That may be. That is only one item that came into my mind.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman from Tennessee yield?

Mr. MOON. I will.

Mr. STAFFORD. The chairman of the committee will recall that when the service was first installed carriers took advantage of the position by competing in certain lines of employment. We passed a law that forbade them to work in any line of employment where they would have an undoubted advantage over other competitors, but outside of that they are privileged to do anything.

Mr. RUCKER. There are very few things that they are doing outside of their work to-day, and I know as much about the rural carriers as some other gentlemen on the floor.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Will the gentleman from Tennessee yield?

Mr. MOON. I will yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. I assume that in the cases where the carrier only works four hours a day in covering his route, that generally he uses an automobile. Now, in cases like that, I suppose some consideration ought to be given to the fact that the automobile is expensive, the upkeep is considerable, and the pay ought to be regulated accordingly.

Mr. MOON. Of course, all those things ought to be properly considered, and I think no bill could be framed to settle the question that did not consider that and every other factor in it. But the naked fact remains that the general service in the United States by rural carriers is less than four hours a day, and that the pay is $1,175 a year. The naked fact also remains that you are losing $35,000,000 in the service when a simple change by an honest contract would save you $20,000,000.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. The gentleman recognizes that in the North automobiles can only be used in the summer time; that in the winter the routes are difficult to travel and that automobiles can not be run, and, of course, it takes a much longer time with a team, and that is also to be considered.

Mr. MOON. Of course; every condition enters into the consideration—the difficulty of covering routes in certain sections of the country must be considered. The fact that there is a diversity of conditions does not alter the central fact that the administration of the law could be better if the department were permitted to make some changes.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. I submitted the inquiry to the gentleman because I understood him early in his remarks to say that it was the proposition to regulate the salaries in accordance with the time put in by the carrier.

Mr. MOON. That is the main feature, of course, but everything that enters into the consideration of the salary in forming a just judgment as to what the employees should be paid must be considered.

Mr. DOWELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOON. Yes.

Mr. DOWELL. Do I understand the chairman is in favor of letting these rural routes out by contract?

Mr. MOON. No; the gentleman must not understand me that way. I am only stating facts to the House and expressing no opinion myself as yet. He suggested, however, that possibly a proper method for the adjustment of it would be not to dismiss a single carrier in the Government of the United States, but to arrange for contract with them or with others we would have to employ on a basis that would give fair and just compensation for services rendered, and the department claims they can save $20,000,000 by that sort of thing.

Mr. DOWELL. That suggestion, then, comes from the department?

Mr. MOON. I am just discussing the matter generally. Those suggestions come from the department. You will find one hundred and seventy-odd pages of hearings here, a good deal of it upon that subject. It comes from the department, of course. In fact, there is mighty little that the chairman of a committee can say upon departmental appropriations that does not come from the department or some opposition to the department.

Mr. DOWELL. As I understand it, the committee does not favor the contract system?

Mr. MOON. The committee has not and does not consider that question in this bill. I am just calling your attention to that question, gentlemen, as one that might come before you in the future, and I am asking you to think of it not only in the interest of the carrier, because he must be protected, but in the interest of the Government that you represent. I have found upon the floor of this House the wildest madness when a sensible proposition is made in reference to these carriers, when nothing could be done except to increase the salary, and I want to try to tame you down a little to the point where you can think candidly and honestly for your Government instead of for the carrier altogether. Do him justice; do the people justice.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. As I understand it, the question of the salary of the carrier is not immediately concerned in the disposition of this bill?

Mr. MOON. Oh, no. This bill does not make any change in the law on the subject.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Other legislation will be proposed or may be proposed or is now being considered by a committee having that matter in view?

Mr. MOON. Yes; I will say to the House, if you will permit me in this rather informal manner to discuss the question, that there is now a subcommittee of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads that is taking into consideration this question affecting the carriers, both the rural carriers and the city carriers, as well as post-office clerks, railway mail clerks, and fourth-class postmasters, especially and generally all employees of the Postal Department, looking to the determination of the question whether there shall or shall not be an increase in salaries, and if an increase, how. Those are questions that we have left out of this bill almost exclusively, and they are proposing to take them up for consideration in another measure entirely.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOON. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. As I understand it, this is a clean appropriation bill?

Mr. MOON. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. And matters changing the law will be submitted after consideration of your committee for consideration of the House upon their merits?

Mr. MOON. That is true.

Mr. CANNON. It is not contemplated to have the appropriation bill and the House swept off its feet in a hysteria touching legislation?

Mr. MOON. That is it exactly.

Mr. CANNON. I compliment the gentleman.

Mr. MOON. I want to say this, that this bill does not propose any new legislation at all except as to one item, as I stated in the beginning, and that is entirely new to the whole system, and I may as well speak of that for a moment now. It has become essential since the Government of the United States has entered into war with Germany and Austria-Hungary that a very close censorship be held of the mails. There is now what is known as a naval censorship and a War Department censorship, which is in a measure incomplete. There is a board that looks after these matters, and a representative of the Post Office Department is upon that board. It has been deemed by the administration as wise that special provision be made for the censorship of all letters for all classes of citizens coming into this country from a foreign country and going from this country to foreign countries. We have, therefore, included one item which, of course, is subject to a point of order if anyone desires to make it, but we thought it best to place it in the bill, of $1,200,000 for the censorship of foreign mails. That is about all the material new law that is in the bill.

We have increased the item for foreign mail transportation from $3,200,000 to $5,800,000, and yet the whole of the bill, with these increases and the deductions that have been made, carries only a million dollars more than the previous bill. I want to be candid with the House in respect to another little matter that would seem to be at variance with the statement that I have just made. We have declined to consider all increases in the salary of officers and their clerks in the department and in the service, and have relegated the whole question to the committee I refer to, except in the post office, I believe, at New York and at Chicago, where they have printing done by the Government. There are there a few men who are only getting $900 or $1,000 a year, and we have thought it wise not to wait for any legislation on the matter, but to ask the House to increase their salaries $100 per annum; and in the department here, where some salaries are as low as $900, there are nine men, who are known as requisition fillers, laborers, who get but $900. We have thought it best to ask that these men receive a raise of $100. Of course that item is also subject to the point of order. It adds only $900 to the whole bill; but while we are not engaged in the general consideration of this question, we thought that when it did come for general consideration, these men, who are getting wages far below the amount necessary for them to have in order to get bread and meat, these laborers who are getting $900 ought to be put at the $1,000 figure.

I would not have said a word upon this bill, because I feel that it could perhaps be better explained when we get to the reading of the paragraphs if any explanation of it is desired, but for the fact that as chairman of the committee it is possibly my duty to call your attention to the measure in its more important details. The general details of the bill are very familiar to the committee and all of you, and there are practically no changes from previous appropriations.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOON. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman states there is no new legislation in this bill with one or two exceptions, which he has mentioned.

Mr. MOON. That is all that I am aware of.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. But some old legislation has been left out of the bill?

Mr. MOON. Little old new legislation has been left out.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The pneumatic-tube services are not provided for in this bill?

Mr. MOON. They are not provided for in the general law of the land, and therefore could not be put in this bill.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. They were provided for in the last bill to the extent of $1,100,000 in rentals?

Mr. MOON. I will explain to the gentleman this question: The pneumatic-tube service is one that exists in four or five cities, I believe—Boston, Philadelphia, New York, Chicago, Baltimore, and St. Louis. Now, a few years ago, perhaps 10 or 15 years ago, we had a pneumatic-tube law in force. It was my pleasure to move to strike that item from the bill some 10 or 12 years ago, because it seemed to me an unjust and unfair appropriation. The House sustained the motion and the Senate sustained that view, and the item of pneumatic-tube service disappeared from the bill. Two years afterward the present law was enacted, but the contest against the tubes was such that in the new law there was placed a provision to the effect that the 10-year contract should not be renewed unless a committee appointed by the department had first made an investigation and determined the necessity for a renewal of those contracts. That committee did, in pursuance of the law, make the investigation and report, and it reported against a renewal of the contracts and the continuation of the law as to all cities except a portion of New York below Forty-second Street. The further history of the question is that the last Congress in the consideration of this question did not reenact the law which had expired by limitation but provided for the continuation of the contract until the end of the fiscal year 1918 and appropriated $1,001,000.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. 1918?

Mr. MOON. 1918; and also appointed a commission who were to investigate the question of pneumatic tubes and the wisdom of their continuance as a part of the system of the Government for the transportation of mail. That committee was appointed, but it has not yet reported to Congress as I am aware, so we could not include the item for two reasons—one as a matter of law, I think, and the other a matter of policy.

The matter of policy was that it was not wise to include an appropriation for services pending an investigation as to the advisability of its continuance and because we have plenty of time yet, if the House should desire to continue the pneumatic-tube service, to make appropriation for that purpose. The next reason why we did not do it, and a most substantial one, was that there now exists no law upon which to predicate an appropriation, and that is the reason the department did not estimate for and that is the reason the committee did not include any appropriation for pneumatic tubes. I will say to gentlemen whom I know are deeply interested in this question that while it would be altogether improper under existing circumstances for us to make any appropriation on that question that if it should be the judgment of the House, when that report comes in on the pneumatic-tube question that the service should be continued to be appropriated for, I shall be the very last one to object to it, and will do what I can to have it done, although I have always insisted that it was a superfluous service.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If that report were to come in after this bill had been passed, would it not then be too late to provide for the service?

Mr. MOON. No. This House can at any time provide for an appropriation and is not obliged to do it in one bill.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I am seeking information, because it is a mooted question, as the gentleman knows. Did the Postmaster General continue the contracts for the year ending June, 1918?

Mr. MOON. Of course he had to do so under the law.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The tubes have been used during the year?

Mr. MOON. Until the 30th of June, 1918, under the last appropriation, they may be used.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And the committee has not included the appropriation now in the pending bill because the congressional committee that was authorized by the act of Congress last year has not yet completed its work?

Mr. MOON. That is one reason, and the other is by reason of the expiration of the law by limitation that provided for an appropriation for pneumatic tubes they are without power to make an appropriation until there is some new law.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Has the department given the committee any expression as to its attitude on the continuance of the tubes?

Mr. MOON. Beyond the present fiscal year?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. MOON. None whatever beyond the official action.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman from Tennessee is a member of the congressional committee to make inquiry as to the advisability of taking over the tubes?

Mr. MOON. The gentleman from Tennessee was appointed as a member of that committee to determine the question of the advisability of taking over the tubes, but as he had on several occasions expressed a very firm conviction that it was contrary to the interests of the Government of the United States to do so, and having formally expressed that opinion, he declined to serve on the committee where the question was to be determined.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I am familiar with the gentleman's views and he has been very fair in stating them heretofore. He has been in opposition to the use of the pneumatic tubes and opposed to taking them over.

Mr. MOON. And having been in opposition to the service I could not in fairness to those interested sit on the commission.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman is not therefore a member of the commission?

Mr. MOON. No. I declined the appointment.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is the gentleman in position to say when the commission is likely to report?

Mr. MOON. I have not heard a word from them.

Mr. SNOOK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOON. I will.

Mr. SNOOK. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman said that the bill carries a new item of $1,200,000 for censorship of foreign mails.

Mr. MOON. Yes.

Mr. SNOOK. Is there any new legislation on the subject in the bill?

Mr. MOON. None whatever. It was just an appropriation. I assume the appropriation will be used by the department in continuation of censorship in connection with the War and Navy censorship service.

Mr. MEEKER. Is not the law already in existence which makes possible the use of these funds by these departments?

Mr. MOON. Yes; possibly so.

Mr. KINCHELOE. In connection with the question of the foreign mail, I want to ask for some other information. Does our franking privilege on public documents extend to France?

Mr. MOON. I doubt it, but I would not undertake to give the gentleman an opinion on that without examination.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the gentleman will permit, in that connection I might furnish the committee some information which I gleaned by calling up the department yesterday afternoon. My former secretary is now in France, and I received a letter from him yesterday, the first that I have received, requesting a copy of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. I immediately took the matter up with the RECORD clerk, Mr. Smith, and he advised me that the RECORD would require postage. I thereupon took the matter up with the superintendent of the classification division of the Third Assistant's office, and he informed me over the telephone last evening that the frank would be sufficient to convey to any of our enlisted force in France, without any extra postage.

Mr. MOON. The gentleman from Kentucky was not referring to mail for soldiers, but public documents.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Yes, sir; that is what I had reference to.

Mr. MOON. We have the soldier's frank.

Mr. KINCHELOE. The reason I asked you is to find out, if the gentleman will permit, as to whether our frank as Members of Congress is good to deliver public documents to soldiers in France.

Mr. MOON. You did not say "soldiers." I imagine it would be good for sending letter mail to soldiers, and probably public documents. The law is not before me.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have gone far beyond what I desired to say about this bill. Yet there is one other item that I feel I ought to call to the attention of the House.

We have a provision in the bill, which is carried under the head of the Third Assistant Postmaster General, for the purchase by contract of stamped envelopes. It appears that the contractors felt that they were unable to continue to supply the Government under their contract, which has yet two years to run, with stamped envelopes at the old price, and that they would lose very heavily if the contract was enforced. There is a bond behind that contract of $500,000 for its faithful performance. The contractors are probably worth several millions of dollars, as it appears from the record. Unquestionably, on account of the increased cost of paper and the increased cost of the service necessary to make these envelopes, they are running behind under their contract. They desired relief, as other contractors desired relief from the Congress, but which Congress declined. But there was found in this particular contract a provision to the effect that the department might at any time, if it saw proper, change the character and quality of the envelopes that were to be purchased, and the price therefor.

The department applied to the Comptroller for a construction of that section, and he held that the contract might be changed as the language of it indicated, by the action of the department, in changing either the character of the paper or the size, or anything else in connection with the envelope, so as to bring about a modification of the old contract and necessarily forcing the adoption of a new contract with new prices attached to the envelopes. There is considerable proof, to which I call your attention in the RECORD, on that question. The purchasing agent of the Government said that he could not secure the envelope without a change in the contract. By the consent of the department the purchasing agent changed the contract and made a new one for the Government by which the same amount of stamped envelopes were to be furnished to this Government at an additional cost of $1,750,000. The committee was of the opinion that the change in this contract, rather than resorting to its enforcement and the collection of the penalty of the bond from the contractors was not to the advantage of the Government. The committee felt that if any change had to be made, if the Government of the United States desired to be liberal to the contractors, bound under bond and penalties for the performance of a duty, the power belonged to the Congress and not to the department to make those changes, unless within the strict letter of the law and for the purpose of securing better envelopes as provided in the terms. It appeared to the committee that the purpose was not to get a better envelope, but the purpose of it was to take advantage of the technicality of the law by which the contract could be changed and secure its continuation. This was done. The change cost the people $1,750,000. No reflection on the department should be made in connection with it. We simply think the department acted with bad judgment. We think that it ought to have stood upon the bond and ought to have held the contractor liable until the Congress, that has the power to determine that question, had given its authority to change. It is not so much the amount involved as it is the assertion under subterfuge of power in the executive department—power that belongs to this body—that we reject.

The committee, feeling that way about it, realizing at the time they did it that the House and the Senate might have to give the full amount of a new contract and entail a loss to be suffered by the people of the United States of $1,750,000, thought that we could not afford to do it except by a majority vote of this House, if it had to be done at all, and therefore we recommended for appropriation not the new amount but the old amount provided by the terms of the contract. We declined to recommend the appropriation in this bill of the amount recommended by the department in order that this question might come before you, and that you might determine it according to your best judgment.

It is in this connection that I desire to print in the RECORD the letter of the Postmaster General on that subject.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOON. In a moment. It is always a serious question, of course, to supply the people with their needs and wants under the instrumentalities furnished by the department in the course of administration, but I think the department would act more wisely and better if, when a contract could not be performed, it would not attempt to modify it and change it in order to obtain those benefits. Rather let the responsibility come where under the law it belongs—to the Congress of the United States. It is not my purpose or the purpose of any member of this committee to call in question the good motives or the honesty or the integrity of anybody connected with this matter in the department, but it is our intention to impress, if we can, upon this House the fact that the administrative officers ought not, for the purpose of securing that which they want, undertake to usurp power and authority under enforced changed conditions that would afford a pretext to change a contract.

Mr. STAFFORD. Now, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOON. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. STAFFORD. If it is not a long letter, is it agreeable to the gentleman to have the letter read from the Clerk's desk?

Mr. MOON. I have no objection in the world to having it read. I want to conclude my remarks, already too long.

Mr. STAFFORD. I think the Members of the House would like to have the views of the department on this question.

Mr. MOON. In conclusion, now, I will ask permission to have the letter of the Postmaster General read to the House instead of its being incorporated in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

Mr. FESS. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, I do not object, but I would like to ask the chairman two questions before he takes his seat. May I do that?

Mr. MOON. Yes, sir.

Mr. FESS. In reference to the change from the weight to the space basis, I understood the gentleman to say there was a saving of over $5,000,000.

Mr. MOON. No. He does not attribute it all to that particular item. There is in that item a deduction of about $5,000,000, and the department attributes it largely to the change to the space basis.

Mr. FESS. I have a statement from an old employee of the postal work stating that the space basis is not a success. I do not know whether he means that it is inefficient or whether he had in mind the financial statement. The gentleman's answer would indicate the latter, especially. But what can the chairman say about the efficiency of the handling of the mail by the new method?

Mr. MOON. I once discussed that item alone for an hour on this floor. This House considered all that question when we went to the space basis. To my mind it is an absolute certainty that the continuation of the old weight basis, under which there was a quadrennial weighing of the mails and an estimate of the pay in each of the four sections every year, was unscientific and unjust. In the statement of three of the Postmasters General before the committee they said they could not come within $20,000,000 of what the pay should be. We do not want to give anything but adequate and reasonable pay. The expense had grown under the weight basis from $8,000,000 to over $60,000,000. Under the new space basis the pay the very first year of service under this law or under this administration of the law is demonstrating the fact that there will be no further increase in the pay except in proportion to the normal increase in the service, and that we can save yearly by space on the full railway post-office cars or the half cars or the quarters cars so as to recoup all possible losses and give a better and more efficient service.

I will say further to the gentleman from Ohio that the bottom of this fight all the time has been the express companies and the railroad companies, in order to destroy the parcel post and continue their graft and the subsidy upon the transportation of the mails. I know that there is going to be a difference of opinion about this. I know how the railroads and express people feel. I know how the department feels. We realize the fact that our views could not and ought not to obtain before everybody's else, although we felt they were right. But we realized that they had rights that they ought to have the power to assert, and therefore, instead of forcing the railroad companies to a subservient submission to the dictates and acts of Congress, we submitted the determination of that question to the Interstate Commerce Commission, and if they have any grievance on the question, if in any way they are not compensated fairly and justly, that tribunal has been opened by this body for their benefit, and the railroads and express companies of the United States have no longer any honest ground of contention against this law, in my judgment.

Mr. FESS. The chairman will understand that the statement I referred to did not come from any railroad man. It came from a member of the Postal Service.

Mr. MOON. Oh, yes. You can get a statement from a member of the Postal Service who does not know as much about the difference between the space basis and the weight basis as a rat—many of them. [Laughter.]

Mr. FESS. He had a service of 25 years.

Mr. MOON. I do not care if he has had service for 45 years. If he ever examined that question carefully and prayerfully for a long time he knows nothing about it.

Mr. FESS. The other question I wanted to ask the gentleman was in relation to any possible deficit for the next year. Has the chairman any information as to the probable effect on the revenue by the change in the cost of the stamp from 2 cents to 3 cents and from 1 cent to 2 cents?

Mr. MOON. No; we have had no definite information on that subject. It has not been in operation long enough to ascertain that. The gentleman will understand that the additional cent paid for a postage stamp does not go to the Post Office Department and does not inure to its benefit. That difference is a war revenue, which does not go into the postal receipts. So the accounting of the Post Office Department will be practically upon the old basis. The additional 1 cent will go as war revenue. I do not know, and there is no way to tell yet, what the general result in the Post Office Department will be for this year. Of course, conditions are very much unsettled by our being in a state of war; but the best information I could get upon the subject—which, of course, is largely a matter of guesswork at this time—is that there will probably be a surplus of about $8,000,000 from the ordinary revenues of the Post Office Department for the next fiscal year to go into the General Treasury. But upon that I can not speak with authority.

Mr. FESS. I notice the statement put out here at Washington that the increase in the cost of the stamps is going, not to reduce but to increase the revenue. The question is whether the increase in the price of the stamp will reduce the number of letters instead of increasing them.

Mr. MOON. I can not tell about that. No one can tell. I imagine that the addition of 1 cent to the postage on a letter will not make any very material diminution in the use of the mails. If it does, of course it will diminish the revenue that will go to the Post Office Department, because the additional 1 cent does not go to that department.

Mr. FESS. That is the point I am getting at.

Mr. MOON. Unquestionably the gentleman would be right about that.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Will the chairman of the committee answer one question before he sits down?

Mr. MOON. If I can.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Will the increase in the rates on second-class mail matter decrease the use of the mails, or the privileges of the reading public, in the opinion of the chairman?

Mr. MOON. I do not think it will at all. The increase is so very slight and is so readily shifted from the publisher to the American reading public that I do not think it will disturb conditions at all. It ought not. It may be that when Congress makes them pay at least half of what it costs to carry their matter, they may feel it a little, but they can not feel this change very much. We were losing, I think, some $70,000,000 upon this second-class matter, and I think we will still be losing somewhere around $50,000,000 or $60,000,000. I will say to my friend that this is a matter that is going to need some very careful consideration in the future, not only in connection with the rates but the zones and the character of matter that should bear the burden.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Do you think it will reduce the circulation of the newspapers or periodicals materially?

Mr. MOON. No. A newspaper has an ordinary circulation radius of not exceeding 300 miles, and most newspapers are circulated in 5, 10, 20, 50, or 100 miles. This will have no perceptible effect—very little effect, if any—on the daily papers. It is on the magazines that desire to cross the continent at the same price for which a newspaper travels 150 miles that the effect will be and ought to be.

Mr. SNYDER. May I ask the chairman of the committee a question?

Mr. MOON. Certainly.

Mr. SNYDER. Speaking of the change from the weight system to the space system, what has the gentleman to say as to the efficiency, with reference to the way the mails are carried now as compared with the way they were carried under the weight system, and has that anything to do with the increased time that it takes to get a letter from the central part of the State of New York to the city of Washington?

Mr. MOON. No; I think the space basis could not possibly have any effect upon that.

Mr. SNYDER. Something has happened in the department.

Mr. MOON. No doubt there will have to be a closer supervision by the Government under the space basis than under the weight basis.

Mr. SNYDER. Something has happened in the department which has created a very great delay.

Mr. MOON. Something is happening in these times every day that we do not like.

Mr. SNYDER. I think everyone here knows that there has been extreme delay in the delivery not only of political but of business mail throughout the entire United States, and that is illustrated by the fact that recently it has taken eight days to get a letter to Duluth and a reply back, whereas it formerly took four days.

Mr. MOON. From where?

Mr. SNYDER. From the city of New York to Duluth and back. It has taken eight days, whereas it formerly took four. Something serious has happened to the efficiency of the postal system of this country.

Mr. MOON. Not being entirely familiar, or even partially familiar, with the administration of affairs in the office of the Second Assistant, who has jurisdiction over this subject, I can not say; but if I were to venture a suggestion at all, I would say it was due to the fact that there has been an effort to cut down the crews on the railway post-office cars and to force distribution at terminal points instead of upon the cars, as heretofore, and to reduce the work to fixed hours instead of working until the distribution was finished, as heretofore. I think these things have brought about the delay. They effect some economy in money, but the delay is more costly to the people than the benefit which results from the financial economy.

Mr. SNYDER. It takes just one day more now to get a letter from my office here to my office at home than it did one year ago, and just one day more to get a letter from my office in the city of Little Falls, N. Y., to the city of Washington than it did a year ago. This is a very serious and expensive handicap upon the business of this country.

Mr. MOON. Of course, there has to be some solution for it.

Mr. SNYDER. I did not know whether it was caused by the change from weight to space or not.

Mr. MOON. The change from weight to space has not had anything to do with it in the most remote degree, but if you attempt to reduce the number of men on every car and to reduce the hours of service and to change distribution from the railway post-office car to the terminal with an increase in mail matter, common sense would indicate that there is going to be some delay in the delivery of the mails.

Mr. SNYDER. I am not dealing with the question of common sense. I am dealing with the business economy of the condition that exists to-day.

Mr. MOON. I advise the gentleman that that is simply common sense.

Mr. SNYDER. You may call it common sense if you like.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Tennessee a question.

Mr. MOON. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BANKHEAD. In the early part of the gentleman's remarks he made a statement that it was possible that readjustments might be contemplated for the compensation of rural carriers. Did I understand that a subcommittee had that question under consideration?

Mr. MOON. No; the subcommittee has under consideration a more important question and one more tender and dearer to the heart of the gentleman from Alabama, which is the question of the increase of the pay of rural carriers.

Mr. BANKHEAD. And the gentleman suggested that it might be put on a profit basis.

Mr. MOON. No; I did not say that it might; I did not say that the committee was going to do it. I have been suggesting to the House, and I find we have to do it a long way in advance, that methods might be brought about whereby we might save $20,000,000.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the gentleman state whether any steps have been taken along that line?

Mr. MOON. No. We passed a bill in the House of Representatives in the last Congress that would have effected that purpose. It was not discussed; and it went through almost unanimously; but it did not reach a vote in the Senate.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I send to the desk a letter which the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] desired to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

OFFICE OF THE POSTMASTER GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., December 10, 1917.

Hon. JOHN A. MOON,
Chairman Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. MOON: It has come to my attention that the House Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads have indicated a desire for certain information relative to the contract for stamped envelopes and newspaper wrappers, and it is with the purpose of giving this information and stating the case from the standpoint of the Post Office Department that this letter is written.

In the autumn and winter of 1916 the stamped-envelope contractor was seriously behind in his deliveries, and when required to increase his production stated that the great advance in the price of paper and other materials entering into the manufacture of stamped envelopes made it increasingly difficult for him to comply with his contract. Moreover the labor situation was acute, his help was being offered higher wages by the munition plants, and his paper mills were threatening to stop furnishing paper. From the reports of the departments representative located at the contractor's factory it appeared that every effort was being made to comply with the contract, but despite these efforts orders were getting further behind, the quality of the paper was unsatisfactory, and the situation was becoming critical.

At about this time the contractor stated that one of his mills had actually stopped shipping paper and that the other (he was obtaining his paper supply from two concerns) had threatened to do so. This was confirmed by the United States stamped-envelope agent. The contractor was called to Washington and was required to make a definite statement of what he could do. He replied that paper had almost doubled in price, that the cost of other materials and labor had vastly increased, and that it was well-nigh impossible under these conditions to go on with the contract, although he promised to do the best he could. When it was proposed to proceed against his bond he stated that if relief was not afforded in some way he would be compelled to forfeit his bond rather than sustain the greater losses with which he was threatened. He stated further that in the event he was forced to the wall the department would probably have to pay an advance of from 75 to 100 per cent for stamped envelopes, if able to obtain them at all. He urged that some relief be given him, and when doubt was expressed as to the department's legal right to afford such relief, he asked that the matter be submitted to the Comptroller of the Treasury for decision.

For several years the department had contemplated adding extra-quality stamped envelopes of a better grade than had been sold before; window-stamped envelopes, for which there was a considerable demand from the business world; also envelopes of a style known as "high-back," since there was complaint from some sources that the low-back envelopes then being furnished adhered to bulky inclosures and were otherwise unsatisfactory.

There had also been complaints from time to time as to the quality of the paper, especially as to breaking at the folds. It was therefore decided that this would be an opportune time to consider the introduction of these new designs and qualities under the clause of the contract giving the Post Office Department authority to make changes of this character at any time. This clause is as follows:

"The right is reserved by the Postmaster General to require at any time during the contract term, in lieu of or in addition to the stamped envelopes and newspaper wrappers described in these specifications, envelopes or wrappers of other sizes, styles, cuts, qualities, or colors, upon condition that he shall pay to the contractor prices greater or less than those stated in the contract, the difference in price to be proportionate in each instance to the increase or decrease in the cost of manufacture, as determined by mutual agreement."

The matter was therefore submitted to the Comptroller of the Treasury along these lines, and he decided that the department had full authority to require envelopes of a different specification than those covered by the contract and to fix a remuneration therefor by mutual agreement with the contractor on the basis of the then existing cost of manufacture.

Acting upon this decision, specifications were drawn for new qualities and designs of stamped envelopes covering a line of extra-quality envelopes, a line of window envelopes, a line of high-back envelopes, and an improvement in the quality of the paper throughout. The contractor quoted prices for these proposed new grades. The auditing firm of Deloitte, Plender, Griffiths & Co., of New York City, a firm of certified public accountants of established reputation, made a careful examination of the contractor's books and submitted a sworn statement of the costs and the gross profit at the time the contract started, also of the probable cost of manufacture of the proposed new qualities and designs under the market conditions then existing. This statement was reviewed by a committee representing the department, consisting of the superintendent of the division of stamps and the United States stamped-envelope agent. The prices quoted by the contractor were deemed excessive, however, and reductions were made amounting to approximately $250,000 annually.

The comptroller had held that the same relative profit must be provided in the new arrangement as under the old. His exact language was as follows:

"In my opinion you will be justified in ordering stamped envelopes, different from those specifically provided for in the contract, conditioned upon an agreement as to the price to be paid. Such price will be greater than the contract price for the contract envelopes, not only because of the better grade of paper and more expensive form being required by you, but also on account of the present cost of the better grade of paper. The increase in the cost of manufacture to which the increase in price is to be proportioned has reference to the cost of manufacture at this time as compared to a smaller cost at the time the contract began, and the percentage of profit to be allowed on any new grade and form of envelope should not exceed the percentage of profit, if any, accruing at the time the contract began."

In determining the cost of manufacture the contractor insisted on limiting the factors of cost to materials, labor, taxes, and light, heat, and fuel. The department held, however, that it should also include other factors, such as overhead, supervision, and similar items. Since materials and wages had advanced in price, while the other items of cost remained practically stationary, the limitation of items to be considered as requested by the contractor would have operated unduly in his favor. The department therefore insisted on the inclusion of the constant items and reduced the prices accordingly. The contractor also repeatedly asked that old orders not yet filled be canceled, but this request was denied.

To verify the cost of materials prices were obtained from several firms, informal inquiries were made of dealers, etc., and the Chief of the Paper Laboratory of the Bureau of Standards visited paper manufacturers, dealers, and others, and submitted a report. Because of the fact that the contractor had certain subcontracts for paper and other materials then or previously, he was able to obtain prices considerably under the market for paper and for most of the other materials required. The market price of the grade of paper chiefly used, for example, was about 10 cents a pound, but the basis of cost to the department covered by the new agreement was 8 cents.

Although time was an essential element in all of these negotiations, since the contractor was threatened with bankruptcy, every possible precaution was taken to safeguard the interests of the Government. The action proposed was even brought incidentally to the attention of the Post Office Committees in both Houses of Congress.

Every step taken was submitted for my personal approval, and I was convinced then and am convinced now that the course followed was not only right, but that it was the only course possible for the protection of the Government and of the users of stamped envelopes. As an alternative the contractor might have been forced into bankruptcy, but the department would inevitably have been compelled to pay very much higher prices for the manufacture of envelopes than those represented under the present arrangement. Not only so, but we were faced by a probability amounting to a moral certainty that we could not obtain the envelopes from any other source, since no real competition had been offered in the past 10 years, despite the constant efforts of the department to obtain such competition, the commercial envelope companies refusing to bid on the contract and the Public Printer lacking the facilities to enable him to do so.

Another feature of the case is that the prices under the previous arrangement were so low that the department was being swamped with orders. Indeed, even at the increased prices under the new arrangement orders have abnormally increased, because the rates at which stamped envelopes are sold to the public are still materially less than for similar grades of unstamped envelopes.

In this connection it may be added that not one complaint as to the increased prices has been received from the buying public since this new arrangement has been made.

Still further to safeguard the interests of the department, the order authorizing this change was made terminable at the will of the Postmaster General, the concluding paragraph reading as follows: "It is understood that if deemed fit to do so the department will order a reduction of these schedules of prices within the terms of the original contract."

Since this arrangement was concluded, however, the United States has entered into the war, and market conditions remain so disturbed that it is not deemed wise or just at this time to modify the arrangement, and it is therefore earnestly hoped that the original estimate submitted for the appropriation for the manufacture of stamped envelopes and newspaper wrappers for the coming year will be granted by the Congress.

It is also requested that this letter be made a part of the record.

Very truly, yours,

A. S. BURLESON.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to incorporate in my remarks the report of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to incorporate in his remarks the report of the committee. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The report of the committee, by Mr. MOON, is as follows:

The Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, in presenting the bill making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, submits the following:

The appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, were $331,316,070. The estimates of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, all revised estimates included, amount to $335,088,345. The committee recommends appropriations to the amount of $331,922,945.

The increases in the estimates of the Post Office Department are due in part to war conditions and in part to expenses incidental to the usual growth of the service.

The report of the Post Office Department sets forth the use of the money heretofore appropriated and the revenues to be expected and expended during the coming fiscal year.

The following tables set forth by items the appropriations for 1918, the estimates of the Post Office Department for 1919, and the committee recommendations for 1919 in the office of the Postmaster General and the four assistants:

Mr. MOON. Having said all that I desire to say now, I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, in the few moments I will detain the House I propose to deal with the subject referred to in the report of the Postmaster General. This report covers some very important features of the Postal Service and deserves most careful consideration. The first thing mentioned in his annual report is the postal finances. I will take the liberty of reading a few sentences:

The revenues exceed the expenditures by $9,887,397.96. After deducting $51,186.06, losses of postal funds by fire, burglary, and other causes, the audited surplus for the year is $9,836,211.90. This surplus is the largest in the history of the Postal Service.

The surplus in postal receipts is payable into the United States Treasury, according to the provision of law, and is used in meeting the general expenses of the Government. Accordingly, $9,000,000 of the above reported surplus has recently been paid into the Treasury. This followed similar payments of $3,800,000, $3,500,000, and $5,200,000 on account of postal surpluses accruing during the fiscal years 1913, 1914, and 1916, respectively.

Now, the object of that statement must necessarily be to lead the people of the United States to believe that the Postal Service is enriching the Treasury by these amounts, which in the aggregate amount to $12,500,000. In addition to that the last surplus—1917—amounted to $9,000,000, making $21,500,000. No one who reads that report, or reads the synopsis furnished to all the leading newspapers, can reasonably come to any other conclusion than that the Postal Service is self-sustaining and profitable to the United States to the extent of $21,500,000 in the last four years.

Now, of course these people who follow somewhat closely the events of the times would have recalled that in 1915 there was a deficit of $11,333,000, according to the previous report. But the Postmaster General never mentions that here. It was no doubt unintentional, and therefore we must supply that deficiency and recall that we lost nearly $12,000,000, which reduces the aggregate alleged surplus somewhat.

But that is not all. I had occasion to speak about this at the last session, and very emphatic denials came from some Members on the other side, claiming that the Treasury Department showed a different result. I claimed at that time that there was no surplus whatever. So I submitted the question to the Treasury Department as to whether or not the Postal Service during the last five years—that would include 1912—had been a source of profit or a loss to the United States. They furnished me a statement, and not only the statement I will read, but a detailed statement which I printed at the time.

The statement is as follows:

Amounts drawn from the Treasury for postal deficiencies and amounts returned thereto, including deposits of surplus postal revenues, fiscal years 1912 to 1916, inclusive.

Summary.

(Part 3.)

[Treasury gained (+); Treasury lost (−).]

1912	−$1,575,986.80
1913	+ 2,389,018.12
1914	+ 3,134,973.06
1915	− 6,724,275.27
1916	− 300,362.22
Net loss 1912–1916	− 3,076,633.11

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, January 31, 1917.

The summary is as follows: Treasury gain or loss—net loss, 1912 to 1916, $3,076,633.11. If we deduct 1912 it leaves the net loss for the four years 1913, 1914, 1915, and 1916, $1,500,346.80. The loss for the four years is a dead loss to the Government of over a million and a half dollars. That is including 1916. I will refer to 1917 a little later.

Now, I want to consider how this can be, that here is the Treasury statement which shows a loss, and the Postmaster General's report shows a surplus.

That is explained in this way: Under a law passed more than 80 years ago postal revenues are appropriated each year for the service of the Post Office Department, and then there is a clause in every Post Office appropriation bill to the effect, in substance, that if the revenues of the Postal Service shall be insufficient to pay the appropriations mentioned in the bill, then upon requisition of the Postmaster General the Treasury Department shall supply the deficiency. So you see that no money ought to be drawn or should be drawn from the Treasury in any year except upon the certificate of the Postmaster General that there is a postal deficit. Here is a remarkable situation. In 1916 there is a reported surplus, and yet the Treasury lost money. How can that occur? Let me explain to you. Under this law the amount of the surplus or deficit is determined by the difference between the postal receipts and the postal expenditures of any given fiscal year. It is just exactly the same as if you should appoint an agent to go out and carry on a business for you and you furnished him with $10,000. He would do a business, say, of $10,000, and then contract $10,000 of debts that he would not pay, and at the end of the year he would report that he now had on hand $20,000; but he would not have paid any bills. That would be his surplus under this system. You see that the surplus is determined by the difference between what you have paid out and what you have taken in. You can readily see that by postponing the payment of your debts beyond the fiscal year you will increase your surplus. It was so apparent that in the first report Postmaster General Burleson made he pointed this out. He said the difference between receipts and expenditures was not a true statement of the financial condition of the Postal Service, because you could postpone the payment of your debts toward the end of the fiscal year and thereby your receipts would exceed your disbursements.

He intimated that that had been done by his predecessor, Mr. Hitchcock, although he did not state that it was intentional; that by reason of delaying the payment of his bills beyond June 30, 1911, which was the year before the last of the last Republican administration, he claimed there was a surplus of $218,000, when as a matter of fact there should have been a deficit of some $700,000. Postmaster General Burleson has repeated this statement several times since, that the difference between the postal receipts and disbursements is not a true index of the financial condition of the service. The report shows that in 1911, the year Mr. Hitchcock was criticized for delaying the payment of bills in order to create a fictitious surplus, only $8,000,000 of bills were postponed. Of course, you must understand that where the receipts are around $1,000,000 a day, and the disbursements in proportion, it does not take very many days to run up delayed payments of that amount. It was claimed then that toward the end of the fiscal year there had been some $8,000,000 postponed and included in the next. That was true. There was that much. Of course, the delay of some is inevitable. The Postmaster General in his report recognizes that. You can not pay all of your bills in the year in which they are incurred. The services of the railroads, for instance, have to be estimated and adjusted, and it takes weeks and sometimes months to adjust those services rendered during the fiscal year.

The amount so postponed, or, I might say, deferred in 1913, was $8,000,000. In 1914, when Mr. Burleson was in charge, it amounted to $8,400,000; in 1915, to $9,000,000; and the next year, 1916, $8,400,000, and strange to note, in this year of our Lord, 1917, he says in his last report there were $13,000,000 of bills incurred during the fiscal years 1916 and 1915 and prior years that were not paid until after the end of the fiscal year 1916. So, so far as the postponement of the payment of bills is concerned, you will see that he out-Herods Herod. He postpones them to the tune of $13,000,000. I want to read to you now this clause in his report on this practice of delaying the payment of the postal expenditures:

The audited expenditures above stated include $306,480,767.43 for services performed and supplies purchased during the fiscal year 1917, and $13,357,950.97 paid in 1917 in liquidation of obligations incurred in previous years which it was impracticable to adjust during those years. To ascertain the true financial results for a given year all obligations for the business of a year, adjusted and unadjusted, should be taken into consideration, and payments in liquidation of obligations incurred for previous years excluded.

That is found on page 5 of his report.

Mr. MADDEN. So that if the $13,000,000 the gentleman suggests as having been unadjusted and unpaid had been deducted from the surplus, there would have been a deficiency?

Mr. STEENERSON. If they had paid them during the year in which they were incurred, surely. I shall now consider the financial statement of 1916. I do not charge that there has been any embezzlement or corruption, but there has been a management which makes a too favorable showing of the Postal Service, so that it looks as though it is prosperous when it is not. The fact is that in 1916, a campaign year, they reported that they paid in a surplus of $5,200,000 when in reality none existed if the debts incurred were paid; on the contrary, the real financial result was a loss. They drew out of the Treasury as a deficit under the certificate of the Postmaster General $5,500,000 and it is never mentioned anywhere. That does not appear in the report. I mentioned it during the last Congress, but I met with a storm of denials, and I made up my mind that I would nail it down fast, so I requested the Auditor for the Post Office Department to furnish me a certified copy of the requisitions upon which the Postmaster General drew out of the Treasury $5,500,000 as a deficit in 1916. I have got it here, certified by the auditor, dated December 8, 1917. The auditor's certificate follows:

AUDITOR'S OFFICE.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE AUDITOR FOR THE POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
Washington, December 8, 1917.

I, Chas. A. Kram, Auditor for the Post Office Department, certify the annexed to be copies of 11 requisitions of the Postmaster General on the Secretary of the Treasury, dated August 4, 5, and 6, and September 1, 2, 3, 21, 22, 23, 24, and 25, 1915, each for the sum of $500,000.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto signed my name and caused to be affixed my seal of office, at the city of Washington, D. C., this 8th day of December, A. D. 1917.

[SEAL.]

C. A. KRAM,
Auditor for the Post Office Department.

(See R. S., sec. 889, and sec. 3 of the act approved July 31, 1894, 28 Stat. L., 205.)

Then follows the first requisition, dated August 4, 1915:

OFFICE OF THE POSTMASTER GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., August 4, 1915.

Hon. WILLIAM G. MCADOO,
Secretary of the Treasury, Washington, D. C.

SIR: I have the honor to request that you have placed to the credit of the Post Office Department the sum of $500,000 on account of a deficiency in the postal revenues for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916.

(Signed) A. S. BURLESON,
Postmaster General.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE AUDITOR FOR THE POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
August 4, 1915.

This requisition is approved for $500,000.

CHARLES A. KRAM,
Auditor for the Post Office Department.

Then follows on August 5, 1915, another $500,000; another on August 6, 1915; another on September 1, 1915; another on September 2, 1915; another on September 3, 1915; then on September 21, 1915; also September 22, 1915; September 23, 1915; September 24, 1915; and another one on September 25, 1915, each for $500,000; eleven, making, in all, $5,500,000.

Now, mind you, this was certified to as due to a deficit in the postal revenues for that fiscal year.

Mr. KNUTSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEENERSON. I will.

Mr. KNUTSON. Was it claimed by the Democratic Party that the postal receipts showed a gain for that year?

Mr. STEENERSON. Certainly. They claimed they had earned a surplus. This money was drawn out on the certificate that there was a deficit in the postal receipts; otherwise the law would not have enabled them to take the money out of the Treasury. Not a single dollar of that has ever been paid back as a repayment of money borrowed. Not a single penny has been returned as a repayment. But what happened? After the fiscal year had expired 51 days, on the 26th day of August, when the campaign was getting pretty hot in 1916, $5,200,000 was deposited in the Treasury. How? As an alleged surplus! It was $300,000 less than the money that had been drawn out as deficits. Yet this so-called surplus was extensively advertised as an evidence of how profitable to the people the Postal Service was under the able management of Burleson. I think the law that permits such things ought to be changed. It is difficult to escape the conclusion that the business was so managed as to show a surplus when there was none. It looks as if the one who managed the matter said to himself, "If I wait and delay paying my debts until after the end of the fiscal year I will have a surplus." Actually $13,000,000 was postponed to 1917, as now appears. That is the way the surplus was created, a surplus that has no basis at all so far as the true financial status of the postal receipts is concerned.

The relation of the Postal Service to the Treasury at the close of the fiscal year of 1916, so far as that fiscal year was concerned, was this: The Treasury had never received a cent, but had paid out upon a deficit, certified by the Postmaster General, $5,500,000. On August 21, 1916, after the fiscal year 1916 had expired—51 days after—they paid in $5,200,000 and called it a "surplus," not a repayment. Now, this is a distinction quite important, because I have examined the past reports of the Auditor for the Post Office Department, who is a Treasury official, and of the Postmaster General, and I find that uniformly when money is drawn out as a deficit, as soon as the revenues of the department enable them to do so they pay it back as a repayment, but to this day that has never been done, thus leaving the Treasury, after crediting them with that surplus, behind to the extent of $300,000 that year.

Now, you will see in the RECORD that this Treasury statement, dated January 31, 1917, shows that there is not a dollar gained by the Treasury since the fiscal year of 1912, and that there is actually more money due the Treasury now than there was then. Now as to 1917. In 1917 they say they had a surplus of $9,000,000, which was paid into the Treasury. It was not paid till after the fiscal year had expired—on October 26 last.

The annual report this year is the first instance that can be found where the amount carried over to the second year, as this was from 1915 to 1917, is so large. Nearly all bills are usually paid within a year, so only few odds and ends remain longer. In this case more than $3,000,000 was held back from 1915 to 1917. From this it follows that the Postal Service from 1912 up to 1917 has not been run at a profit, but at a dead loss. Whether 1917 was profitable can only be told when we know how much we owe on account of that year. Perhaps in a year we can tell, but not now. It is very important that the people shall know the truth. The official reports ought to be plain and reliable. In these times, when the people are taxed to the amount of billions, they should know what is done with their money.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield for a question there?

Mr. STEENERSON. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Is the same system of bookkeeping observed now as before the year 1912?

Mr. STEENERSON. Exactly the same.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. And did the same discrepancies occur previous to 1912?

Mr. STEENERSON. Never before 1912 were there so many unpaid bills carried over to the next fiscal year. And that is the key to the whole situation. When you do not pay your bills until the next fiscal year your receipts exceed your payments. And that was the point which Mr. Burleson emphasized when he came into office. The first word he uttered in his official report was to the effect that that was a defective system. He criticized Mr. Hitchcock because that gentleman had showed a surplus of $218,000 in 1911, and he said that he did that because the unpaid bills were delayed beyond the fiscal year. And he went so far as to make an estimate of what they ought to have paid.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. And still he pursued the same system he criticized?

Mr. STEENERSON. Why, he went Mr. Hitchcock a point or two better.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Worse.

Mr. STEENERSON. Better or worse. He certainly outdid him, because the thing he criticized in Hitchcock he has repeated from the first. Hitchcock postponed the payment of $8,000,000 to the next year, whereas Mr. Burleson says he postponed $13,000,000 last year.

Now, the Government does not actually lose anything by the postponement of the payment of these bills, but you deceive the people as to whether the Postal Service is self-sustaining or not self-sustaining. That is all there is to it. The Treasury books show. For instance, you have the auditor's financial statement, and it shows how much the Postal Service is indebted to the Treasury. That has been adjusted some years back. It does not start from the beginning, but in 1912 they said that the Postal Service was indebted to the Treasury $7,000,000. That was the end of the fiscal year when Mr. Burleson took hold; that is, the end of the fiscal year 1912 and the beginning of the fiscal year 1913, for which he claims credit. I might say right here, in parentheses, that he does not deserve credit for 1913, in which there was a surplus of $3,800,000, because 8 months and 4 days of it was under Mr. Taft's administration, and only 3 months and 26 days of that fiscal year was in Mr. Wilson's administration.

Mr. Burleson claims credit for that $3,800,000 surplus that was paid into the Treasury that year, while he was in there only 3 months and 26 days. At the end of the fiscal year which preceded 1913 there was $7,000,000 due the United States Treasury, according to the auditor's financial statement. On June 30, 1913, the day before the beginning of the fiscal year 1914, there was $12,922,000; in 1914 there was $13,498,000; in 1915 there was $5,302,000; in 1916 there was $16,631,000; and in 1917 there was $21,267,000.

Now, of course, this is not a safe guide to go by, for this reason—that is, when you are trying to ascertain whether the Postal Service is a profit or loss to the United States Treasury—because whenever the Post Office Department reports a surplus they are charged with it; they are charged with all the receipts they report, and also charged with a surplus, and therefore they get credit whenever they pay anything. Here you see that beginning with the last fiscal year they owed $21,000,000, but if you take the financial statement made after the first quarter it is reduced by $9,000,000, which is the amount paid last October. The current financial statement of the auditor will show that. But there still remains an indebtedness of $12,000,000, which is more than the indebtedness to the Treasury that existed five years ago. From these figures, as I have said repeatedly, it can be nailed down as the truth that the United States Treasury has not been enriched by its connection with the Postal Service during the last five years.

Now, the Postmaster General's report makes some very important recommendations. For instance, the recommendation as to the contract system for rural carriers. That recommendation has been made to the committee, I think, every year since this administration came into power, but it never received any support. Now, it is a rather remarkable thing that a recommendation of this vast importance, after Congress has turned it down, should be repeated. But we find ourselves in this position: The department, with all its influence and power, comes here to ask us to inaugurate a contract system for the Postal Service. I do not want to discuss that proposition, except to say this for the benefit of the people from the cities, that if you propose to substitute a contract system of rural service, the same system should be adopted for the city service. If you want a contract system in the country, you ought to have it in the city also, because the people are just as good people in the country as in the city. A prominent lady—I think she represents the New York State Woman Suffrage Party, Mrs. Harriet B. Laidlaw—sent me a letter advocating increased pay for city carriers. Among other things, she says:

> I think the women have a special interest in the welfare of the letter carriers who come daily to their homes bringing the news of their friends and the outside world. It means considerable to the woman in the home as well as to the woman in business to come in daily contact with men of fine caliber, such as does characterize the personnel of the letter carriers' force at present; and, in view of the tremendous increase in the high cost of living and the great readjustments economically that have had to be made in the last two or three years, I think you will agree that the provisions of this bill for the increase of salaries should be considered.

Now, in addition to what she refers to there as to the desirability of having respectable men, reliable men, come around and call at the houses of the people, I will say that it is also desirable to have good equipment. If you have a contract service it will be very similar to the star-route service. Some of you, perhaps, who have lived on the frontier can remember when the star-route service was the prevailing service, and you would have a worn-out buggy, a spavined horse, or an old mule hitched up to any kind of a vehicle, and the service was irregular and delayed and undependable. It could not be relied upon. Besides that, the carrier was sometimes known to you and sometimes he was a stranger. It seems to me that to substitute a contract service would be unfair to the farmers' wives and daughters and children. The rural carrier has to do more than the city carrier. He has to do more business of various kinds. He has to sell stamps and money orders, to insure packages, and he has to do all these clerical things that the postmaster does in the city. He is really a traveling postmaster, and to have that let out on contract, it seems to me, would entail great hardship upon the people, and it would not be desirable. It would be too risky. We do not want such unknown and irresponsible persons to come around to our houses and deal with our children and wives and daughters. We want reliable men, such as we have now, and I think we ought to provide so that they could render this Rural Delivery Service efficiently by increasing their compensation to a reasonable amount. That, of course, is a matter that comes before this subcommittee of which Chairman MOON spoke.

Now, another recommendation of vast importance that the Postmaster General makes is that the United States Government shall own and operate all the telegraph and telephone lines in the United States—government ownership and operation of the telephone and telegraph lines. It is not very consistent, because his proposition of contract service would be private ownership of rural delivery, while he favors public ownership of the telegraph and telephone. A contract system is more comparable to private ownership than anything I know of, because the Government has no control of the appointment and salary of the people who do the work, so that I think there is a lack of consistency there. But imagine what a field for a skillful politician there would be for an official acting as Postmaster General if you had the telephone and telegraph companies as government-operated institutions. The receipts would be close on to a billion dollars a year; and, mind you, by postponing the payment of the bills for two weeks you would have a surplus of $100,000,000, or, at least, $50,000,000. Under the system I have explained, whereby you determine the surplus by the difference between the receipts and expenditures, all you would have to do would be to refuse to pay your bills for a few days and then you would have apparently a most prosperous institution, and might be able to make the people believe it. [Laughter.]

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEENERSON. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Is it not true that some people in Europe have public ownership of those means and avenues of intelligence?

Mr. STEENERSON. No doubt there are a great many people in Europe who have government-owned telegraphs and telephones; but let me tell you that the American people are ahead of any European people to-day. We are the ones who invented the telegraph and the telephone. You would never have had them invented in God's world if you had left it to the department. They never invent anything. It is the spur of private enterprise that makes people invent.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Is it not true that in those countries where they have public ownership of the telephone and telegraph they perform the service for less than one-half of what they perform it for here?

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman allow one word there?

Mr. STEENERSON. I do not know anything about what they pay, but I doubt it. I know that Mr. Lewis, who used to be a Member of this House——

Mr. MADDEN. They give you less than one-fourth of the value of the service.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. They give what is wanted, and the service is not worse than the service here. It is bad enough here.

Mr. MADDEN. If you want to use it, you must serve notice about eight hours in advance of the time you use it, and even then you can not get it before 8 o'clock in the morning and not after 6 o'clock in the evening.

Mr. STEENERSON. I had a little experience abroad, when I spent about six weeks in England in 1914, and I only tried to use the telephone twice and then I was unsuccessful. I tried it and then gave it up.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Is it not true that it is used more abroad than it is in this country per capita?

Mr. STEENERSON. Well, if the gentleman wants to advocate that, and support the Postmaster General in this proposition, all right. I am not here to argue the proposition.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I am asking for information, simply.

Mr. STEENERSON. Well, in my opinion the service over there is not nearly as good as it is claimed to be. The service I have seen in England was very poor, and, as stated by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], you have to call at certain hours. It is under strict regulation. It is government service, and it is not satisfactory. I would rather pay a little more and have a private institution do my business. However, I am not especially debating the wisdom of that.

But I am calling attention to the fact that the Postmaster General has made a proposition here, and repeated it at every session of Congress, I believe, that the Government shall take over the telephone and telegraph lines. Yet, so far as Congress knows, we are unable to say what the attitude of the President is. How is it that this proposition, of vast importance to the people, has never received the indorsement of the Chief Executive? In olden times when the President sent his message to Congress he dealt with each department and mentioned what he desired Congress to do, but we have no reason to believe that the President has ever indorsed this proposition. It is simply the proposition of a Cabinet officer who never was elected by anybody; who was appointed five years ago and has never been reappointed, so far as I have heard.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEENERSON. Yes.

Mr. COX. I will ask the gentleman, did he approve of Postmaster General Hitchcock's recommendation for Government ownership of telephones and telegraphs?

Mr. STEENERSON. No; I do not think he did.

Mr. COX. I know he did not.

Mr. STEENERSON. He never sent any message to Congress.

Mr. COX. I say, did the gentleman approve of Postmaster General Hitchcock's recommendation for Government ownership of telegraphs and telephones?

Mr. STEENERSON. No; I never approved it, and President Taft never approved it, either. That is where the Post Office Department is traveling outside of its jurisdiction. It ought not to submit its recommendations before they are authorized, so we shall know whom to hold responsible. Shall we go before the American people and say that this administration favors Government ownership of telegraphs and telephones? Shall all the thousands of miles of telephone lines that the farmers themselves own be taken over by the Government? Why, in my country you can go to the telephone, take it off the hook, and listen and hear half the gossip of the county free of charge. Just think what would happen if the Postmaster General was to run all those farmers' telephone lines. You would be cut off unless you paid for it.

Mr. MADDEN. He might find out what the people were thinking about his attitude.

Mr. STEENERSON. I guess he would.

Another important proposition is his recommendation that there ought to be no organization of Government employees. He opposes the organization of Government employees and their coming before Congress, notwithstanding the fact that his party came into power on a plank that pledged that legislation. Under the head of "Civil Service" in the Democratic platform of 1912 this matter was specifically mentioned, and shortly after that the statute was passed through the House and Senate giving them the privilege. So you see he has made a recommendation here contrary to the platform upon which his party gained power. I do not want to say that I am opposed to his attitude, but it strikes me that it should not come from that source.

Another thing on that subject. Have not the American people a right to expect that an administration will be consistent with itself? These are days of efficiency. We like to have unified control. We have noticed lately that there is an attempt to have unified control of the railroads. We read in the papers that there should be unified control of the forces of the allies in the great war, and that the reason why they have not been as successful as they otherwise would have been is because they have lacked unified control.

This administration is sadly lacking in unified control on this subject of organization of Government employees. I have in my office a magazine printed by the new organization, the union of Federal employees. It gives an account of a banquet held at the New Ebbitt House last September. I also have here a clipping from the Washington Post, giving an account of that banquet. Without reading the eloquent speeches which were made I will say that the report shows that the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Newton, was there and made a very strong argument in favor of the organization of Government employees. Mr. Post, Assistant Secretary of Commerce, was there, and, last but not least, the eloquent Mr. Vrooman, Assistant Secretary of Agriculture, was there and strongly advocated the organization of Government employees into this union which Mr. Burleson now criticises. Now the question arises, are not three Assistant Secretaries equal in influence to one Cabinet officer? Here are the Assistant Secretary of Commerce, the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, and the Assistant Secretary of Agriculture, all favoring the organization of Government employees into an association and saying it is a good thing, and wanting to have them affiliate with the American Federation of Labor. Does not that counterbalance the opposition of the Postmaster General? It seems to me that on this point the administration is lacking in unity. Why should the administration permit three Assistant Secretaries of these departments to blazon to the world that Federal employees ought to organize into unions and affiliate with the Federation of Labor, and then have a Cabinet officer denounce it? It seems to me that this administration ought to take an account of their resources and coordinate them, so that they will not be in opposition to one another. They certainly can not carry on business in that way, one pulling in one direction and one pulling in another. We ought to know. For one thing, we ought to know how the President stands when there is such a dispute as that. Does Mr. Burleson speak for the President when he denounces these Federal unions, or is he alone? Can the administration ride two horses going in different directions at the same time? The President spoke recently in Buffalo at the labor convention, and he was apparently in harmony with them, and I was glad to see it, but here a discordant note comes from one of his chief Cabinet officers. I think something ought to be said as to whether he approves or disapproves. Is there not some way by which the House of Representatives can smoke him out? I think when we are considering this bill, before we get through we ought to know whether this recommendation of the Postmaster General has the support of the President of the United States.

I think those are the principal recommendations contained in the Postmaster General's report—the recommendation of legislation against these Federal union employees, the substitution of contract carriers for rural carriers.

Something has been said about the change in the Railway Mail Service. Has it improved or deteriorated? From what the chairman has said here and at the hearings it is clear he is not satisfied with the mail service we are now getting. In examining the department officials before the committee he suggested that letters had been unduly delayed and the service was not satisfactory. The gentleman from Nebraska stated that his experience was that mail had been delayed at least one day between his home and Washington, and from expressions coming from other members of the committee, which are printed in the hearings, it is the universal opinion that the mail service has deteriorated during the last year. The chairman of the committee said that he could not tell whether or not the deterioration was due to a reduction in the number of railway mail clerks and the consequent increase in the amount of separation of mail that occurred in the post office and in the terminals. It must be due to something, because the complaint is universal. As a member of the commission on pneumatic-tube service, I was present at the hearings at New York, Boston, Philadelphia, Chicago, and St. Louis. Especially the New York merchants complained of the mail service—it was not put in the hearings, because it did not relate to the subject under consideration—but they manifested a universal opinion that the mail service had deteriorated. These men use the mail to a very great extent and are good witnesses, and if there should be an investigation I think they would be very ready to come here and show it. But I think the reason for the poor service is not inherent in the space plan. We must not do the space plan that injustice. I think the deterioration in the mail service that we have had during the last year is due to the inordinate desire to reduce expenses. Now, to reduce expenses is a laudable thing, but when you reduce them at the expense of efficiency it is a foolish thing.

Mr. AYRES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEENERSON. I will.

Mr. AYRES. Has not there been delay also in the transportation of freight and express?

Mr. STEENERSON. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. AYRES. Is not that due to lack of transportation facilities?

Mr. STEENERSON. Probably.

Mr. AYRES. Does not the gentleman think that that might be the cause of the delay in the mail service?

Mr. STEENERSON. No.

Mr. AYRES. Does the gentleman think that the delay in the freight and express business is due to the change in the mail system from weight to space system?

Mr. STEENERSON. Very largely. In fact, I do not complain a great deal, for I do not think anybody ought to complain of delay in freight. Freight should not move as expeditiously as first-class mail. The movement of anything expeditiously on fast trains is expensive. It was the hope of Congress when they enacted the space plan that it would enable the department to transport freight, such as parcels, more cheaply by grouping the parcels when they had a sufficient quantity to put them into a car—the equivalent of a freight car. Therefore it was hoped that the separation of these parcels would be done in the terminals and delayed until a sufficient load between two large cities like Washington and Chicago and Chicago and St. Paul, and thereby cheapen the expense of carriage.

Our expectations in that regard have been fulfilled. There has been a great economy in loading the freight cars with parcels. But the delay in first-class mail has been due, I think, to the inordinate desire to economize. Now, as I said before, it is a laudable thing to economize, but when you go too far and there is a deterioration in the service, the business world is losing more than it gains.

They have dismissed a large number of postal clerks. That is the complaint of the postal clerks themselves. The chairman of the committee said that in Nashville there had been mail clerks discharged, and it occurred in the period when the transmission of first-class mail was delayed. So we have a right to conclude with fairness that there has been a little too great economy in the Railway Mail Service and that that is the cause of these complaints that are made. I do not think it is due to a change from the weight to the space plan.

I do not know that I care to discuss any of the other features mentioned by the chairman. The clerks pay and all that we will probably bring in in a separate bill, and we will seek to do justice to all postal employees. I want to say, however, that in the increase of pay last year for Government employees the postal clerks were not included. They got some extra promotions, but they have a very good claim for the adjustment of salaries. It seems to me the equities in their favor are a little greater than in other classes of employees, and for that reason I hope that when that measure comes up it will receive the careful consideration of the House and of the Congress. The rural carriers especially have suffered in late years by an increase in the expense of carrying on their work, not only in the cost of living but in the cost of equipment.

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEENERSON. Yes.

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. The distinguished chairman of the committee stated that the service rendered by the rural mail carriers amounted to about 4 hours a day on an average. In my district many of them work 10 or 11 hours a day. How does the gentleman get the average? Is it fair that a man who works 4 hours a day should get as much as a man who works 10 or 12 hours a day?

Mr. STEENERSON. I heard statements made by the Fourth Assistant Postmaster General as to this 4-hour-a-day proposition, but so far as I am concerned it is a myth. I live in a district where the country is rather sparsely settled. It is in the Red River Valley, where the farms are large and the neighbors are far apart. Consequently to get a rural route established you have to cover many miles. The routes in my district will probably average 30 miles, and some of them exceed that. I am sure that the carriers on those routes never can perform their duties in 4 hours. I have never known it to happen.

It may be that in a State like California, where there is a balmy summer climate the year around, where they have macadamized roads as good as asphalt pavement, they can travel 24 miles and deliver the letters, papers, and parcels in four hours. Possibly it may be done in certain districts.

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. It can not in my district. Some of the routes cover 30 miles.

Mr. STEENERSON. The gentleman's district is similar to mine. I do not know of any way of discriminating so as to adjust the salaries of those who work so few hours.

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. Has the gentleman ever considered a mileage system? Would that be practicable?

Mr. STEENERSON. Any system I think would be practicable, but I do not see how you could do it under the plan of having Government employees for carriers, because you pay them by the year and not by the mile. Although it has some relation to the length of the route, yet it is not based on mileage.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEENERSON. Yes.

Mr. TOWNER. Regarding the four-hours-a-day-service on rural routes, in most of the Middle West, in the Mississippi Valley, the conditions are such that in most instances during the summer time and perhaps eight months of the year it will be possible perhaps to attain an average of 4 hours a day in the completion of the service, but the difficulty is that during the four months of the winter, when it is impossible most of the time to run an automobile, carriers have to maintain a horse service, which of course is an additional expense of large amount to them, and under those circumstances it is impossible during those months to make anything like 8 hours a day; in many instances, during bad weather, they take 12 and even 14 hours a day to cover the route.

Mr. STEENERSON. The gentleman's statement corresponds somewhat with the conditions familiar to me, except that I do not think there is any region in my State where they can perform the service in four hours. It seems to me that that is an exaggeration.

Mr. Chairman, with reference to the appropriation bill which we are about to take up. I join with the chairman in saying that there is no dispute about these items. They are items that are authorized by existing law and based upon the estimates by the department, as revised by the committee. We have no disputes about them.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEENERSON. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman inform the committee the reason why the committee did not support the recommendations of the department, so far as providing additional wages in the supervisory officials' force?

Mr. STEENERSON. Because the Madden bill, I think, would cover that. We are not considering legislation in this bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. The committee, then, purposely declined to follow the recommendations of the department providing for increases of salary in the supervisory officials' force, because they contemplate considering that in separate legislation, to be reported later?

Mr. STEENERSON. If the gentleman wants to put it in that way, I think that is correct. I would not want to say that the committee did it with malice aforethought.

Mr. STAFFORD. Of course, the recommendations of the committee here merely provide the same places as are carried in existing law?

Mr. STEENERSON. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. It has not permitted any promotions whatsoever in that force?

Mr. STEENERSON. No; but there is a bill, referred to a subcommittee, that will cover all employees in the first and second class post offices.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEENERSON. Yes.

Mr. FESS. I notice an item in the bill of over $1,000,000 for the transportation of mail by boat and aeroplane service. Is there any well-defined plan of aeroplane transportation now in the minds of the committee?

Mr. STEENERSON. The committee did not examine the department officials at length upon the aeroplane item. They have stated, however, that there is some aeroplane service and that they were very anxious to have this appropriation.

Mr. FESS. That is a pretty large appropriation, and it indicates that there is something specific in mind.

Mr. STEENERSON. It will undoubtedly be explained more at length when we reach that item in the bill. I have not reviewed the hearings upon that point and I can not give any details.

Mr. FESS. Would the gentleman please state the source of so much outlay for the censorship of foreign mails? Over a million dollars is allowed.

Mr. STEENERSON. The censorship of foreign mails was discussed by one of the officials or clerks in the department who had charge of that matter, I think from the Second Assistant's office. As a matter of fact, this provides only for a very limited censorship, because the censorship of all mail to Europe is conducted by the allies. This only relates to mail to Canada and the west coast, the Pacific, and to Mexico, and to countries of this continent.

Mr. FESS. Is mail censored that goes to Canada?

Mr. STEENERSON. It is proposed to censor all mails that go out.

Mr. BLACK. If the gentleman from Minnesota will permit, I think he is in error about that statement. It was stated to us that this item for censorship of the mails was for censorship to Latin-American countries, Mexico, and, I think, Spain. In other words, those neutral nations whose mail is not now being censored by our allies.

Mr. STEENERSON. I thank the gentleman for the correction, if that is correct. I thought they included also the mail to Asia.

Mr. BLACK. No.

Mr. STEENERSON. I think the intention is to censor all mail that goes out except that censored by our allies.

Mr. BLACK. That is probably so.

Mr. FESS. The amount of a million dollars would seem to involve a tremendous amount of clerical work?

Mr. STEENERSON. I presume the amount used by the allies in censoring mail coming over to this country is many times that amount.

Mr. AYRES. I think the gentleman from Ohio is mistaken about the million dollars being appropriated for aeroplanes. The gentleman spoke of a million dollars.

Mr. FESS. I am now speaking about the censoring of mail.

Mr. AYRES. But a moment or so ago the gentleman said there was an appropriation of over a million for aeroplane service.

Mr. FESS. I said over a million dollars for transportation by boats and aeroplanes, and asked the question whether there is any definite plan for the transportation of mail by aeroplane.

Mr. COX. If the gentleman will permit, I just want to make this suggestion.

Mr. STEENERSON. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. COX. Not by way of correction of the gentleman, but the amount England is paying for censoring the mails—we did not want to go into our records down here, and I was wondering if the gentleman did not think it had better be stricken out here?

Mr. STEENERSON. I will say in answer to the gentleman from Ohio that the committee carefully considered the question whether the amount was excessive or not, and they concluded from the statements it was absolutely necessary in order to have the work done, and I think they also stated to us that the clerks were paid——

Mr. BLACK. About $1,500 a year.

Mr. STEENERSON. That their highest-paid clerk was $1,600, so that there were not any high salaries; but they have to get translators who can translate these letters.

Mr. FESS. My colleague will understand what inspired the question. We are dealing with millions so flippantly that it seems to me we ought to make sure whether it is needed or not.

Mr. STEENERSON. Certainly; but we are giving what is asked for on account of the safety of the country. As a matter of war, of course, we can not scrutinize so closely. Now, there is one matter that was mentioned by the chairman in his speech here that I had almost forgotten, and that was with relation to the increase in letter postage and second-class mail rates. I want to say that the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads was not responsible for that increase.

I want to say further that it is the first time in the history of the United States that the Postal Service has been used for the purpose of raising revenues for the Government. The intention was perhaps to furnish the service, and if the Postal Service should be self-sustaining and then we could make some money, we could spend it in improving the service and managing it along those lines so as to improve the condition of the service and the laboring men in the service, so as to have it balance. Even in the darkest days of the Civil War, in 1863, the postage was reduced from 5 to 3 cents on letters, and it was a good thing because business increased and was more profitable than it was at the old rate. When postage was decreased to 2 cents in 1883 or 1884 the same result followed, that after a few months business increased and it resulted in really an increased revenue. I am afraid that the increase on post cards especially to 2 cents and the increase to 3 cents on letter mail will have a tendency to decrease business and that we will not have the revenue from it that was anticipated. Of course we will get some. Canada has reported that they have gained 40 per cent; that is, that instead of gaining 50 per cent they gained 40 per cent. They raised the rates 50 per cent, but instead of getting the 50 per cent increase of revenue they only got 40 per cent. I do not think we will be able to show as well as that, and that it will have a tendency to hamper business. I believe that it would have been wiser for the Committee on Ways and Means and Congress if they had provided some other way of raising the revenue except from this increase on first-class mail and postage rates.

Mr. CRISP. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. STEENERSON. Yes.

Mr. CRISP. Did the committee make any inquiry of the post-office officials as to whether or not there has been any falling off of receipts from the postal rates since this increase went into effect?

Mr. STEENERSON. No; but the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON] said in his remarks a moment ago that it would be impossible to determine whether there was any difference.

Mr. CRISP. While I was at home going around somewhat over my district, in two post offices I had the day book of the post offices as to the receipts for 30 days in each office before the increase went into effect and for 30 days after the increase went into effect, and the sales and receipts were very much larger with the increase, and they raised fully as much money in those two offices as was expected.

Mr. STEENERSON. The increase amounted to 50 per cent?

Mr. CRISP. Fully 50 per cent.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the gentleman will yield, I would like to ask the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] a question. Can the gentleman inform the committee whether he has any information as to whether there is a corresponding use of postal cards? It has been claimed that the drop mail of our cities remaining at the low rate of 2 cents for not more than an ounce and the rate on postal cards at 2 cents, it has resulted materially in curtailing the use of postal cards.

Mr. CRISP. I have not any data on that question. I simply saw the day book showing the receipts from the sale of stamps.

Mr. STEENERSON. The gentleman is aware of the fact that the increase did not go into effect until the 1st of November?

Mr. CRISP. Yes, sir. This was a few days before I left home.

Mr. STEENERSON. I thought the gentleman said two months.

Mr. CRISP. If the gentleman will permit me, we were away from here only two months. Congress adjourned on the 6th of last October.

Mr. STEENERSON. I would like to say this, that what I referred to and what I had in mind in regard to decrease or increase in the volume of first-class mail had reference to business principally. Now, of course we know that personal letters would not be affected to any great extent, and in view of the fact that so many soldiers have been called away from their homes, nearly a million, and perhaps more, of course it has increased the correspondence of a personal nature, and that should not be considered when we are talking about it as a business proposition. My idea is that the 3-cent rate on letters will have a tendency to decrease business mail.

Mr. AYRES. If the gentleman will yield, has he heard anything about the increased postage on first-class mail from any individual?

Mr. STEENERSON. I have not heard anything so far as that is concerned, except this, that I have received letters that evidently are due to a propaganda, where they say we ought not to reduce second-class mail rates, because they are paying such an enormous rate on first-class mail.

Mr. AYRES. If my colleague will yield further, that comes from magazine people and periodicals?

Mr. STEENERSON. It is an inspired propaganda.

Mr. AYRES. But not from the individuals that use the first-class postage?

Mr. STEENERSON. It comes from people who use first-class postage.

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. On page 11 of the bill there is a line which says "unusual conditions at post offices, $150,000." How do you interpret the word "unusual"?

Mr. STEENERSON. If there was a cantonment in the neighborhood of the gentleman's post office it would be an unusual condition, and there are several other unusual conditions that are covered by that provision.

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. It is difficult to understand the meaning of it. It may be very broad and it may be very narrow.

Mr. STEENERSON. It is intended to cover extraordinary increases.

Mr. KINKAID. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEENERSON. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. KINKAID. Does the bill propose any change in the compensation of fourth-class postmasters?

Mr. STEENERSON. No. There are no changes to speak of in this appropriation bill. There is a bill, or, at least, a proposition from the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BELL], which will be considered by the subcommittee on legislation of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. KINKAID. Is that a proposition to increase the compensation of fourth-class postmasters?

Mr. STEENERSON. I do not think there is any proposition to decrease it. Of course, it is so small now there would not be anything left if you decreased it.

Mr. KINKAID. There are a great many in Nebraska who think that on account of the inadequacy of the compensation of fourth-class postmasters it ought to be increased.

Mr. STEENERSON. I am satisfied the gentleman is not alone in that position.

Mr. KINKAID. I think a large majority of the people are in favor of its being materially increased, and I think it ought to be.

Mr. STEENERSON. Of course, there is a question of whether or not we ought to increase salaries now during the war when we need the money for other purposes, and we will proceed with caution in that regard.

Mr. KINKAID. Will the gentleman pardon another question?

Mr. STEENERSON. I will.

Mr. KINKAID. This bill does not propose any reduction as to second-class rates?

Mr. STEENERSON. No. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time. [Applause.] Mr. Chairman, how much time did I occupy?

The CHAIRMAN. One hour and thirty minutes.

Mr. STEENERSON. How much time did the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON] occupy?

The CHAIRMAN. One hour and ten minutes.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT].

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I desire to apologize to the gentlemen here present for discussing, even briefly, a matter not related to the bill that is before the committee. But there is a subject concerning which there has been considerable public discussion and concerning which I think in justice to the House, and to the public as well, some few words may very well be said. It was not surprising at all that in the passing of a revenue law covering so extensive an area as that covered by the act of October 3, 1917, there should creep into it here and there some minor errors which would require subsequent correction. And we need not be surprised that some of the administrative features of the law may need some legislation in order to clarify them for their future usefulness.

But the particular thing of which I wish to speak is that concerning which I presume all the Members have heard, and that is the so-called exemption of the salaries of Members of Congress from taxation. There has been, unfortunately, a very considerable misunderstanding about it, and the impression prevails among some people that the Representatives and the Senators exempted their own salaries from all taxes.

This impression ought to be corrected and the exact facts ought to be laid before the country. It involves—I will not say a question of ethics, because I think that is too strong a word—but it involves a question of good taste. As a matter of fact, the salaries of Representatives and Senators and other Government officials, except those concerning whose salaries it is provided in the Constitution that they shall not be diminished during the time for which they were elected or appointed, are taxed under the normal tax just as the income of all other people. In other words, if the $7,500 received as salary by Senators and Representatives were all net income there would be paid upon it, if I have the figures correctly, 2 per cent on the net income above $2,000, and 2 per cent additional on the net income over $4,000; or if, as I said, the entire $7,500 was net income, then the actual amount paid on such salary would be $180 per annum.

Mr. CRISP. The gentleman is in error. It is higher than that. A single man with no other income except his salary as Congressman would pay $245, and a married man $205.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. That would be in a case where the entire $7,500 was exempt?

Mr. CRISP. No. If a Member of Congress has no income except his salary, if he is a single man, he is entitled now to $1,000 exemption, or if a married man he is entitled to $2,000 exemption. But if under the law he has no other income, a single man would pay $245 and a married man $205.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. I have the figures here on the different incomes. May I supply them to the gentleman?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. A married man would not pay anything on $2,000, and a single man would not pay anything on $1,000. A married man on $3,000 would pay $20, and on $4,000 he would pay $40. On $5,000 he would pay $80, and on $7,500 he would pay $205, whereas a single man would pay $245.

Mr. GORDON. That is true of Congressmen as well as others?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. That applies to Representatives and Senators as well as all other people. I wish to thank the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] and also the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] for the correct figures. I see I made a miscalculation.

Mr. MADDEN. It is only 8 per cent on all above $6,000, and the extreme tax does not apply to them at all. But it does apply to Members of Congress who have incomes of $7,500, or over $5,000.

Mr. KINKAID. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. KINKAID. I was unaware of the exemption of Congressmen's salaries from the income-tax imposition until I reached Nebraska after the adjournment of the session, and at first I contradicted the statement that such was the case. Then afterwards I stated that it was by oversight that it occurred. Now, I want to know how that is. [Laughter.]

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I will state to the gentleman from Nebraska that I can not give him the information. I will state very frankly that, so far as I am personally concerned, I was not aware of the fact at the time we voted on the conference report that the language which is capable of the construction that has been given to it was contained in the report, but I desire to say with equal candor that even if I had known it I should of course have voted for the conference report, as we all would, because the parliamentary situation being such as it was we could not have afforded to have voted down the conference report as a whole simply because of this relatively unimportant matter. This is not a matter which, so far as the revenues to the Government are concerned, is of any great degree of importance, but the question, gentlemen of the House, in it is, as I have expressed it, a question of good taste.

Section 209 of the act provides as follows:

That in case of a trade or business having no invested capital or not more than a nominal capital there shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid, in addition to the taxes under existing law and under this act, in lieu of the tax imposed by section 201, a tax equivalent to 8 per cent of the net income of such trade or business in excess of the following deductions: In the case of a domestic corporation, $3,000, and in the case of a domestic partnership or a citizen or resident of the United States, $6,000; in the case of all other trades or business, no deduction.

Now that standing alone, without anything more, would place a tax of 8 per cent upon $1,500 of the salary of the Representatives and Senators. But in paragraph (a) of section 201 appears this language; and first let me read—this title shall apply to all trades or businesses of whatever description, whether continuously carried on or not, except—

(a) In the case of officers and employees under the United States, or any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, or any legal subdivision thereof, the compensation or fees received by them as such officers or employees.

Now, answering further the question of the gentleman from Nebraska, I will say that I really have an idea that the conferees upon this bill who framed this language—it was not in the bill as it passed the House originally, and, as I remember it, it was not in the bill as it passed the Senate—this language was prepared by the conferees, and I really have supposed that what they had in mind was to prevent any question of the constitutionality of the act arising by making it clear that those concerning whose salaries the Constitution provides they shall not be diminished during the term for which they are elected or appointed would not come under the provisions of the law, and that they used the language read, which possibly covers other classes of officers and employees.

Mr. TOWNER. If the gentleman will permit——

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I yield to the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. MOON. I yield five minutes more to my colleague.

Mr. TOWNER. Let me call the gentleman's attention to this fact, that he is entirely correct in saying that section 209 did not appear in the bill as it passed the House and Senate and that it was placed in the bill by the conferees, and that when the exemption statute was enacted the excess-profits tax only applied to profits arising under a condition where men engaged in trade and business must have capital invested in that business, and the amount of the tax was computed on the relationship or proportion of the amount collected in the taxable year compared with the prewar period, and the question of capital was taken into consideration in determining the amount of these profits, so that it was utterly impossible to have the salaries of anybody computed upon the terms and conditions contained in the excess-profits tax act as passed by the House and Senate.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I think that is a very timely and proper statement to go into the RECORD and to go to the country. This matter has occasioned criticism, some of it rather caustic and severe; but such as fell under my immediate observation has been upon the whole very good-tempered and pleasant. I think, gentlemen of the House, that the criticism is just. That is to say, if this thing had been done deliberately I think the criticism would be just. I want to say that I do not enthuse over any proposition to decrease the salaries of Representatives and Senators, either directly or indirectly. I never had any particular enthusiasm over the matter of reducing mileage. I do not think the people of the United States care anything about that. I do not think they ask us to break the contract which we have, under which we are working for a certain compensation for a fixed time; but this proposition is quite different from any question of our salaries or our mileage or our clerk hire. It is a question of taxation. This Congress has already been called upon to reach out for new sources of revenue, and in the days that are to come it will be called upon to reach out for other and larger sources, and while the amount that will arise from this particular tax on Members' salaries is relatively small and of practically no consequence in so far as revenue is really concerned, yet it seems to me the good taste of the proposition does demand that the Congress should take speedy action to remedy that error which was thus inadvertently made and place the Members of Congress upon the same plane as other people.

Mr. TOWNER. I want to say to the gentleman that I shall this afternoon present for the consideration of the House an argument that under conditions as they now exist the salaries of Congressmen are not exempt from the operation of section 209.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I have taken it for granted that the construction generally given was the proper construction. But however that may be, I think it should be placed beyond all doubt.

Now, my colleague, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HULL], has introduced a bill which I have examined, and I think a number of other gentlemen have introduced bills to reach this very thing, and I for one will be very glad if the Ways and Means Committee will take speedy action upon it.

Mr. CRISP. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia, a member of the Ways and Means Committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. MOON. I yield to the gentleman three minutes more.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Chairman, as a member of the Ways and Means Committee I simply desire to state that I have talked to a number of the members of that committee, and I think we all feel alike that the House ought to be given an opportunity to correct the matter to which the gentleman calls attention. I want to say further that a number of us felt that the bill ought to be brought in at once, before Christmas, but the Treasury Department is construing the bill, and there are a number of corrections to be made in the administrative features of the law. The chairman of the Ways and Means Committee and some of us felt that the thing to do was to wait until the Treasury Department made its recommendation as to amendments to be made in the law, and then the committee would report a bill to the House correcting the matter the gentleman refers to, along with the other corrections to be made, all being brought in at one time in one bill. It will be impossible to do all that before Christmas. But I think I can assure the gentleman and the House and the country that the Ways and Means Committee will bring in a bill making the salaries of Members subject to the excess-profits tax.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, of course I do not think the time when it is done is especially important, but I think it rather important for the psychological effect upon the country that it be very well understood that it is to be done. I think the gentleman from Georgia agrees with me that it ought to be done just as a matter of good taste.

Mr. CRISP. I do.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I should like to ask whether the salary of a Member of Congress is not subject to the same income tax as the income of any other person?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. It is subject to the same normal income tax as the income of anyone else.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. And the law only exempts a Member of Congress from the excess-profits tax?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. On the excess above $6,000.

Mr. STEENERSON. Has the gentleman read the letter appearing in to-day's RECORD, written by Hon. WILLIAM R. GREEN of Iowa, in which he comes to the conclusion that Congressmen are not officers within the meaning of this clause?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I have not.

Mr. STEENERSON. He concludes that they are not exempted and that they are liable for the surtax just the same as anyone else.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I have not read it; but it is a matter about which there ought to be no question at all. We can correct it very easily here and put it beyond all doubt, and the Treasury Department ought not to be called upon to rule upon it, but we ought to act upon it ourselves.

Mr. MOON. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. WATKINS].

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Chairman, during the few minutes allotted to me I shall call attention to the fact that while the bill which we now have under consideration is wisely and economically drawn, there is one feature of it which I think ought to be amended. That is the compensation for rural free-delivery carriers. Recently I attended a convention of rural free-delivery carriers, and to my surprise I found that a large number of them—if not a majority of them—are working at an absolute loss; or if not at a loss in the expenses which they incur, at least to loss in the compensation which they receive for the time consumed.

In every other vocation wages have increased. We are talking now about a special committee sitting for the purpose of considering the question of increases along other lines. The increase of the rural free-delivery carriers' salaries should certainly be included in that investigation. During the presentation of their expense account at the convention to which I have referred, it was shown that when the salary was $720 a few years ago, the price of feedstuffs—corn, oats, chops, hay, and other commodities—were one-quarter and sometimes one-third of what they are at the present time. Corn at that time was 50 cents a bushel, and now in that same section of the country it is $1.50 or $2 a bushel. Oats were 40 cents and are now selling at 85 cents. Chops in the same proportion and hay in the same proportion. The upkeep of horses for those who use the horse-drawn vehicles is three or four times what it was when the compensation was $720, the compensation now being on the standard routes $1,200 a year. The vehicle and the repairs upon it cost nearly if not twice as much, and all other expenses have doubled or trebled during that time. For those who use motor vehicles the cost of gasoline was 12½ cents, and it is now 25 cents. The time which they now take in making their trips is worth to them at least 75 or 100 per cent more than it was at that time. Carpenters were then receiving $2.50 a day and are now getting $5 or $6 a day. It is the same way with the blacksmiths and the same way with the common laborers. In that section of the country the common laborer got 50 to 75 cents a day, and he now gets $2 or $2.50 a day. The time of these carriers is worth more. The rural free-delivery carrier has to stand a civil-service examination. In other words, he is a high-class man. His service should be, on account of his education necessary as a prerequisite, more adequately compensated for.

Speaking of education, I was reading a short time ago about a negro who was standing an examination for the position of rural free-delivery carrier. The question was written for him to answer, "What is the distance between the earth and the moon?" His answer was, "If you are going to put me on that route, I quit right now." [Laughter.]

A great many of these rural free delivery carriers are quitting right now. A great many are refusing to do the work on account of the compensation received. Every day I receive communications from rural free delivery carriers saying that it will be absolutely necessary for them to quit work unless the compensation is increased. There are several who have submitted resignations, and there are vacancies now existing on account of the resignation of these carriers because of the high cost of living and inability to pay expenses out of the compensation that they are receiving.

The Rural Free Delivery Service is one of the greatest boons to the agricultural community that they receive at the hands of the Government. It is not supposed to be put on a paying basis any more than the advantages which they receive out of the Agricultural Department.

Only a few years ago in my section of the country the ravages by the boll weevil were enormous, and appropriations were made for the purpose of exterminating the boll weevil. Hundreds of thousands of dollars were appropriated for that purpose. That section of the country was devoted almost exclusively to the raising of cotton. The people have resorted to diversification because the boll weevil at that time was considered as a pest and a terror. Now the country is blossoming like a rose—never was so prosperous in our section of the country before—partly on account of the diversification of crops and partly on account of the high price of agricultural products. We find the Rural Free Delivery System has expanded in many ways. Not only in the number of routes but in the increased facilities for the patrons. It has caused the upbuilding of good roads. It has caused the extension of rural telephones and putting the people in the rural community in touch with each other to the betterment of churches and schools, and in many ways has been a blessing to the country. If there is any part of the Government service to which we should look for bettering the conditions of the rural sections and for which adequate compensation for its employees should be provided, in my opinion it is the Rural Free Delivery Service.

In referring a while ago to the fact that a special subcommittee is making an examination into the compensation of others engaged in the Postal Service, I did not desire or intend to reflect or criticize the increase of salaries of letter carriers in the cities. The cost of living has largely increased so that they can not live on the same amount they did in previous years. We are not complaining of that at all, and not making a comparison for the purpose of objecting to it or intimating that there is any criticism on that account. But the agricultural class of people are entitled to every consideration.

Mr. MOON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WATKINS. I will.

Mr. MOON. The same committee that is making the inquiry into the increase of city carriers' compensation and post-office clerks is making a like inquiry as to the pay of rural free delivery carriers.

Mr. WATKINS. I am glad to be informed of that fact, and I hope it will result in some substantial increase in the compensation of the rural free delivery carriers. They carried the mail before the Parcel Post System was adopted, and they are now encumbered with a vast amount of heavy mail which they did not carry before that. Their labor has been increased and the salary ought to be increased in proportion.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLY].

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, it is a timely thought which has just been expressed by the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. WATKINS]. The postal employees are facing an impossible task—that of trying to make their 1907 compensation meet a 1917 condition. It can not be done and I feel assured that Congress will recognize the facts and relieve an intolerable situation.

There are no more efficient and faithful and hard-working employees in any line of Government service than those who carry on the vast postal system. They have performed a miracle of progress in building up the American Postal Service, which is the greatest in the world. But in spite of their work along splendidly constructive lines they are receiving less compensation than ever before.

I make that statement advisedly. Wages do not consist solely in the number of dollars received. Men do not labor for dollars, for they can not eat them nor wear them. They work for dollars as symbols of exchange which will purchase food, clothing, and shelter. When the wages received at any time will not purchase as many of the necessaries of life as before there has been a reduction of wages.

That has been the case in regard to the postal employees. No one argues for an increase in real wages, but every fair-minded man should earnestly seek to restore their compensation to where it was 10 years ago.

I took occassion last night to study the very thorough and painstaking report on retail prices issued by the Bureau of Labor Statistics. Taking the figures given in that report for 1907, when the compensation of postal employees was fixed by Congress, and comparing them with prices quoted this week in the leading markets of this city, I find that the dollar to-day will purchase less than half what it purchased 10 years ago.

For instance, if a postal employee went to a market in 1907 and spent a dollar for round steak, he received 6.7 pounds. To-day he receives but 2.9 pounds. In 1907 his dollar would buy 5.5 pounds of sirloin steak. To-day it will buy only 2.2 pounds. If he wished rib roast in 1907, he received 6.7 pounds for his dollar, while to-day he takes home 2.9 pounds. Pork chops in 1907 sold at 6.4 pounds for a dollar. To-day they sell 2.2 pounds for the same sum. In 1907 if he ordered bacon he received 4.9 pounds for his dollar, while to-day if he has the audacity to order bacon he gets 2 pounds for his dollar.

If he ordered ham in 1907, he took home 5 pounds for the dollar. To-day he gets 2.5 pounds. Lard in 1907 sold at 7.9 pounds for a dollar. To-day it sells at 2.9 pounds for the same sum. If he decided on a chicken dinner in 1907, he could get 5.7 pounds, but to-day he gets 2.9 pounds for his dollar. Butter in 1907 was 3 pounds for a dollar, but to-day it sells at 1.7 pounds. Milk in 1907 was sold 12.7 quarts for a dollar, but to-day it sells 7 quarts for the dollar.

If the postal employee spent a dollar for flour in 1907, he took home a 24-pound sack, but his dollar to-day will buy only half a sack. If he decided on corn meal, he could get 40 pounds for his dollar then; now he gets 10 pounds. When he bought potatoes in 1907 he took home 3.7 pecks. Now if he orders potatoes he gets 2 pecks. Sugar in 1907 cost him at the rate of 17.2 pounds for a dollar; to-day it costs him at the rate of 10 pounds for the dollar when he can get it at all.

Now, in these articles I have taken those used by the Bureau of Labor Statistics, which classes them as the necessaries of life in the average American family. It is also stated that the cost of food makes up 40 to 45 per cent of the living cost for American families. That means that the postal employee who received $1,200 a year in 1907 spent at least $480 for food. To-day if he desires to maintain the same standard of living, which no one will say was too high then, he must spend $960 in order to attain it. With other absolutely necessary expenses pressing upon him, such as rent, fuel, and clothing, he can not spend anything like that sum for food. The inevitable result is a lowering of the standard of living, and scarcity and privation besides. Such a condition is not just nor right. The employees of this Nation, who are rendering necessary service in faithful and efficient manner, are worthy of a living wage and they are not receiving it.

I am speaking for all branches of the Postal Service—clerks, city carriers, rural carriers, and railway-mail employees. With somewhat different tasks, they all face the same conditions.

Take the city letter carrier. I have been informed that the average letter carrier serves an apprenticeship as a substitute for four years at an average income of $420 a year. With his appointment as regular he receives $800 for the first year and then may be increased with each year to the maximum of $1,200 a year. That means that during his first nine years' service he receives an average income of $742 a year, or about $2 a day. Is there any other highly specialized business in this country requiring nine years' service before such a wage can be earned by those engaging in it?

The clerks, rural carriers, and Railway Mail Service employees make up a magnificent organization of Postal Service. All in all they handle 20,000,000,000 pieces of mail a year, and they do it efficiently and well. They deserve just treatment from this Congress.

And they have been open and fair in their requests for action. Never has there been a more reasonable and creditable campaign for consideration than that made by these employees of a great department of the Government. They have taken the public into their confidence and the public has responded with support. They have held great mass meetings in almost every city in the country, with urgent requests to all to attend. Such a meeting was attended by almost 10,000 people in Pittsburgh and the facts were given clearly and emphatically in an open and frank appeal to the public. There have been no subterranean and secret tactics, no underground influences.

As a result those not connected with the service in any way have petitioned Congress for action. I have received, and doubtless all Members have received, letters and petitions asking for fair and full consideration of the situation of the postal employees. I am confident that the American people desire that present conditions be remedied.

These employees are at the mercy of Congress. They must submit to whatever this body decrees. I maintain that that very situation—this impossibility of using tactics open to other bodies of workers—lays a double responsibility upon those who fix their wages. Surely, it will not be said of Congress that having a tyrant's power over this vast body of employees it used that power like a tyrant in denying a fair and just request.

I believe action should be taken now. This is an emergency situation and delay spells injustice. I introduced on the first day of this session a bill to provide a remedy and to take effect January 1. I regret that the increase necessary was not made in order and incorporated in this measure we are considering—the appropriation bill for the Post Office Department. I believe action should be taken as quickly as possible to make the compensation of all postal employees at least as great as it was 10 years ago. [Applause.]

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I make no contention with the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLY] in reference to the high cost of living or the necessity for prompt action upon the part of Congress, but I can not afford to have him leave the impression that the changes in the law that he suggests properly come upon this bill. This is an appropriation bill, and it is a violation of the rules of the House to add new legislation of this character to it. We have attempted this time to live as nearly as possible up to that rule because of the fact that the legislation to which he refers ought to have very full and complete consideration, separate and apart from the consideration of appropriations. The Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads is giving the suggestion which the gentleman has made and which other gentlemen have made that full consideration that it is entitled to. It is not wise to make haste in matters of this sort. We will pass this appropriation bill and then take up the other measure looking to the increase of the salaries and consider it, I hope, carefully and attentively.

I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COX].

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I made up my mind I would not say anything on this bill at this time, but reserve what I had to say later when the general bill comes in proposing to increase the wages of postal employees; but I can not afford to let some of the things that have been said here to-day go unanswered or unreplied to. My dear friend from the State of Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON] to my mind can never present his side of a Post Office appropriation bill without entering into politics. I do not believe that he is able to see very much good in a Democratic Postmaster General presiding over one of the greatest departments of the Government. At any rate, the gentleman from Minnesota never fails to take a fling or criticism at Mr. Burleson. His criticism of the apparent inconsistency of Mr. Burleson's position for Government ownership of telegraphs and telephones does not strike me very favorably. Now, I do not like to enter into a political discussion here at all. I served on this committee four years while Mr. Hitchcock was Postmaster General, and time and time again on the floor of this House and in the committee room I defended Mr. Hitchcock when your party was criticizing him, because I regarded then, and I regard now, Mr. Hitchcock as a good Postmaster General. I do not think he had the loyal support of his own party to which he was entitled, and I felt that way about it then.

Now, the Republican platform of 1916, on which the gentleman from Minnesota was elected, practically declared for Government ownership of railroads. I presume the gentleman in the State of Minnesota and in his district loyally and patriotically supported that plank in his party's platform, and I am not saying it was right or saying it was wrong; but if that was right Mr. Burleson should not be criticized for standing for Government ownership of telegraphs and telephones. But enough of that.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. For a question.

Mr. MADDEN. Did not the gentleman from Indiana rather overstate the provision of the Republican platform of 1916? Suppose he reads it. I think I helped to write that.

Mr. COX. I am not saying the gentleman did not write a good platform, and I am not saying he made a mistake in his platform, but I do not know that I will take the time to read it——

Mr. MADDEN. I would like for the gentleman to read one sentence.

Mr. COX (reading)—

> The entire transportation system of the country has become essentially national. We therefore favor such action by legislation or, if necessary, through an amendment to the Constitution of the United States as will result in placing it under complete Federal control.

Mr. MADDEN. That meant to give authority to the Federal Government——

Mr. COX. That may mean Federal ownership.

Mr. MADDEN. If the gentleman will yield, it was intended by that language to mean that authority should be granted the Government of the United States to issue the charters under which railroads could operate.

Mr. COX. Well now, here is the thing to which I desire to reply. I think the Postmaster General has been placed in a false light before the country in regard to his position or in regard to his opposition to postal employees organizing themselves into a union and affiliating themselves with other allied bodies. It has gone to the country, and I have read it in the press that the Postmaster General opposes postal employees forming themselves into organizations. Now, gentlemen, that is far from the fact. We ought to get right on these questions, especially while we have it in black and white from the Postmaster General himself as to what he thinks and where he does stand on this question. It is wrong for men or papers or any organization in this country to report the Postmaster General in a false and erroneous light. If you will get the Postmaster General's report and read what he has to say on this subject from page 31 to the middle of the page 35, you will find that the Postmaster General does not oppose postal employees forming organizations. Here is what he says:

> They should be permitted to form organizations for their social and mutual welfare, appear before committees in Congress when requested, and give any information concerning the Postal Service of which they have knowledge.

He says they should be permitted to organize themselves into associations to better their social and moral conditions, to appear before committees of Congress, and there present their wants and their wishes; but he says:

> But the forming of organizations for other purposes, such as interfering with the discipline and administration of the service, the control of the election of persons nominated for public office, or enactment of legislation for their selfish interests and not for the welfare of the public, should cease.

Now, that thought, gentlemen, may not impress you very much, and, while I am not a prophet nor the son of a prophet, mark my words and remember them well, the time is not far distant when you men in this House will be called upon to meet that proposition. Have they organized for the purpose of controlling election? Have they? I say here this afternoon that in the State of Indiana last election civil-service employees of that State had an organization composed of 10,000 voters, as they claimed, designed for the sole and express purpose of defeating certain men for Congress and carrying the State for Mr. Hughes. I am telling what I know of conditions in the State of Indiana. So Mr. Burleson is in favor of these people organizing for the betterment of their social and moral conditions and giving them all the rights and privileges of any person whatever to appear before the committees of Congress and urge their increases of salary and urge a better working condition, but he opposes these employees or these people affiliating with other organizations.

We are not without history on this subject, gentlemen. Oh, no! France permitted its civil-service employees a few years ago to affiliate with labor organizations, and what was the result? France awoke one day and found every wheel of her entire Government at a standstill. Why? Because the postal employees were affiliated with labor unions, and not only that type of industries of France were at a standstill, but all the machinery of France was at a standstill. Before they got the matters finally adjusted it practically took the Army of France to settle it. So let no man pass this thought of Postmaster General Burleson's over lightly.

I think I am within the bounds of the history of the case when I repeat here this evening that I have seen the rural route carriers of the United States drive Members of Congress into doing things that they did not want to do, of seeing rural route carriers in a measure compel Congress to increase their salaries over the protest and objection of the Postmaster General. I recognize that the rural route carrier is a potential factor in politics. Six times a week he sees 100 voters on his route. A kind word from this rural route carrier about this candidate and an ill word about the other to his patrons goes a long way. I have felt the force and effect of them. But they have no terrors for me. When the time comes that 130 rural route carriers in my district can defeat me, I have no business staying here; I am unable to hold my own, and I shall retire to private life and let a stronger man come here to represent my district.

Now, my friend from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON] a moment ago made the statement that the postal facilities had deteriorated in this country because of the inordinate desire on the part of the Post Office Department to economize. Gentlemen, do you not believe that the time is here, Republican and Democrat, knocking at your doors now, when we should all begin to practice some economy? The folks back home have not yet felt the very forceful effect of our war-tax legislation, but they are soon going to feel it.

Now, mark what I tell you. Is it fair to say, gentlemen, that the Postmaster General intentionally has deteriorated this service for the sole purpose of economizing and then criticize him for effecting that economy? Ought he not to be commended for it? And if he was a Republican Postmaster General I would defend him whenever he was able to say he had actually turned into the Treasury of the United States a surplus of millions of dollars. Is it fair to say that the Postal Service has deteriorated for that reason, when war has upset everything, when the transportation systems in the country in a measure have completely broken down and have, more or less, disorganized the transportation of the mails? Why, gentlemen, you know it to be a fact that the passenger trains that haul the mails are to-day sidetracked for the freight trains. They give way to the transportation of troops; they give way to transportation of munitions of war and food supplies. It is due, gentlemen, to the war, that has disorganized the mail facilities of this country. Then is it fair to say that Mr. Burleson has deteriorated the mail service solely for the purpose of making a record for himself? It is unfair. It is an argument, gentlemen, that will come home to you on that side of the Chamber, mark my words, if you carry the next Congress and this war goes on, when you will be called upon to raise the revenue to support the war.

Now, I had thought I would not discuss this question of increase of salaries. I hope you gentlemen, some of you, at any rate, will get the hearings before our committee. The country is led to believe to-day that because of lack of increase of salaries the postal clerks and city letter carriers are quitting by the thousands. What are the cold, stern facts in regard to that, gentlemen? I will ask you to turn to the hearings, on page 13. You can not get away from these hearings, because they are made by the records in the Post Office Department. Bear with me just a moment. I will not burden you very much with a lot of figures here.

In 1910 there were 1,535 postal clerks who resigned. At that time there were 31,825 clerks in the Post Office Department. In 1917 there were 2,020 clerks who resigned, but there were 41,805 clerks in the Post Office Department. In 1910 there were but 5 per cent of the clerks who resigned. In 1917 there were but 5 per cent of the clerks who resigned. So, gentlemen, is the argument that is now being sown broadcast all over the country true that the clerks are resigning by battalions, brigades, and divisions for want of the proper salary? It is not true.

Mr. TOWNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. For a question.

Mr. TOWNER. You spoke about clerks. Does that include carriers?

Mr. COX. I will come to that.

In 1909—and this means city carriers—there resigned 368 letter carriers in cities; but at that time there were 27,620 carriers. In 1917 there were 627 who resigned, but there were 34,592 city carriers. Again, gentlemen, in 1909 there were about 5 per cent of the city letter carriers who resigned. In 1917 there were still only 5 per cent of them resigning. So whence comes this argument that city letter carriers and postal employees, persons in second-class post offices, are resigning by brigades and platoons, because, forsooth, of a lack of high salary? Is that propaganda true? Is it based upon solid facts as disclosed by the Post Office Department? When you get at the facts, gentlemen, you find it is a delusion and a snare. It is something to deceive Congress and force them into an increase of salary.

Mr. TOWNER. Will the gentleman cover the question of rural delivery?

Mr. COX. I have not it here, but I will put it in the RECORD. But the same condition is true there, too.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. I will.

Mr. FESS. The fact that they do not resign is not a conclusive argument in your mind that they are adequately paid, is it?

Mr. COX. Now, I will answer the question. I intended to say I expected it would stand alone on this question; that I did not believe it would have a single man to support it. Now, I am a member of the committee to frame up this legislation. I am in favor of a moderate increase up to a certain amount. [Applause.]

But I am unalterably opposed, and I will never agree to the report on that committee, or one coming from the whole committee, to increase any postal employee where his salary is $1,500 a year or in excess of that amount.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. COX. I will just yield myself five minutes more, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for five minutes more.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for one interruption?

Mr. COX. I will yield for one question.

Mr. FESS. I have repeatedly heard it said that men who do not like the service can resign.

Mr. COX. Yes. I think that is fair. The gentleman's position is the same as mine. The argument has been made here, and will be made, that there has been no increase of salary for the city letter carriers and the clerks in the first and second class post offices. Now, gentlemen, I appeal to you again, before you make that argument, to look at the facts in the case and know what you are talking about before you make that kind of a statement. In 1912 the grade and salary of city letter carriers and of clerks in first and second class post offices was increased from $600 to $800 per year. That is to say, the minimum salary was increased $200 per year.

Mr. JACOWAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. Just for a question.

Mr. JACOWAY. That is what I want to ask. You say you have studied the question?

Mr. COX. No; I have not.

Mr. JACOWAY. What per cent of increase are the rural carriers entitled to?

Mr. COX. If a letter carrier were appointed on June 30, 1912, he would be advanced on July 1, 1913, to $1,200, or on July 1, 1917, at this time, he would be receiving a salary of $1,200 per annum if employed at a first-class office. This is an increase of 100 per cent since 1912. I challenge you to name the private employer, if you please, that has increased the salary of his employees in five years 100 per cent, unless it be in places where they have deliberately held up the Government, as some of the coal miners did in this country and some of the shipbuilders have.

Mr. MADDEN. I do not think I quite understood my colleague. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. I do not think I understand the basis on which he makes the claim that an increase of 100 per cent was made.

Mr. COX. That was under the automatic promotion provided for under the act of 1912.

Mr. MADDEN. That makes 100 per cent increase?

Mr. COX. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. What percentage of the mail clerks and carriers on rural routes received that per cent?

Mr. COX. Eighty-five per cent of the postal clerks and city carriers. Of course, the rural-route carriers are not entitled to any promotion at all!

Now, gentlemen, of all men in the Post Office Department who have a call for an increase of salary at this time, it is the rural route carrier; and I think, with the exception of my friend MOON, of Tennessee, we are the only two men who have stood on the floor and have heretofore opposed an increase in salary to the rural route carriers. Why do I say that? As to the employees working in first and second class post offices and the city letter carriers the only investment they have on earth is a pair of shoes and what little brain power they may require to do their work. That is the only investment they have got, while the rural route carrier can not possibly equip himself to-day with an investment of less than $350 per year, and it takes about the same amount of brain power to fill a rural route carrier's job as it does to deliver the mail in the city or to work in first and second class post offices. I am unable to draw any distinction between the brain-power of the two kinds and classes of employees.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. Yes.

Mr. GORDON. What was the salary of the rural carrier when first appointed, and what is it now?

Mr. COX. At first it was $60 a month, I believe.

Mr. GORDON. In 1897, $300; 1898, $400; 1900, $500; 1902, $600; 1904, $720; 1908; $900; 1912, $1,000; 1913, $1,100; 1915, $1,200.

Mr. COX. Gentlemen, I come from an agricultural country. There are few places in the United States better than my district. I know that those carriers out there are paying $1.50 for green corn now in my district. I know that they are paying $30 a ton for hay in my district. I know that they are paying $25 a ton for clover hay in my district. I know that an ordinary horse that they are required to buy can not be bought for less than $125. I know they can not get along with less than two horses. I know that in many districts in the United States they have got to have three horses, and in many districts they have got to have four. That is, in the winter time. So I repeat that out of all men who are in the Postal Service to-day the rural carrier has the call.

I am in favor of answering your question by saying that all men below $1,200 shall have 15 per cent increase, and all those above that shall have 5 per cent up to a certain amount, say, $1,500 per annum.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I had no intention of saying anything on this bill when we first began to consider it, but I am rather inclined to begin what I have to say now with a query as to whether my friend, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cox], did not make a mistake when he said that the salary of the carriers and clerks had been increased 100 per cent since 1907. When the question was asked him as to what he based it on, I think he replied to me that it was based on the fact that 85 per cent of the men drawing $1,100 a year were increased to $1,200. That would not make an increase of 100 per cent. It would make an increase of $100 to the man who had previously been getting $1,100. That would be about 9 per cent under the automatic promotion.

Mr. COX. I said it was an increase of 100 per cent from 1907 to 1912, resulting from automatic promotion. That is what I intended to say.

Mr. MADDEN. That is to say that a man who originally went into the service at $600 is now getting $1,200, and that would be an increase of 100 per cent. I might just as well begin to state the case on which these facts are based. I have no viewpoint from which I intended to discuss this bill, but I will just commence right there.

To begin with, a man who goes into the Postal Service as a carrier or a clerk in either a first or second class office goes in as a substitute, and the average time he serves as a substitute is four years. During that time he gets no fixed pay. What is he called upon to do for the Government of the United States as a substitute? To report at the post office every morning, and if he lives in a large city that means the payment of car fare, for he may have to travel 4 or 5 miles. Then what does he have to do after he reaches the post office? He sits on a bench and waits until all the regular men are assigned to duty; and if at the end of that period, when all the men regularly employed are assigned to duty, it is found that some man is missing they give the substitute something to do for a part of the day. How do they pay him for what he does? Thirty-five cents an hour.

But he may have to come day after day without getting any employment, and every time he comes and goes he must pay his car fare back and forth; and the record shows that for the period of four years during which he serves as a substitute he earns an average of $35 a month. Now, everybody knows that in these times no man with a family can live on $35 a month in a big city. Most of these men in the Postal Service have families. Well, after this man has served four years, with an average earning power of $35 a month, and has borrowed money from everybody from whom he could borrow money to keep from the poorhouse, he gets a regular appointment. Before 1912 the regular appointment entitled him to the munificent sum of $600 a year. And what did he have to do for $600 a year? He had to report for duty at his post office and be on call for 12 hours a day. During the 12 hours a day he was compelled to work 8 hours. Now, why should he be called for 12 hours if he had to work only 8 hours? Simply because the trains coming in from all sections of the country come in at such irregular times that they had to have the men on call for distribution of the mail no matter when the trains arrive. What else did he have to do for this munificent compensation of $600? He had to take two hours of his own time after he left his work to study in his home and learn a scheme of distribution. What is a scheme of distribution? It is a thing that requires a man to learn anywhere from 3,000 to 10,000 names of post offices, where they are located, and what train reaches them first, and how the mail should be thrown into the distribution boxes in the post office to reach most promptly any one of these 3,000 or 10,000 towns. He has to give this time to the Government of the United States without any compensation after he has given them 12 hours of his time either waiting or at work. When men in other callings are asleep or enjoying some social activity somewhere or reading, this man is throwing this scheme, and he has to commit it to memory. He is required to take an examination every 30 days on the scheme in order to prove that he is qualified for his work. He is required to attain an average of 98 per cent perfect in the throwing of the scheme. That is, he must throw not less than 98 per cent of the letters into the correct distribution case. After he has learned this scheme that may cover half a State and has committed it to memory, he is required to take the whole State and study that.

When he has the whole State committed to memory they give him another State, and he may be changed from the scheme that he has taken years to learn and given work in another State, and he has to forget the scheme that he has taken a year or two to learn and commit a new scheme to memory, and all this in his own time. I submit that that is no sinecure of a job. And everything that he learns as a result of his service to the Government in the post office is not worth a cent to him anywhere else on earth. He becomes proficient, he becomes an expert in the Postal Service, but if he went out onto the street to look for a job in a commercial house, everything that he learned in the post office would be worth nothing whatever to him. So when you say these men do not resign, the answer is that they have learned to be expert in their line of business. They are proficient in the Postal Service. They have become expert in their knowledge of what is to be done there, but their expert knowledge is of no use to them anywhere else on earth, and they have reached a period of life when they are no longer able to take up new lines of endeavor and absorb them as they did when their minds were in an adolescent state. Well, if their record is good, at the end of a year they get promoted automatically to $700. Now, they enter the service at $800, and at the end of a year they get promoted to $900. But what must they do during the year? Do you gentlemen know that 70 per cent of all the men who are employed as clerks in the Post Office Department work at night under artificial light? During the whole period of their post-office service they see their families only once a week. They work while we are asleep. They work under artificial light, amid the dust that has accumulated on the mail bags from every section of the country, and they contract disease, and their eyesight becomes defective. They go home when the sun is shining on a summer day, and are compelled to sleep in a room that is overheated by a tropical sun. And then they are required during most of their sleepless day to take a part of the hours that should be used for sleep to study the new questions involved in the scheme of distribution. Oh, it is no sinecure. Men will say that these postal men are overpaid, but I do not believe it. Then they get at the end of another year, if their record justifies it, an increase from $900 to $1,000. That is in the first-class post offices. At the end of another year, if the record justifies it, they get $1,100, and in second-class post offices they get $1,000 as the maximum. After that it depends altogether on the favor of the postmaster whether they get a promotion from ten hundred to eleven hundred dollars in second-class offices or from eleven hundred to twelve hundred dollars in first-class offices. There is no automatic promotion from $1,000 to $1,100 in the one case and from $1,100 to $1,200 in the other.

Why, the record shows that the cost of living has gone up over 60 per cent since the rate of compensation of these men was fixed. The record of increase in the rents prove that they have gone up anywhere from 10 to 25 per cent. The cost of clothing has been increased so much that no one knows what the percentage of increase has been. Everything they have to buy, even the air they breathe is surcharged with increased cost. You can not buy the light consumed in your house any more without paying for the machinery that forces the light to operate at a quicker rate than it ought to—the meter that is employed to register the amount of light is made to operate faster than it should, and so it goes all along the line. A pair of shoes which you could buy three or four years ago for $3 to-day costs you anywhere from $5 to $6 or $7. If you want to buy a hat to-day, you will pay $5 for one that you bought three years ago for $2.

These men in the Postal Service have to wear clothing; they have to look neat and present a respectable appearance. They call at everybody's home; they must appear as gentlemen, and they ought to be paid in proportion to the responsibility involved in the work they perform for the Government.

The city delivery and the clerical forces are not alone in need of recognition. The railway mail clerks have arduous duties to perform. They have been called upon to do more work within the last year for the compensation they receive than ever before. Men have been laid off here, there, and everywhere and additional work loaded on those who remain. Twelve hundred men in the Railway Mail Service have been dismissed during the last year, in its reorganization, and that has resulted in compelling those who were held to work more hours than ever before. It is a fact that the service to the people of the country is worse to-day than it ever was before, and the Second Assistant Postmaster General pays no attention whatever to the complaints that are filed. I have sent letters received by me to the Second Assistant Postmaster General showing that it has taken five days or more to deliver a letter within a radius of 60 or 75 miles, and no attempt has been made to remedy the situation.

The public is tired of the inefficiency of the Second Assistant Postmaster General's branch of the Post Office Department. [Applause.] I have no complaint to make of any other branch of the service. The Second Assistant Postmaster General has persistently refused to grant any relief, and the business people of the country are compelled to submit to a service so inadequate that they are constantly obliged to appeal to their Representatives in Congress for relief.

I had an interview with a gentleman to-day, in the course of which he told me that a note was inclosed in a letter to him for collection; that it should have been received two days before it was received; and the fact that it was not received when it ought to have been made it one day late for presentation. This note was indorsed. The fact that the note was not presented when it fell due relieved the indorsers. The note amounted to $5,000. The maker of the note was financially irresponsible, and the result was that the payee lost the amount of the note. I submit that cases of that sort ought not to exist. I do not mean to say that the postmaster or the Second Assistant Postmaster General is responsible for all delays in the mail, but I do say that when the Second Assistant Postmaster General refuses to employ clerks to distribute mail along the lines and thus insure prompt delivery along these lines, he is to blame.

What does he do, and why do I complain? Instead of carrying the necessary clerks on trains to distribute the mail in order that it may be promptly delivered, he directs the postmasters along many lines, where railway mail clerks were formerly employed, to put the mail in closed pouches for delivery to its destination. In order to get the closed pouch on the train the postmaster must have it closed 30 minutes before the train departs. And all mail reaching the post office after the pouch is closed must wait 24 hours before being sent forward. Grant that the department saves money by this practice, but it does so at the expense of the public, who pay to maintain the department.

The Railway Mail Service, as at present conducted, is, to say the least, a menace to the successful conduct of the country's business.

I want now to call attention to one more matter. Beginning on page 112 of the hearings of the Post Office Committee and running to page 130 the fact is disclosed that the department had a contract with the Middle West Supply Co., originally of Columbus, Ohio, but now of Dayton, Ohio, and New York, for the manufacture of stamped envelopes. This contract was made July 1, 1915. The aggregate amount of the contract was about $7,000,000. A very short time ago the purchasing agent of the Post Office Department conceived the idea that there ought to be a better class of paper used in the envelopes. The paper that was being used in the envelopes was the same that had been used for more than 10 years. When the contract was let the price at which it was let was 80 cents a thousand. Without any authority of law the department canceled the old contract and made a new one, and instead of paying 80 cents a thousand, which they had been paying under the old contract, they agreed to pay and are paying $1.22 a thousand under the new contract. The difference between $1.22 a thousand and 80 cents a thousand amounts to $1,175,000 on the contract. This committee has not reported that item of $1,175,000 in the bill which is pending because we believe the Post Office Department had no authority to make the contract, and we do not think it is our duty to ratify the contract by reporting an appropriation to pay the difference in the cost. There must be some reason for changing this contract. I do not know what it is, but I understand there are 14 other contracts existing under which people make envelopes for the Government and that in none of the other 14 cases was it thought necessary or advisable to change the terms of the contract.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. BLACK. Is it not true that most of those other 13 or 14 contracts were for manila paper, and the envelopes would be entirely different from the class of envelopes that are furnished the Government under the stamped-envelope contract?

Mr. MADDEN. Perhaps so; I am not sure about that.

Mr. BLACK. I think there has been a much greater advance in the cost of white paper than in manila paper, and I think it is fair to state that.

Mr. MADDEN. I think that is right. Of course, the excuse given for changing the contract was that the price of paper had gone up and that the contractor was losing money, but the contractor had given a bond for $500,000 to the Government for the faithful performance of the contract.

Mr. AYRES. As a matter of fact, the excuse given by the purchasing agent was to the effect that they wanted a better grade of envelopes.

Mr. MADDEN. True; he gave that as one of the excuses. He said he was concerned also about the man's loss, but that he thought the character of paper used in the envelopes under the old contract was not sufficiently good to justify its continued use; that he wanted to improve it. We have been using the same quality of paper for 10 years in time of peace, and the department did not decide that we ought to have a higher grade of paper until we came to a period of war; and while we are urged every moment from every quarter to economize in everything we do, to economize in the compensation we pay to the men who run the department, yet the men who are in control of the management forget their own advice, and whenever they find a man whom they want to favor they change the contract that exists between him and the Government, and to the question why we should unload an additional burden upon the people of $1,175,000 through favoring this contractor, the answer comes from the purchasing agent that it does not cost the Government anything. When we ask him why it does not cost the Government anything he tells us that it is the purpose to charge the consumer of the envelopes the additional cost.

So that we find ourselves with a purchasing agent in the post office canceling a contract which is perfectly valid, which could be enforced, on which there was a bond of $500,000 to indemnify the Government against loss, paying no attention whatever to the obligation of the contractor, paying no attention whatever to the fact that we had a bond upon which we could collect, increasing the income of the contractor by $1,175,000 without any authority of law and then having the presumption to say to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads that it does not cost the Government anything; that they are taxing the people the additional cost. I wonder what the people will think about that. The people are being loaded with every kind of taxation, but what taxation is being placed upon them ought to be placed upon them by law, and it ought to be done in the open. We are here for the purpose of levying taxes and not permitting some purchasing agent in the Post Office Department or any other department to create and levy a tax upon the American people without justification in law.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Is this new contract in force now?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. And the old one has been canceled?

Mr. MADDEN. They say it has not been canceled; that they can go back to the old one under the provisions of the new one, but they do not want to do that; they want to increase the price, because they say they want to raise the standard of the envelope.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I was just wondering in what sort of shape we were really in as a practical proposition.

Mr. MADDEN. Well, the committee has refused to report an appropriation for the excess cost, and I doubt very much, if the House sustains it, whether these contractors will be able to get their money under the new contract.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. They have already, I suppose, made some envelopes?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes, they have; and there is a two-and-a-half-year contract period to run under the new contract.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. How long has the new contract been in existence?

Mr. MADDEN. It has been in existence about six months, I think—six or seven.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Making a three-year contract?

Mr. MADDEN. About a three-year contract. I now yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. BORLAND. I do not undertake to defend this particular contract——

Mr. MADDEN. I do not think the gentleman would.

Mr. BORLAND. I do not know anything about it, but, as I understand, these envelopes are resold to the public.

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. BORLAND. And if the public does not feel they want to buy at the increased price the stamped envelope they can buy the envelopes elsewhere, can they not?

Mr. MADDEN. They can.

Mr. BORLAND. Is not that a perfectly plain business proposition, as far as the public is concerned?

Mr. MADDEN. Does the gentleman think that a purchasing agent employed by the Government of the United States has any right whatever to increase the price of envelopes, when we have a contract already in existence, just because he can impose an additional burden upon the people who have to buy the envelopes?

Mr. BORLAND. What I am getting at is this: The gentleman used some very intemperate language——

Mr. MADDEN. I did not.

Mr. BORLAND (continuing). About the Post Office Department taxing the people——

Mr. MADDEN. It is taxing them.

Mr. BORLAND. I do not think the gentleman wants to go that far.

Mr. MADDEN. I do.

Mr. BORLAND. The Post Office Department can not tax the people, but simply offers envelopes at a certain price. That is all there is to it.

Mr. MADDEN. If people are obliged to use a commodity——

Mr. BORLAND. But they are not obliged to use a commodity.

Mr. MADDEN. That the Government has to supply——

Mr. BORLAND. The gentleman does not contend the people have to use that commodity?

Mr. MADDEN. I say it is equivalent to taxation.

Mr. BORLAND. I want the gentleman to confine his statements to reason.

Mr. MADDEN. I assume responsibility for what I said.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MADDEN. I would like to ask for five minutes more in order to answer these several gentlemen who are now standing. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I would like to ask the gentleman with just what authority of law does the purchasing agent claim to have been clothed?

Mr. MADDEN. He claims that the provision in the original contract gave them the right to change the character of material if they chose.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I am not familiar with the law under which he is acting. Of course, the law itself does not fix the terms or undertake, I suppose, to say the character of paper——

Mr. MADDEN. The contract fixes the character of the paper.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I say the law itself.

Mr. MADDEN. No; the law does not.

Mr. SNYDER. I would like to ask, from whom would the man buy a stamped envelope if not from the Government?

Mr. MADDEN. I really do not know anyone who makes a stamped envelope except the Government.

Mr. AYRES. Is it not a fact also disclosed on inquiry of the purchasing agent that all of those contracts were let upon competitive bidding?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. AYRES. And that the new contract entered into was not let upon competitive bidding?

Mr. MADDEN. That is true.

Mr. RANDALL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Surely.

Mr. RANDALL. To be entirely fair to the purchasing agent, as a matter of fact, in the original contract was not there a provision authorizing the purchasing agent to change the specifications for envelopes and buy a different grade of paper, therefor necessitating a new contract for that particular purchase?

Mr. MADDEN. I think this. I will answer the question this way.

Mr. RANDALL. That is what it was based on.

Mr. MADDEN. In the first place, the man who had the contract complained he was losing money, and the man who had the contract for postal cards complained he was also losing money. It seems the question of entering into a new contract was submitted to the Comptroller of the Treasury for authority to let the contract. The Comptroller of the Treasury submitted a decision to the effect that inasmuch as the contract for the envelopes had a provision that authorized a change of material——

Mr. AYRES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. AYRES. I think the gentleman is in error there. It was the solicitor and not the comptroller.

Mr. MADDEN. That is right. Inasmuch as the contract for the envelopes had a provision that authorized the change of material they could make a new contract, but while the old contract was let as the result of competitive bidding, the new contract was let without any bids whatever and was based upon the demands of the contractor. Now, it was determined that inasmuch as there was no such clause as I have described in the contract for postal cards, the department had no authority to make a new contract. So that the man who had the contract to make the postal cards is still furnishing the postal cards under the contract and he has not failed, and there is no knowledge on anyone's part that he is likely to do so. And, I presume, if the contractor for the envelopes was compelled to carry out the contract into which he originally entered he would not have failed. If he had failed, we had his bond for $500,000. And I think it is bad practice to allow any purchasing agent, no matter who directs him to do it, unless he is directed by law, to change a contract once entered into.

And my judgment is that there should be power in the Assistant Postmaster General having jurisdiction over the branch of the department for which the purchases are to be made to visé the purchases, to reject them, or accept them, and not allow the purchasing agent, as I understand the case, to be supreme. And I think a still better proposition would involve the creation of a board consisting of all the Assistant Postmasters General, who would have jurisdiction over all the purchases made through the purchasing agent of the department, and then before he had the power to let any contract a majority of these men should vote to adopt such bids as were thought to be the best. It is a great power to be placed in the hands of any one man. It is subject to abuse, as has been proved in this case. And there ought to be the closest scrutiny on the part of men who have been appointed to high office as to what is done by their subordinates, for this man is, after all, a subordinate. Yet he claims to have had the sanction of men high in power. The Third Assistant Postmaster General denies that he knew anything about the matter or that he had any part in it. This man assumes the responsibility. He ought to be reprimanded and the contract should be canceled. [Applause.]

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRIEST], a member of the committee.

Mr. GRIEST. Mr. Chairman, prior to the present war the Postal Service appropriation bill was the largest money bill considered by Congress. The bill this year carries appropriations aggregating $333,000,000, a large amount of money, but a comparatively small figure when considered to-day in connection with appropriations for war purposes. One commendable feature of the bill now before the House is the absence of offensive legislative riders, as the bill deals almost exclusively with matters pertaining to the maintenance of the postal establishment. The postal receipts for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1917, amount to $529,726,116.37, an increase of more than $17,000,000, or 5.66 per cent, over the preceding year. Of that amount the Postmaster General reports that during the last fiscal year the receipts from postage paid on mail matter amounted to $302,980,682.55, or 91.89 per cent of the total revenues and an increase of 5.57 per cent over the postage receipts of the previous year. It is interesting to note that the average per capita expenditure for postage for the year was $2.90. These figures have been quoted because they form an interesting comparison with the per capita cost of postal expenditures, to which subsequent reference will be made.

POST OFFICES FOR THE ARMY AT HOME AND ABROAD.

Probably one of the most interesting features of the post office appropriation bill now pending relates to the organization of a new branch of the Postal Service for the American war forces, both at home and abroad. It became necessary for the department to speedily organize this service for the 80 existing camps and cantonments at home and for the military and naval expeditionary forces abroad, where the mail service is at present being conducted by 86 postal employees, and for the transportation and maintenance of which $2,000,000 is appropriated in this bill. Postal stations have been established in all camps for the handling of mail and for delivery to the various companies and other military units. It is natural that confusions and delays existed at the time of the initial establishment of the Army camps, but the magnitude of the service and the necessity for speed in the development of the field organizations can be accepted as a reasonable excuse for the conditions as they temporarily existed. It is believed that the service is now working well in the camps at home, where more than 1,000,000 men are mobilized. The foreign service, however, is subject to delays, due largely to the irregularity of ocean transportation.

In his statement to the committee concerning this service First Assistant Postmaster General Praeger stated that the request for $2,000,000 for the postal service in France is based on the assumption that we are to have 1,000,000 men in France by June 30, 1918. To furnish postal service for 1,000,000 of our men in France will require about a million and a quarter dollars, or 12 cents per man per month. The appropriation in excess of one and a quarter million dollars will be utilized in the event of our Army in France exceeding 1,000,000 men.

CENSORSHIP OF THE MAILS.

Another war feature of the postal bill is an item of $1,200,000 for censorship of foreign mails, which is now being conducted by the censorship board created by Executive order under the following provision of the trading-with-the-enemy act, which was passed at the special war session of this Congress:

> Whenever, during the present war, the President shall deem that the public safety demands it, he may cause to be censored under such rules and regulations as he may from time to time establish, communications by mail, radio, or other means of transmission passing between the United States and any foreign country he may from time to time specify, or which may be carried by any vessel or other means of transportation touching at any port, place, or territory of the United States and bound to or from any foreign country. Any person who willfully evades or attempts to evade the submission of any such communication to such censorship or willfully uses or attempts to use any code or other device for the purpose of concealing from such censorship the intended meaning of such communication shall be punished as provided in section 16 of this act.

At present the only mail being censored by our Government under this provision of law is mail that is addressed to the Latin American countries and to Spain. Mail to other European countries, such as Sweden, Norway, Denmark, and Holland, is censored by the English Government, and the expense does not devolve upon the United States. This censorship applies to both letters and newspapers. The Government is fully justified in time of war in the exercise of drastic and effective methods of preventing valuable information from reaching the enemy, and Congress should unhesitatingly provide the necessary funds.

AN UNNECESSARY FEE TO POSTMASTERS.

While mothers and fathers in these days of patriotic fervor and devotion to duty are giving their boys to the service of their country, and every good citizen is doing his bit without thought of compensation, the sum of $47,115 has during the year been paid out of the Treasury of the United States to postmasters, salaried officials of the Government, for securing recruits for the Army. What amounts of money have been paid to postmasters for securing recruits for the Navy and the Marine Corps I have been unable to ascertain. These payments are authorized by the Army bill approved June 3, 1916, and the Navy bill approved August 29, 1916, whereby postmasters of second, third, and fourth class post offices are paid $5 for each recruit secured by them and accepted for the Army, the Navy, or the Marine Corps.

In June last I communicated with the Postmaster General regarding the advisability of discontinuing the payment of this fee. In his annual report recently issued the Postmaster General recommends the repeal of the sections of the laws which authorize these payments. I heartily concur that this is a patriotic duty which postmasters should be willing to perform, and be required to perform, without additional compensation, and I have to-day introduced in the House a bill in conformity with the recommendation of the Postmaster General.

The expenditure by the Government of many thousands of dollars to compensate postmasters claiming to have secured recruits is unjustified, and I am surprised to learn from the official records that hundreds of postmasters have taken advantage of this law as an opportunity of increasing the emoluments of public office. Their action has been in strong contrast with the gratuitous public service rendered by thousands of private citizens who have given service to the Government in connection with the draft, the creation of the National Army, the selling of liberty bonds, and in the performance of numerous other patriotic duties. The recommendation of the Postmaster General for the repeal of these sections of the acts named should be heartily indorsed.

The First Assistant Postmaster General, Mr. Koons, made an investigation and found that a good many postmasters were refusing to accept this fee, and that some postmasters who did accept it used the funds for the purpose of advertising for recruits; but others, with mercenary motives, exerted their efforts for obtaining recruits and the collection of the bonus. I called the facts to the attention of the Secretary of the Navy, but at that time he did not believe it to be good policy to request the President to withdraw the authority governing the payment for securing recruits for another branch of the military service. He stated, however, that "a little later, when our quota is full, I think it might well be withdrawn." Believing that it was unpatriotic for postmasters to claim this bonus, I communicated with the President, and, recognizing the existence of an abuse, he directed that an inquiry be made into the matter by the War, Navy, and Post Office Departments. The Post Office Department did not recommend these provisions for the payment of the $5 bonus to postmasters, and I have correspondence from officials of the department who expressed themselves as personally believing that while the services of the postmasters should be utilized for the purpose of obtaining recruits, yet such services should be rendered in connection with their other duties free of charge. The War Department, however, in last July expressed the belief that the expense to the Government would not be great, and it did not consider it advisable to take steps at that time to change the provision of law which authorized the payment of a premium. The Adjutant General, however, in a memorandum to the Secretary of War on July 19, admitted that with the operation of the selective-draft system an effective army could be raised and maintained.

Inasmuch as the selective-draft system is now in full operation, and as the War Department has announced that no volunteer enlistments will be permitted after December 15, 1917, by men who come within the age provision of the conscription law, there seems to be no further reason why the bonus should be paid to postmasters who claim that they induced men to voluntarily enlist. The desire to render patriotic service is so strongly imbued in the American people to-day that the loyal citizen, whether he be in public or private life, should be willing to encourage enlistments without asking his Government to swell the burden of taxation by payment of a $5 fee.

Owing to the methods of accounting in the War and the Navy Departments it appears that the authorities are unable to furnish specific information as to the amount of bonus fees paid to postmasters, but in recent months not less than $50,000 was expended.

THE TOWN MAIL DELIVERY.

Since 1909, when I introduced the first bill for the establishment of mail-delivery service in the towns and villages which are not entitled to city delivery service by law, I have witnessed continually growing evidences of the necessity for the extension of the mail-carrier facilities to these important communities which have postal receipts greatly in excess of the expense at such offices, producing a healthy profit to the Government in the operation of the postal business. In my remarks on February 24, 1910, January 16, 1914, February 14, 1917, and April 16, 1917, there will be found many expressions of favorable comment from postmasters, municipal officials, and Members of Congress and other prominent citizens giving their opinions of the value of the mail-delivery servce from a commercial viewpoint. There is no better way whereby the efficiency of business can be increased than through the operation of a mail facility which guarantees both civic and business benefit to the people of the country. This is especially true in view of conditions during the war. It is gratifying to note that the officials of the Post Office Department are now in accord with this system of letter-delivery service and that 453 offices are now in successful operation. These have all been established since 1912, in which year the first village delivery office in the United States was established in the borough of Ephrata in my own congressional district in Pennsylvania.

There are yet many hundred towns entitled to letter-carrier facilities which can not by law secure city delivery service, because they do not have more than 10,000 population or more than $50,000 gross annual postal receipts.

The information furnished me by the Post Office Department indicates that this service has been established at 453 post offices and that the annual rate of expenditures for the entire service approximates $415,870. As this amount does not include the increased compensation for certain employees provided in the post office act for the fiscal year 1917, the rate of expenditure will probably approximate $475,000, and it will therefore be seen that the department needs an increased appropriation for village mail-delivery service for the fiscal year 1919 in order to extend the facilities in compliance with the public demand, and for that reason the committee increased the appropriation in the pending appropriation bill from $500,000 to $600,000.

Inasmuch as the village mail-delivery service has been established at post offices in more than 200 congressional districts, and for the information of Members who are interested in this branch of the Postal Service, which is much appreciated by the public, I have prepared and submit the following compilation of the post offices at which the village mail-delivery service is now in operation or becomes effective January 1, 1918:

RURAL MAIL DELIVERY.

The Rural Mail Service has become so well known that there is little cause for adverse discussion in the House concerning this valuable branch of the Post Office Department. The annual rate of expenditure on June 30, 1917, was $52,920,408, and the Postmaster General reports that the rural carriers served 5,882,795 families representing a total population of 27,060,857 persons, or about one-fourth of the population of the United States. With postal revenues exceeding $300,000,000 it appears that the per capita cost of the Postal Service is about $3, and the Postmaster General reports that the per capita cost of the rural service for the year ended June 30, 1917, was $1,955, a slight decrease in the cost per capita for the previous year. Comparing the per capita cost on the rural routes as against the total cost for the country, and considering the great economic value of the rural service to the agricultural residents of the Nation, it must be admitted that the rural service is to-day one of the beneficial adjuncts of the Postal Service, especially when we recognize the importance of foodstuffs as a means to the winning of this awful war in which the country has become engaged in the cause of humanity.

The Postmaster General reports having experienced difficulty in securing a sufficient number of rural carriers during the past year. Similar difficulties in securing labor have confronted all employers. Especially is this true of the rural carriers in view of the fact that they are compelled to maintain their equipment under abnormal conditions. The cost of keeping horses has greatly increased, and those who use automobiles well know the expense of operating machines with gasoline at 27 cents a gallon.

This condition, however, does not seem to warrant the placing of the Rural Delivery Service as a whole under a contract system, as now applies to the so-called star-route service.

The present cost per mile of star-route service is $0.1024, while the cost per mile of travel by rural carriers is $0.151, there being a difference in cost of between 4 and 5 cents per mile. We must not overlook the fact, however, that the rural carrier is an employee in a class somewhat different from the star-route contractor, as the latter generally engages the cheapest service and the poorest equipment available. Of course, there are exceptions to this rule but with the record and experience of the star-route service in the past under the contract system, compared with the greater efficiency of the present rural service, the general public would undoubtedly approve the continuance of the salaried rural carriers. The present cost per mile of travel of star-route contractors is low, mainly due to the fact that a large percentage of the star routes awarded for a four-year contract term were awarded two and three years ago, and within the past two years it will be noted that the rate per mile at which the new contracts are being awarded is very much higher than it used to be. The fact that there could be no resignation or declination to perform service if the carriers were placed under the contract system would not compensate the public for conditions which are sure to be revived if the rural routes are operated under the star-route contract system. Many of the star-route contractors to-day are laboring under serious difficulties because they entered into the contracts two and three years ago at an annual rate which is to-day inadequate to maintain the contractor and his equipment. He is, however, compelled to continue the service because he is bonded in an amount which he could not afford to lose were he to violate his contract. In fairness, we must all agree with the comment in the Postmaster General's report that the carriers "should receive a fair day's pay for a fair day's work," and it is hoped that the committee will work out a plan and recommend to Congress some fair method of giving to these carriers a rate of compensation commensurate with the value of their services and the cost of keeping the equipment, or grant them an expense allowance for the upkeep of their horses and motor cars.

THE RAILWAY-MAIL SERVICE.

The railway-mail service, one of the most important branches of the postal establishment, has been the subject of considerable "reorganization" during recent years. Many Members of the House have looked with concern upon the conditions of unrest which have existed in the railway-mail service due to the constant reorganization of the service. Protests have been heard from various sections of the country where it is claimed that the service had been curtailed, and many employees of the service have suffered by reason of readjustments which have been made. Many of these readjustments have been for the betterment of the postal system no doubt, but we are all glad to note that the Postmaster General in his annual report states that the reorganization is now practically completed. It is unfortunate, however, that these reorganization plans have in many cases worked a hardship upon the men and their families when they have been compelled to remove from one locality to another at their own expense, giving up established homes—many of them having been purchased with full confidence that the Government would not violate the contract made when the men entered the service and established their residences at points adjacent to the line upon which they were assigned to duty. It is true that the men were in most instances offered transfers to lines which they might select and that their assignments were made to points where their services were needed, but in many cases these assignments have proven costly to the men and their families. In view of the high degree of efficiency required of men who operate the railway post-office lines it is urged that the department should seriously consider the personal interests of the men involved when it becomes necessary to make transfers which require change of residence from one town to another, and it is hoped that the Postmaster General will suggest some relief for cases of this kind before further reorganizations occur.

POST-OFFICE CLERKS AND CARRIERS.

The post-office clerks and carriers employed in the various post offices throughout the country are another class of men who deserve the considerate attention of the department officials and of Congress. Members of the Post Office Committee have heard numerous complaints of the treatment accorded these employees. Many of the postmasters at presidential offices have not had business experience, and favoritism has existed to a degree which naturally discourages conscientious workers. No doubt these unsatisfactory conditions will be ultimately remedied under the presidential order of March 31, 1917, providing a method for the selection of first, second, and third class postmasters. This order, however, does not affect the tenure of office of any present postmaster, and under existing conditions it is believed that the relief which the President and the Postmaster General seek will not be attained until many of the postmasters now holding office die or are otherwise displaced. Many of the post-office clerks and carriers are receiving compensation below that which they should receive, considering the nature of their duties and the general increase in commodities. These are matters which can be remedied through the recommendations and administrative acts of the department, and it is hoped that the officials in authority will present to Congress recommendations for the removal of the causes of unrest and to insure the maintenance of a high degree of efficiency and contentment in the Postal Service. This is necessary because of the great importance of the Postal Service to the domestic and business conditions of the country—especially during the war.

PNEUMATIC-TUBE SERVICE.

The Postmaster General has again renewed his recommendations for the discontinuance of the pneumatic-tube service in the five cities where the tubes have been used for mail transportation. Nearly every Congress for a number of years has given serious consideration to the cost and merit of the tube service in Philadelphia, New York, Chicago, Boston, and St. Louis. As one of these cities, Philadelphia, is in my own State, I have inquired regarding the importance and value of the tube service as a postal facility. The annual rate of rental, $17,000 per mile, has seemed large, and there is merit in the argument advanced by the Postmaster General to the effect that the tubes constructed about 15 years ago are not of sufficient size to handle a great quantity of mail expeditiously. It is evident, however, that a considerable quantity of local mail, including special-delivery matter, can be expedited between the central post office and main stations located in the congested sections of the large cities by means of the tubes, and the constantly increasing street traffic in these large cities named is a cogent reason for the continuance of the tubes for letter-mail transportation. While a committee of postal experts, employees of the department, have reported adversely regarding the continuance of the tube service, we can not overlook the fact that commercial organizations in these cities have appointed committees composed of capable and practical men, who have investigated the matter and who urge the continuance of the service. These commercial organizations and the local business men who have made the investigations are certainly not interested in the continuance of the tubes from a financial viewpoint; and before Congress takes action to deprive the business men and other postal patrons of these cities of the service which they have had for a number of years, and which is more needed now than ever before, the question deserves serious consideration by Congress.

FEDERAL AID TO GOOD ROADS.

The necessity for good roads is closely allied with the economical and efficient administration of the rural delivery service, and the act of July 11, 1916, providing for Federal aid in the construction of good roads, vested in the Secretary of Agriculture authority to designate the roads to be improved. The Postmaster General has recommended in his annual report that his department should be authorized to designate the roads under the Federal aid act, and this seems to be a very appropriate recommendation.

It is believed that the Federal aid road act should be further amended, however, so as to take into consideration the population of the State or rural community as a factor in establishing the basis for the allotment of funds among the several States. An examination of the apportionment of $14,550,000 to the States for aid in the construction and maintenance of rural post roads for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, indicates the absence of a fair distribution to those States which have the largest population both urban and rural and which return to the Government the largest revenues both from taxes and postal receipts. As an illustration, Pennsylvania received an allotment of $690,145 and New York $749,674; Illinois, $658,323; and Ohio, $558,043, while large States with thinly populated rural communities and greater road mileage received as much as did these States, and in one or two instances from one to two hundred thousand dollars more than was allotted to the States named.

An unprejudiced study of this subject by any Member of the House will prove convincingly that there should be a modification of the Federal road aid act, especially in view of the fact that the maintenance of roads in the thickly populated rural communities is more costly than the maintenance of the roads in the thinly populated States.

ONE-CENT POSTAGE IMPOSSIBLE NOW.

The subject of postage rates with particular reference to letter mail has received my attention for several years, and the bill for 1-cent local letter postage, which I introduced in the Sixty-first Congress, is believed to be the initial measure of that character. In remarks heretofore made I have included statistics showing the very great profit on the handling of so-called local or drop letters and advocated the adoption of a 1-cent letter postage rate for drop letters. Owing to the war it became necessary to raise additional revenues, and we now have in effect a 3-cent general postage rate and a 2-cent drop letter rate. These rates must be continued for some time in order to pay the expenses of the war, and the general public has accepted the increase without complaint as a patriotic duty and in support of the Government. No reduction in the postal rates can be expected in the near future, but when peace shall again prevail among the nations of the earth and the revenues of the Government become adequate for the normal conduct of governmental business, it is hoped that the postage rates will be speedily readjusted on a satisfactory basis.

NEW POST-OFFICE BUILDINGS.

The Postmaster General offers a timely suggestion with reference to the present system of constructing Government buildings for post offices. It is proper that the plans for Government-owned post-office buildings should have the approval of the Postmaster General, and that the plans for such buildings should be determined with the purpose of promoting the convenient and expeditious handling of the mail. It is more essential that the public buildings should have ample space, light, and ventilation and provide satisfactory working conditions than that these buildings should be constructed of monumental design. We will all no doubt further concur in the suggestion of the Postmaster General that because of the prevailing war conditions which have greatly increased the cost of materials and labor that the erection of public buildings be deferred except in cases where the necessity for the building is urgent.

Mr. GRIEST. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GRIEST. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman yields back four minutes.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON].

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, while the great Post Office appropriation bill is under consideration I wish to refer to a matter which is of vital importance to many people and of much importance to all. I refer to the quick delivery of mail. I present it for the consideration of the very able Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

First, as to over-seas mail, which at present is necessarily only partially under control of the Post Office Department. In response to numerous inquiries from anxious relatives and friends of our boys "over there," I have made such investigation as I could as to the causes of the well-known delay in the mails between the United States and our expeditionary forces. It has not been explained to my entire satisfaction why many letters should be 60 days going from an Atlantic port to our soldiers in France. The most reasonable partial explanation was made to me by the postmaster at New York, to the effect that the tremendous increase in the quantity of mail has literally swamped the available facilities for handling it. He said that under the stress of war not only the actual transportation but the receiving and handling facilities on the other side have proved entirely inadequate. He described to me the mountains of mail sacks piled high upon departing ships and even higher on French docks. The handling of such enormous quantities of mail necessarily requires time. His recommendation of a partial remedy, while not very satisfying, is nevertheless founded on reason and may have to be adopted, at least temporarily until a better and more satisfactory solution of the problem is worked out. His advice is to cease sending to our boys so many packages, especially large, bulky ones.

We had the same problem on a miniature scale on the Mexican border last year. My regiment and nearly a dozen others were stationed near a small town at the end of a single-tracked branch of the Southern Pacific Railroad. For a time neither the railroad nor the small post office was able to handle properly the suddenly increased burden. Large boxes, filled sometimes with articles of little or no value, were especially burdensome, so that my own experience corroborates in a measure that of the New York postmaster.

My own advice, founded upon a somewhat brief experience in the Spanish War as well as on the Mexican border, is that until facilities for handling packages are much improved over what they are now relatives and friends of our boys over seas should send fewer packages and write more letters. There is nothing so comforting to the average soldier boy far away from home as a good cheerful letter from some loved one. Letters occupy little space and are readily handled, while great numbers of large packages clog the mails and help delay the letters.

A few words in regard to the more rapid delivery of mail in this country, which has been referred to a number of times here to-day. It is a well-known fact that the transmission and delivery of our domestic mail is provokingly slow. Business men often protest against it and complain of the loss they suffer on account of it. A short time ago I was talking with a man of very large business connections, whose annual postage bill runs into thousands of dollars. I referred to the desirability of 1-cent letter postage. He said that what business men want is not cheap postage, but quicker service. He explained how it would pay him to double his postage bill if by so doing he could have quicker service. Others have corroborated his views.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TILSON. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SNYDER. I do not like to be "butting into" this proposition, but I look upon this post-office business as a purely business proposition.

Mr. TILSON. I recognize the gentleman as a business man of large experience, so I shall be glad to have him state whether his views correspond with those I have just expressed.

Mr. SNYDER. They do, most fully; and I would like to ask the gentleman if he thinks this matter will be any better off by practicing so-called economy in the Post Office Department, thereby wronging to a certain extent the general business of the country?

Mr. TILSON. I should regard it as a national economic loss to do so.

Mr. SNYDER. It is an absolute fact to-day that there is scarcely a business man in the whole United States who is not complaining of the fact that it takes so long to get a letter from one point to another and an answer to the same. I am speaking practically the universal thought of the business men of the country when I state that it takes substantially double the time to-day to cover a given distance that it required a year ago in getting letters and packages back and forth.

Mr. TILSON. I have heard the experiences of a large number of business men and will say that they agree in effect with what the gentleman from New York has just stated. During the present year I have carefully noted the exact day, and hour of the postmark on a number of letters and compared it with the time of actual delivery. I am sorry to say that the result of my investigation is not at all creditable to our great Postal Service. The trouble is not local or confined to any one place. It is general, I believe, though naturally not to the same degree on transcontinental and other long routes as on shorter distances, especially here in the East. Last spring my family were at Asheville, N. C., for a number of weeks. I was here. I noted the time required for letters to reach me from Asheville. It averaged nearly 36 hours, whereas the train schedule time is less than 16 hours. From New England points the record is worse, although the number of trains is very much greater. I have tabulated the time between postmark and delivery here on a considerable number of letters from Connecticut post offices all the way from Stamford to Hartford and find the time seldom as low as 24 hours, frequently as high as 48 hours, never taking into account letters that might have been delayed by Sundays or holidays. The train schedule time from Stamford to Washington is about seven hours, from New Haven eight hours, from Hartford nine hours. Naturally, a large portion of the letters tabulated are from New Haven, my home city, but my investigation has shown that the trouble is not local and certainly not confined to New Haven, for letters from other post offices show up just as bad or worse than those from New Haven.

Mr. SNYDER. I should like to break in just once more.

Mr. TILSON. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. SNYDER. A letter mailed in my home city of Little Falls at 12 o'clock to-day should be on my desk here in Washington to-morrow morning. That was the rule the first two years that I was in this House. To-day a letter mailed at the same hour arrives in my office the second day in the morning, which I think must be conceded to be an absurd situation.

Mr. TILSON. In my judgment, there is no good reason for letters requiring from three to six times as long to come to Washington as is required for a passenger to make the same trip. That there is great room for improvement in the Postal Service no one will attempt to deny. I do not attempt to point out where the trouble is, but would like to have you gentlemen of the committee who are experts in these matters try to find the trouble and the remedy for it. I do not know whether it is because we do not pay our clerks and carriers enough, or because we overwork and underpay our railway mail clerks, or because we have been confiscating the property of the stockholders of the railroads that carry the mail. All of these things should have your attention as possibly bearing upon the question. If you should succeed in finding the trouble or troubles and applying the proper remedy, you will deserve the gratitude of all, including both employee and patron of our great Postal Service.

One other matter in this connection. When the Post Office appropriation bill was pending at the last session of the Sixty-fourth Congress, I urged upon your consideration the matter of a much larger use of the aeroplane for carrying the mail. At that time I pointed out the possibilities in this direction and urged a serious beginning to develop them. War has made certainties out of some of these possibilities.

With the great development that has taken place since that time in the use of air craft, especially in such as the British Handley-Page and the Italian Caproni type, there has come the firm belief that in the future such machines will be used extensively for peaceful purposes. Many of these machines now carry more than a ton of burden. We should begin using them now for carrying first-class mail.

Mr. COX. I quite agree with the gentleman as to the use of aeroplanes, but does he think it is advisable now to ask the organizations which are manufacturing aeroplanes for war purposes to stop that, and to manufacture aeroplanes for the Post Office Department, when we are using every man we can get hold of and every piece of machinery we can get hold of to manufacture aeroplanes for military purposes?

Mr. TILSON. I think the use of a few machines for this purpose would not only not interfere with their construction and use for military purposes, but really would add a benefit by testing them in actual service and by training more fliers. That is my opinion about it.

Mr. COX. Where shall we get the machines?

Mr. TILSON. Of course, I do not believe the Government ought to interfere with the conduct of the war in order to do it.

Mr. COX. The gentleman understands that the Post Office Department started in upon this enthusiastically, but found that to carry it out would disrupt the organization now engaged in the manufacture of aeroplanes for the Army.

Mr. TILSON. I trust that at the earliest possible moment they will increase the use of these machines.

Mr. COX. They will as soon as they can get them.

Mr. TILSON. America invented the flying machine. Europe has developed it to a marvelous degree for war purposes. Let us be the first to use it for purposes of peace even in the midst of war. The use of a few machines for this purpose, instead of interfering with their construction and use for military purposes would help by trying them out in actual service. Then when peace comes we shall be ready, without delay or waste, to change many of our air machines, made for war use, into peaceful burden bearers and utilize them for the benefit of mankind.

Mr. MOON. I yield one minute to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cox].

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask unanimous consent to put in the RECORD a letter from Mr. Praeger, Second Assistant Postmaster General, in response to what the gentleman from Connecticut kindly said about the lack of mail getting to the soldiers in France. I think it is an extremely valuable document and one which every Member of the House should read. It ought to go in the RECORD. It contains no criticism, but states the facts and circumstances.

Mr. TILSON. The gentleman will understand that there was no criticism on my part.

Mr. COX. Yes; and I compliment the gentleman for not criticizing.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

The letter is as follows:

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
Washington, December 11, 1917.

Hon. W. E. COX.
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. COX: Referring to your request for detailed information as to the delivery of mail to our troops in Europe and the factors entering into the causes for the delay to mail, I beg to say that there are now comparatively few complaints from troops that have become established at the front, but, as new troops go abroad, new complaints will always arise during the first few months of their location in France.

Mail for American troops stationed in England is transmitted by the Post Office Department to the Army post office, London, England, which gives the mail to the proper military authorities for delivery to the addressee.

Mail for Americans who may be serving in the English, the Canadian, or the French Army is dispatched as foreign mail to the postal service of the foreign Government with which such American is identified, and the delivery of such mail is effected by such Government.

Mail for members of the American Expeditionary Forces in France, including civilians and independent organizations attached to the American Expeditionary Forces, is handled by the United States Army postal service, which delivers the mail in bulk to the proper military mail authorities, who undertake the delivery of the letters, papers, or parcels to the individuals to whom they are addressed. All mail for the American Expeditionary Forces in France is made up in this country to companies and other units, and under military regulations is delivered to the postal authorities in France to the regular military mail orderlies or their agents, who, upon returning to the camps or stations of the troops, undertakes the delivery of this mail to the individuals to whom it is addressed, or, if they can not deliver it, undertake to have it sent to such other unit to which the addressees may have been transferred. Should an addressee not be known in the regiment, his letters are returned to the postal authorities, who endeavor to locate him at the general military headquarters. Should the addressee have been transferred to some other unit, the mail orderlies are under instructions to readdress his letters to the proper unit. Every effort is being made by the American authorities in France to effect, as promptly as war conditions admit, the delivery of mail for our troops. It should be borne in mind that the Army postal service does not deliver the mail to the individual soldiers, but that this is done by the military machinery, which receives the mail in bulk at the various postal stations or the nearest railroad terminus as it is made up in this country and as it is received from the ships.

Delay in delivery of mail to the soldiers in Europe is due sometimes to individual delinquencies, as failure of the addressee to sufficiently or correctly address the letter, misthrowing of mail by individual clerks, or, again, failure on the part of the mail orderlies to make prompt dispatches to the individual soldiers or prompt transfer of the mail to some other command in the event the addressee has been transferred.

Some other delays are due to systems, methods, and policies, in which event the mail of a large number of soldiers is affected. Thus, when the many hundreds of officers first went to France all of their mail, apparently by direction, was addressed to the name of the officer and "American Expeditionary Forces." The War Department's mail to these officers was simply addressed "American Expeditionary Forces." The officers were assigned to special work in many towns and villages in France and it was impossible for some of them to receive their letters, which were accumulating at the headquarters in Paris for months, as their addresses could not be furnished to the postal authorities. Again, all units did not go to France—some were sent to England temporarily—but it was deemed inexpedient by the War Department to inform the Post Office Department, in answer to urgent requests, as to which units, regiments, etc., were in England, which were in France, and whether regiments for which mail was being received marked for the "American Expeditionary Forces" had gone abroad or were still in this country. This secrecy was considered by the War Department as a necessary military expediency, but it resulted in thousands of letters going to France for troops which were still in England, and vice versa. As a result of this caution on the part of the War Department to safeguard the troops, many soldiers were complaining that they were not receiving letters which they felt their relatives at home were writing to them. The reports of the large military terminal post office in New York show that all letter mail was made up to the companies or other units and was all dispatched each time a transport or commercial liner went abroad.

For obvious reasons it is not desirable to publish the volume of mail in each dispatch, but all the mail for which room could be found on the ships was dispatched with each outgoing vessel.

Complaints as to delay or failure to deliver letters, papers, or parcels arise in the main from the fact that persons communicating with our troops do not take into consideration that approximately 30 days are required from the time of mailing for a letter to reach the addressee, owing to the disturbed ocean traffic. By far the larger part of the mail is taken to France on the Army transports, which of necessity must give preference to men and supplies, and the movement of mail across the water consequently is very irregular. Again, the railroad transportation in France is strained to the utmost to meet military needs. Many persons who have complained to the Post Office Department have later advised that the mail is reaching the persons to whom it is addressed in a satisfactory manner. Their original complaints were due to not allowing sufficient time for their letters to get across and the answers to return.

Whenever complaint is received from an individual as to delay to his mail the United States postal agent in France is advised, and the military mail handlers are advised, and a watch is set for mail coming to the address of the person complaining. Undeliverable letters are printed in an advertised list, which is circulated in all the camps, and as a result of these measures a large amount of otherwise undeliverable mail has been readily disposed of.

The delivery of mail to some of the units, and especially to the unassigned officers, has been a very great problem, but it is expected that even this obstacle has now been overcome, inasmuch as during the early part of November a full Army card index system of all the soldiers in France and their location was being completed. Up to November 1, and before the card index referred to was available to the postal authorities in France, out of more than 2,000,000 letters all except 4,300 had been delivered, and out of approximately 300,000 pieces of parcel post there were only 71 pieces at the postal headquarters. It was stated by the post-office inspector who made the investigation that at that time without the aid of the Army's card index, these undelivered letters were being put into the hands of the addressees at the rate of more than 80 a day, and that upon the completion of the index he expected that every letter which could be delivered would be disposed of in a very short time.

The greatest cause of complaint affecting newly arrived soldiers in France is due to the fact that the public does not allow enough time for mail to go to France and to return. While it does not always take 30 days for a letter, from the time of mailing in the central part of the United States, to get to the boy at the farthermost camp, it is a safe average to allow, and it sometimes takes as long as 40 days. This is due to the irregular ocean movement, and it is sometimes necessary to wait weeks before a French liner goes out or a transport is found on which room is available to carry mail. Sometimes transports cross the ocean with the rapidity of a liner, and again it will take weeks. On one occasion a ship started out of port with many thousands of letters, but for some reason it returned with the same mail eight days later, and after a few days in port resumed its journey across the water. There have been two instances of this kind and numerous minor delays. On one occasion, after waiting several days for a ship to go out, one of the vessels would take only 1,200 out of 2,800 sacks of mail, adding more than a week's delay additional to the other 1,600. I can say this, however, that all the mail placed on a ship is finally distributed to the companies and other small units, and that its delivery is made as promptly as it can be moved over the French railroads to the postal stations among the troops, where it is turned over in bulk, as it was made up in New York and received from the ship, to the mail orderlies of the various military organizations, who are charged with the responsibility by the Military Establishment of sorting this mail and delivering it to the individuals to whom it is addressed. The jurisdiction of the Post Office Department ends with the delivery in bulk of this mail to the military authorities, except as to such letters as are returned to the Postal Service by reason of change of unit of the addressee.

The general public not understanding these things is prone to rush into print or to Congress with its complaints, and, although word may be received from the addressee on the other side within a very short time after the complaint, the public does not rush back into print or to Congress with the voluntary information that the trouble has been corrected, and that the mail is now being promptly received. A number of considerate citizens, however, have been kind enough to advise the Post Office Department of the remedying of their complaints.

Let me give you a typical case: On September 6, 1917, I received a letter from the postmaster at Binghamton, N. Y., stating that a patron of his office had received a letter dated August 21 from the American field service, saying: "From what we understand and know by experience parcel post to France at the present time is very unsatisfactory as well as unsafe," and declaring that it is safer to send packages for the men of the field service to the American field service office in New York. The postmaster stated that his patron wanted to publish the letter in the newspapers against the Post Office Department, but was pursuaded to take it up with the department itself instead of rushing into print. Practically at the same time the Post Office Department received a complaint from Mr. C. Henry Stinson, of Norristown, Pa., complaining of delay and supposed loss of parcels addressed to his son in the American field service at 21 Rue Raynouard, Paris. The matter was promptly investigated, and while the investigation was pending the department received a letter from Mr. Stinson containing this paragraph:

"I would say that my son, Robert Stinson, has received two packages of tobacco and one of candy at his last writing, October 3. Two of them were gotten at the Rue Raynouard by one of his friends, who went there and hunted through a large amount of mail matter that was lying there undelivered. Judging from what my son writes, the mail for the American field service is delivered by the post office authorities to the Rue Raynouard, but the field service have 'fallen down' in getting it to the individual addressee."

A week later Mr. Stinson again advised the department, "All letters to my son and all first-class matter has been received by him, comparatively speaking, with regularity." He also reported the receipt of additional parcels, which were found in the Paris headquarters of the American field service. This state of affairs was called to the attention of the American field service, from whom an appreciative letter was received for the information thus given them and the prompt action taken by the service to remedy the trouble in their headquarters in Paris, for which the Post Office Department was to be blamed and attacked by a gentleman in Binghamton, N. Y., who had a grievance, but not against the Postal Service.

Considering the enormous amount of letters, parcel-post packages, and newspapers that are going to France, with chance opportunity for transmission across the water, the inability thus far to obtain detailed information from the War Department as to the identity and location of the units in the countries in Europe, the constant change in location in France of the units themselves, the large number of unassigned officers and enlisted nonfighting units scattered over France, and the tremendous task which the Army has, requiring first consideration always to be given to the disposition of men and supplies, the Postal Service has unquestionably been very successful. Nobody appreciates this more than the American Army officers in command in Europe. In a report dated December 4, R. E. Cowart, who was sent by the Postmaster General to France to make a special investigation as to the efficiency of the service, says:

"I called upon Gen. Pershing, commanding general of the American forces in France, and he informed me that he thought the service upon a whole had been satisfactory. In a conversation that I had with Gen. Seibert, he said that he considered the Postal Service under the circumstances had been very successfully and efficiently administered. I also inquired often and conferred fully with many private soldiers in the American Expeditionary Forces as to the character of the mail service. A large majority of them expressed themselves as highly pleased with the service. A few of them complained of delays, but, as I stated above, these delays in the circumstances were inevitable. Our postal authorities can not be justly criticized for the delay that was caused by the arming of the steamers of the French line."

On the return to this country of the superintendent of foreign mails, under whose personal direction the Army postal service was established in France, Maj. Gen. Pershing addressed the following communication to the Postmaster General:

"Mr. R. L. Maddox, United States Postal Service, inaugurated the United States Army postal service in France last June, and has conducted it very satisfactorily ever since.

"I take pleasure in commending him to you accordingly."

I have thus gone into detail on this subject because I know that from time to time, especially every time a new division lands in France, there will be complaints in the press and to Congress over delays to the mails. When you consider the conditions under which mail in a war-torn country and under actual war conditions is being delivered and the immense quantity of mail involved, I think you will agree with me that the complaints made represent but isolated cases and do not reflect the actual state of the service.

Sincerely yours,

OTTO PRAEGER,
Second Assistant Postmaster General.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota has but nine minutes remaining.

Mr. STEENERSON. But the gentleman from Tennessee agreed to yield me some time.

Mr. MOON. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. TOWNER. Six minutes will suffice.

Mr. MOON. I gladly yield to the gentleman six minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, in the first session of the Sixty-fifth Congress the House Committee on Ways and Means reported the revenue bill to the House May 9, 1917. The Senate Finance Committee reported the bill to the Senate July 3. The House and Senate not agreeing, a conference committee was appointed, which reported October 1, and the bill became a law October 3.

During the long interval that ensued between the introduction of the bill and its final passage many changes were made, principally occasioned by the continually increasing requirements of the Government growing out of our preparations for war. The original estimates were about $1,800,000,000. As the bill was finally passed it provided for about $2,600,000,000.

Section 209, of Title II, being the war excess-profits tax title, was not in either the House or Senate bills. It was inserted by the conferees, and was first brought to the attention of the House and Senate in the conference report.

The section provides as follows:

SEC. 209. That in the case of a trade or business having no invested capital, or not more than a nominal capital, there shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid, in addition to the taxes under existing law and under this act, in lieu of the tax imposed by section 201, a tax equivalent to 8 per cent of the net income of such trade or business in excess of the following deductions: In the case of a domestic corporation, $3,000 and in the case of a domestic partnership or a citizen or resident of the United States, $6,000; in the case of all other trades or business, no deduction.

The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN], in explanation of the insertion of this section by the conferees, stated to the House that the excess-profits tax title, as passed by the House, only applied to corporations and partnerships. The Senate extended its provisions to include individuals, but exempted lawyers, doctors, and all professional men. The House conferees insisted that if the bill applied to individuals at all it should apply to the classes which the Senate had exempted as well. A compromise was agreed upon, by which the House view was adopted with a special exemption to all individuals of $6,000. As it was presented and understood it was an endeavor to place the lawyer, doctor, or other professional man on an equality with the farmer, the merchant, or the manufacturer who had capital invested in their business.

The provisions of the title which imposes the war excess-profits tax levies an imposition upon the profits of those engaged in trade and business computed upon the amount of such profits received during the taxable year over the "prewar period," which is specified as the years 1911, 1912, and 1913. It was especially designed to reach the excessive profits made by certain corporations on contracts for materials and supplies growing out of the war.

Certain exemptions were made. Among others, the following: "In the case of officers and employees under the United States, or any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, or any local subdivision thereof, the compensation or fees received by them as such officers or employees," shall be exempt—section 201 (a).

This was done because, under the provisions of the title as it then stood, in order to determine what were war profits the percentage of the income to the invested capital had to be determined and a comparison made of the taxable year with the "prewar period." Such provisions, it is evident, were not applicable to an officer or employee who had no capital and no profits derived from trade or business. The exemption provision was predicated upon conditions which existed before section 209 was inserted, but was not intended to apply to the new taxes imposed by that inserted section.

The section was not considered by the House, because there was no opportunity to consider it. It was not debated, and except for the statement made by the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee it was not explained. It was not voted on as a separate proposition and no opportunity was given to either vote for it or against it. It is not likely, however, that the section would have been rejected if it had been considered, for it presented a new method of raising money and a new subject of taxation, and Congress was anxiously looking for both.

Some serious misstatements have been made throughout the country regarding the insertion of section 209 in the act. It has been stated that Congress inserted a section in the law exempting themselves from the income tax. It is charged that at the last minute Congress surreptitiously inserted a "joker," exempting themselves from the tax they were imposing on everyone else.

In the first place, it should be stated that Congressmen have no exemption on the income-tax title, except such as is given to every other person. They pay just as much income tax as anyone else. Section 209 was inserted not as an amendment to the income-tax title of the law but to the excess-profits tax title.

Mr. PLATT. Does not the gentleman think it is a great mistake to bring in a conference report on an important bill like that on a Saturday night and rush it through on Monday before anyone has a real chance to find out what it means, as was done in this case?

Mr. TOWNER. Certainly, and especially when it contains, as this did, new legislation.

Mr. PLATT. I recall asking a question——

Mr. TOWNER. I want to say further, in reply to the gentleman, if he will pardon me for a moment, that it was not so much the insistence of Congress as it was the insistence of the country that we should speedily pass that bill that pressed the bill to an immediate adoption. It had been so long delayed that the whole country was clamoring that we should pass it, and of course that had its influence upon Congress. I am not criticizing, especially I am not criticizing any of the members of the Committee on Ways and Means, because the conference committee of the House did everything it possibly could to expedite the passage of the bill through the House. Was there anything else the gentleman desired to suggest?

Mr. PLATT. I think that is all.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOWNER. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. Is the gentleman prepared to say whether the 8 per cent tax on excess profits of individuals is the only tax they are called upon to pay, or are they, in addition to that 8 per cent, compelled to pay the supertax that other people are compelled to pay?

Mr. TOWNER. They are. There is no exemption whatever to a Congressman or to anyone in the income-tax title, which is Title 1 of the bill. We are compelled to pay all of the taxes that are imposed under the income-tax title, and the 8 per cent, of course, imposed in addition to the taxes that are otherwise imposed by the bill.

Section 209 is not an exemption provision. It is a provision imposing a tax, not exempting from one. If Congress "surreptitiously" inserted this "joker" they were adding a burden, not relieving from one.

It should be understood that the exemption provision of the title was in the act before section 209 was inserted. The exemption provision was properly applicable to the war excess-profits tax title before section 209 was inserted, because the provisions of the title as it then stood could not have been applied to salaries of an officer or employee. It follows that the exemption provision was not intended to apply to section 209. By the insertion of section 209 Congress created a new item in the war excess-profits tax title which will apply to salaries of Congressmen, unless such salaries are exempted under the provision which was not intended to apply to such a provision.

I shall endeavor to show that the exemption provision does not apply to section 209, and that the salaries of Congressmen are not exempt from the tax imposed by that section.

Section 200 of the revenue act provides that "the terms 'trade' and 'business' include professions and occupations." Undoubtedly a Congressman while so serving is engaged in an "occupation." His salary would therefore be within the imposition of section 206, unless exempt under the exemption provision contained in section 201, already quoted. That being true, the question resolves itself to this: Is a Congressman an officer or employee of the United States within the meaning of the provision of section 201, which exempts the compensation of officers or employees" from the operation of the war excess-profits tax title?

IS A CONGRESSMAN AN "OFFICER"?

It must, of course, be conceded that a member of any legislative body may be designated in general terms as an "officer." As the word is popularly understood, a Congressman would be considered as being an "officer" of the Government. He is a person commissioned or authorized to perform a particular public duty or to fill a particular public position, and that would bring him within the general and popular definition of the word.

But the Constitution of the United States has stated in explicit terms just who shall be considered as "officers" of the United States, and our Supreme Court has unequivocally decided in many cases that the constitutional and not the popular definition shall be held to be the true meaning of the word when used in statutes enacted by Congress.

Article 2, section 2 of the Constitution, is as follows:

The President shall nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall appoint ambassadors, other public ministers and consuls, judges of the Supreme Court, and all other officers of the United States whose appointments are not herein otherwise provided for and which shall be established by law. But the Congress may by law vest the appointment of such inferior officers as they may think proper in the President alone, in the courts of law, or in the heads of departments.

Under the Constitution the only persons who can be considered officers of the United States are those appointed by the President, the courts of law, or the heads of departments.

In other parts of the Constitution are provisions which clearly indicate that Senators and Representatives are not classed as officers.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield for one question?

Mr. TOWNER. Certainly.

Mr. FESS. Is it not true in the impeachment case of Senator Blount in 1796——

Mr. TOWNER. Yes; I shall presently refer to that case.

Mr. FESS. And it was decided he was not an officer and could not be impeached?

Mr. TOWNER. Surely.

Article 1, section 6, provides:

And no person holding any office under the United States shall be a Member of either House during his continuance in office.

In this provision it is apparent the word "officer" does not include Congressmen.

Article 2, section 1, provides:

But no Senator or Representative or person holding an office of trust or profit under the United States shall be appointed an elector.

Still more clearly in this provision are officers differentiated from Members of Congress, for Senators and Representatives are not considered as "holding an office."

Article 6, section 3, provides:

The Senators and Representatives before mentioned and the members of the several State legislatures and all executive and judicial officers, both of the United States and of the several States, shall be bound by an oath or affirmation to support this Constitution.

Here Senators and Representatives and officers of the United States are put into separate classes.

Article 2, section 4, provides:

The President, Vice President, and all civil officers of the United States shall be removed from office on impeachment for and conviction of treason, bribery, or other high crimes and misdemeanors.

The first case of impeachment ever presented by the House and tried by the Senate was the case of William Blount, a Senator from Tennessee, the case referred to by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS]. He was impeached for high crimes and misdemeanors by the House in 1797. As a defense Blount alleged that a Senator was not an officer of the United States, within the meaning of the Constitution, and hence not liable to impeachment. The proposition was elaborately argued and the Senate decided that it had no jurisdiction under the Constitution to impeach a Senator of the United States. This view has held ever since, and it is not now contended that a Senator or a Representative in Congress is subject to impeachment. That is a determination explicit and conclusive, that a Congressman is not an officer within the meaning of the Constitution.

This view was held by the authors of the Federalist. See the Federalist, No. 66.

The question whether a Member of Congress was subject to impeachment was a subject of discussion in the debates in the State conventions called to consider ratifying the Constitution, and it was admitted by the friends of the Constitution that Members of Congress were not liable to impeachment. (3 Elliot's Debates, 43 et seq.)

This view is also sustained by Story in his commentaries on the Constitution (vol. 1, secs. 791–795). A Member of either House may be removed, but he can not be impeached. And yet if Senators and Representatives are "civil officers of the United States" they are subject to impeachment under the explicit declaration of the Constitution. The only ground upon which it can be contended that Congressmen are not subject to impeachment is that they are not "officers of the United States."

The Supreme Court interpreting statutes of the United States has many times held that no one could be considered an officer of the United States unless appointed by the President, a court of law, or the head of a department.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOWNER. I will.

Mr. MADDEN. So, under the construction of section 209 by the gentleman from Iowa a Member of Congress would be called upon not only to pay the normal tax and a supertax, if he had sufficient income, but on all of his salary in excess of $6,000 he would be obliged to pay 8 per cent tax?

Mr. TOWNER. That is exactly the case.

SUPREME COURT INTERPRETATION.

In United States v. Germaine (99 U. S., 508) a surgeon, appointed by the Commissioner of Pensions, was indicted for extortion in taking fees under a provision of law which defined the crime as follows:

> Every officer of the United States who is guilty of extortion under color of his office shall be punished by a fine of not more than $500 or by imprisonment not more than one year, according to the aggravation of his offense. (Act of 1825, 4 Stat. L., 118.)

To this indictment the Supreme Court sustained a demurrer and discharged the defendant, holding that as he had not been appointed either by the President, a court of law, or the head of a department he was not an "officer" within the meaning of the statute.

In the opinion rendered by Mr. Justice Miller it was stated:

> The Constitution, for purposes of appointment, very clearly divides all its officers into two classes. The primary class requires a nomination by the President and confirmation by the Senate; but, foreseeing that when officers became numerous and sudden removals necessary, this mode might be inconvenient, it was provided that in regard to officers inferior to those specially mentioned Congress might by law vest their appointment in the President alone, in the courts of law, or in the heads of departments. That all persons who can be said to hold an office under the Government about to be established under the Constitution were intended to be included within one or the other of these modes of appointment there can be but little doubt. This Constitution is the supreme law of the land, and no act of Congress is of any validity which does not rest on authority conferred by that instrument. It is therefore not to be supposed that Congress, when enacting a criminal law for the punishment of officers of the United States intended to punish anyone not appointed in one of those modes. If the punishment was designed for others than officers as defined by the Constitution, words to that effect would be used, as servant, agent, person in the service or employment of the Government, and this has been done where it was so intended, as in the sixteenth section of the act of 1846 concerning embezzlement by which any officer or agent of the United States, and all persons participating in the act, are made liable. (9 Stat. L., 59.)

In United States v. Smith (124 U. S., 525) an indictment was returned against a clerk of a collector of customs for the unlawful conversion of public money, under a statute which punished "every officer or other person charged by any act of Congress with the safe-keeping of public money." It was held that the clerk was not an "officer" and was not charged by any act of Congress "with the safe-keeping of public money."

In delivering the opinion of the court, Mr. Justice Field said:

> A clerk of the collector is not an officer of the United States within the provision of this section, and it is only to persons of that rank that the term public officer, as there used, applies. An officer of the United States can only be appointed by the President and with the advice and consent of the Senate, or by a court of law, or the head of a department.

It may be of interest to add that Thomas B. Reed appeared for the defendant in the first case cited and Elihu Root in the second case.

This rule has been adopted in the Federal courts without exception.

Thus in United States v. Cole (130 Fed., 614) it was held that a cashier of the mint was not an officer of the United States.

In United States v. Haas (167 Fed., 211) it was held that a clerk in a Government office not appointed by the head of the department was not an officer.

In United States v. Schlierholz (137 Fed., 616) it was held that a special agent of the Land Department was not an officer.

It has also been held that mail carriers, railway postal clerks, and rural carriers were not officers. (3 Words and Phrases, p. 717.)

The same rule of interpretation has been followed by the State courts.

In re Doe's Estate (151 Wis., 136) it was held that the governor of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, a Government institution and supported by Government appropriations, was not an officer of the United States.

In Hand v. Cook (29 Nev., 518) it was held that a Government mineral inspector was not an officer.

In all these cases it is important to observe that the rulings are based upon the fact that legally there are no officers of the United States except those that are authorized by the Constitution; that none are such officers unless appointed by the President, by the courts of law, or by the heads of departments.

EXCEPTIONS.

It may fairly be claimed that such is the rule. Our Supreme Court, however, has held that the same word used more than once in the Constitution may have different meanings. It has also held that a word used in a statute may not have the same signification as it had in the Constitution. Just as far as possible and without doing violence to the language used the intent of the legislature is to be made effective. Statutes are to be construed to give effect to the presumed and reasonably probable intention of the legislature. (Webster v. Cooper, 14 How. (U. S.), 488.)

Even the word "officer," whose meaning would appear so clearly to be limited to its constitutional definition as interpreted by the decisions of the Supreme Court in the cases referred to, in some exceptional cases has been given its general and popular meaning. In these cases the language of the statute is such as to warrant or even require such interpretation in order to effectuate the purpose of the lawmakers.

Thus in section 5500, Revised Statutes, there is a provision punishing Congressmen for bribery, and section 5502 affixes as part of the punishment forfeiture of his "office or place." In this case it is evident the word "office" could refer only to that of Congressmen, and yet, to make sure that it would reach the persons intended, the position is also referred to as "place."

In the test-oath act of July 2, 1862, since repealed, it was provided that every person "elected or appointed to any office of honor or profit under the Government of the United States" should take the prescribed oath. It was held this required Congressmen to take the oath, and this was done as long as the law remained in force. In this case, however, it was also provided that a record of the oath should be preserved "among the files of the court, House of Congress, or department." It was rightly concluded that this was a clear indication that the intent was to include Congressmen.

In the recently decided Lamar cases the question arose as to whether impersonating a Congressman was a crime within the meaning of the statute.

It will be remembered that Lamar was tried and convicted in the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York upon an indictment charging him with having "falsely pretended to be an officer of the Government of the United States, to wit, a Member of the House of Representatives; that is to say, A. Mitchell Palmer, a Member of Congress, with intent to defraud J. P. Morgan & Co. and the United States Steel Corporation."

The case was first taken to the Supreme Court of the United States on writ of error sued out directly from that court on the ground that the district court had no jurisdiction. This was claimed for the reason that the interpretation of the Constitution was involved in the decision that a Congressman is an officer of the United States. That contention was not sustained. Mr. Justice Holmes in the opinion said:

> As to the construction of the Constitution being involved, it obviously is not. The question is in what sense the word "officer" is used in the Criminal Code of March 4, 1909, chapter 321, section 32. The same words may have different meanings in different parts of the same act, and of course words may be used in a statute in a different sense in which they are used in the Constitution.

On motion the writ of error was dismissed. (Lamar v. United States, 240 U. S., 60.)

Subsequently on a writ of error sued out from the court below the Supreme Court considered the case on its merits on the errors assigned.

Referring to the contention that a Member of the House of Representatives was not an officer within the meaning of the Constitution, Mr. Chief Justice White, delivering the opinion, said:

> The issue here is not a constitutional one, but who is an officer acting under the authority of the United States within the provisions of the penal code under consideration.

The section of the penal code charged to have been violated punishes anyone who "with intent to defraud either the United States or any person shall falsely assume or pretend to be an officer or employee acting under the authority of the United States, or any department, or any officer of the Government thereof."

It will be noticed that the language of the statute is much broader than simply whether a Congressman is an officer of the United States, the penalty attaches to anyone who falsely assumed to be any kind of an officer claiming to act under the authority of the United States. It would apply to anyone who falsely claimed to be acting as an officer, whether there was any such office or not.

So interpreting the statute, Mr. Chief Justice White, rendering the opinion, said:

> We are clearly of the opinion that such Members are embraced by the comprehensive terms of the statute. (Lamar v. United States, 241 U. S., 103.)

What is further stated by the Chief Justice about the fact that, as generally understood, a Congressman would be considered an officer is certainly justified. The inquiry in every case must be whether the constitutional or the popular sense was intended by the language used. It is not going too far to claim that unless the language used contravenes such intent, the presumption is that a statute which is enacted under authority of the Constitution shall be interpreted according to the terms of the Constitution, and that unless such intent is negatived by the terms of the statute itself, such will be presumed to be its meaning.

Two cases may with profit be considered as clearly showing the line of distinction and as emphasizing the rule that when the language of the statute is not qualified by provisions which indicate a contrary intent the constitutional interpretation should prevail.

In United States v. Mouat (124 U. S., 303), Mouat, a paymaster's clerk in the Navy, brought suit in the Court of Claims and recovered for compensation for traveling expenses, under an act of Congress providing for such payment to officers of the Government. It was for a long time the practice to allow a specific amount per mile, regardless of the amount actually expended. Later it was enacted that "all allowances for mileage and transportation in excess of the amount actually paid are hereby declared illegal." Two years later a law was passed which gave officers of the Navy Department 8 cents per mile for traveling expenses in lieu of their actual expenses. It was under this statute that the claim arose.

On appeal the Supreme Court of the United States reversed the decision of the Court of Claims allowing the claim on the ground that as this was "a special statute, exempting for particular reasons a certain class of persons from the operation of a general law, it is obviously proper to confine that class to those who are, properly speaking, officers of the Navy."

It was held that as a paymaster's clerk was appointed neither by the President, a court of law, nor the head of a department he was not an officer of the United States.

Summing up the arguments, the court said:

> From all this it is clear that neither by the regulations nor by the statutes nor by any constitutional provision is the present claimant an officer of the Navy. Undoubtedly Congress may have used the word "officer" in some other connection in a more popular sense, as will be shown in the case of United States v. Hendee, immediately following this, in which case it will be the duty of the court in construing such an act of Congress to ascertain its true meaning and be governed accordingly.

In the Hendee case (124 U. S., 309), referred to above, the question arose as to the amount of the salary of a paymaster's clerk. This time the claim was made under a statute which provided:

> All officers of the Navy shall be credited with the actual time they may have served as officers or enlisted men in the Regular or Volunteer Army or Navy, or both, and shall receive all the benefits of such actual service in all respects in the same manner as if all said service had been continuous and in the Regular Navy in the lowest grade having graduated pay held by such officer since last entering the service.

In sustaining the judgment of the Court of Claims in the allowance, the Supreme Court said:

> We think the words "officers or enlisted men in the Regular or Volunteer Army or Navy, or both," were intended to include all men regularly in service in the Army or Navy, and that the expression "officers or enlisted men" is not to be construed distributively as requiring that a person should be an enlisted man or an officer nominated and appointed by the President or the head of a department, but that it meant to include all men in service, either by enlistment or regular appointment, in the Army or Navy. We are of opinion that the word "officer" is used in the statute in the more general sense which would include a paymaster's clerk; that was the intention of Congress in its enactment, and that the collocation of the words means this, especially, when it is added that they shall receive all the benefits of such actual service in all respects and in the same manner as if said service had been continuous and in the Regular Navy.

Applying the rule of these cases to the present case, as it is shown not only that the word "officer" used in a statute enacted by Congress does not in all cases include Congressmen, but that unless a contrary intent is affirmatively shown it does not in any case include Congressmen, it will not be presumed that Congress sanctioned an evasion of or escape from liabilities, the creation of which is imposed in general terms by the provisions of section 206.

In the Hendee case, supra, the Supreme Court found that it was clearly the intent of Congress to have the word "officer" include all men regularly in the service. In this case the statute interpreted created a benefit, and did not, as in the Mouat case, create an exception.

RULES OF CONSTRUCTION.

It is a familiar rule for the interpretation of statutes that when an exemption is claimed from the operation of a general provision the language of the exemption must be strictly construed as against the person claiming it.

In the present case if Congressmen should claim exemption from the general provisions of section 209 under the exemption clause of section 201, the provisions of the exemption clause should be strictly construed against such claim. If the word "officer" is susceptible of two constructions, one of which would support and the other deny the exemption, that construction which would deny the exemption should be adopted. In the Mouat case, supra, the Supreme Court said that when one claimed an exemption under "a special statute exempting for particular reasons a certain class of persons from the operations of a general law * * * it is obviously proper to confine the class to those who are properly speaking officers of the Navy." In the present case if any Congressman should claim an exemption from the operation of the general law imposing a tax, it would be proper to interpose the objection that the exemption should be confined to those who are properly and constitutionally officers of the Government.

In Broughton v. Pensacola (93 U. S., 266) it was held that where legislation is susceptible of another construction it will not be presumed that the Government has sanctioned an evasion of or escape from liabilities the creation of which is authorized by the statute. In the present instance it will not be presumed that Congress sanctioned an evasion of or escape from liabilities which are generally imposed by the statute unless such intent is clearly indicated by the language used.

In all the cases where the general and not the constitutional meaning of the word "officer" was given, the intent to use the word in its popular sense was found by the court.

In the present instance it certainly can not be claimed that Congress by enacting the exemption intended to exempt Congressmen from the operation of section 209. When the exemption provision was provided there was no section 209 in existence; neither was there any provision of the title that would in any way affect Congressmen or their salaries. The exemption was intended to apply to conditions which made the exemption proper if not necessary. It could not therefore have been intended to apply to section 209.

If no intent can be implied from the circumstances of its enactment or from the other terms of the statute, or necessarily from the language used, then the exemption provision does not apply to Congressmen and they can not claim to be excepted from the imposition of the tax.

AS TO EMPLOYEES.

It is hardly necessary to argue that a Senator or Representative of the Congress of the United States is not an employee within the meaning of that word as used in the statute.

An employee as defined in the Century Dictionary is "One who works for an employer; a person working for salary or wages; applied to anyone so working, but usually only to clerks, workmen, laborers, etc., and but rarely to the higher officers of a corporation or government."

This definition has been substantially adopted by both Federal and State courts. (State v. Craig, 69 Ohio, 236; Atlantic Railway v. Beasley, 54 Fla., 311; In re Courtland Manufacturing Co., 45 N. Y. Supp., 630; Coddy v. Transit Co., 110 N. Y. Supp.; Palmer v. Vantwood, 153 N. Y., 612; United States v. Schlierholz, 137 Fed., 616.)

In case of doubt it is at least questionable whether a Congressman ought to claim an exemption such as the one we are considering, but this is more than a doubtful case; the weight of authority and the stronger reason is against the exemption. I have called the attention of the commissioner and the advisory board to the matter, and it is to be hoped the department will hold against the exemption. If it does and any Congressman believes he can support a claim of exemption, he can go to the courts and present it.

If it does not so hold, then the appeal should be to the conscience and sense of honor of each individual Senator and Representative.

I have gone into the matter involved with perhaps undue particularity, because, first, I desire to clear Senators and Representatives from any possible imputation of dishonor or cupidity; and, second, because I am clearly of the opinion that, legally, a claim of exemption on the part of Congressmen can not be sustained.

At least some of us have felt deeply pained that at this time a charge that Congress deliberately exempted its Members from the operation of a general tax should be made, for it would be indeed unfortunate if the people of the country should be led to believe their Representatives were trying to escape their share of the burdens of this war. It has been a source of pride to us that we have been able to bring a greater unanimity to the support of the administration in its prosecution of the war than is given by any other legislative body of any other nation engaged in the war and a more generous and whole-hearted support than has ever before been given any other administration in the prosecution of any other war in our own country. If what I have said shall assist to explain the situation and in any measure relieve the Congress of the United States from the imputation of dishonor or self-interest which has been made in the charge referred to, I shall be satisfied. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee has 10 minutes remaining.

Mr. MOON. I will ask the Clerk to read the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

OFFICE OF THE POSTMASTER GENERAL.

For gas, electric power and light, and the repair of machinery, United States Post Office Department equipment shops buildings, $4,500.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the Chair, Mr. FERRIS, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 7237) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE—WICKERSHAM V. SULZER (H. DOC. NO. 561).

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication from the Clerk of the House, which, together with the case, was referred to Election Committee No. 1:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
CLERK'S OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., December 11, 1917.

The SPEAKER,
House of Representatives.

SIR: I have the honor to lay before the House of Representatives the contest for a seat in the House of Representatives for the Sixty-fifth Congress of the United States for the district of Alaska, James Wickersham v. Charles A. Sulzer, notice of which has been filed in the office of the Clerk of the House, and also transmit herewith original testimony, papers, and documents relating thereto.

The Clerk has opened and printed the testimony in the above case. In compliance with the act approved March 2, 1897, entitled "An act relating to contested election cases," such portion of the testimony in the above case as the parties in interest agreed upon or as seemed proper to the Clerk, after giving the requisite notice, have been printed and indexed, together with the notices of the contest and the answer thereto, and such portions of the testimony as were not printed with the original papers have been sealed up and are ready to be laid before the Committee on Elections.

Two copies of the printed testimony in the aforesaid case have been mailed the contestant and the same number to the contestee. The law in reference to the briefs of both the contestant and contestee has been complied with as far as possible upon receipt by the Clerk of said briefs.

So far as the briefs have been furnished to the Clerk, they are ready to be laid before the Committee on Elections upon the order of the House, together with a tabulated statement which has been prepared by the Clerk, showing the number of pages of testimony and the present status of said contested-election case, and all papers in connection therewith.

Yours, respectfully, SOUTH TRIMBLE,

VOTE ON WAR RESOLUTION.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD a statement of my colleague Mr. NOLAN, who was not in the House to vote on the war resolution, but who was engaged in one of the departments at the time. Mr. NOLAN is unavoidably absent from the city.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The following is the statement referred to:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C.

Mr. SPEAKER: I take this opportunity of explaining my absence and failure to vote on the resolution declaring war with Austria-Hungary passed by the House on Friday, December 7.

I was in the House up to 2.40 p. m. and notified the Republican cloak room to call me at the labor adjustment board, connected with the United States Shipping Board. From failure of the operator at the United States Shipping Board to properly notify me I lost my opportunity to vote upon this important measure, and were I present I would have voted for the resolution.

The work that I was engaged upon was very important, serving on a committeee with the representatives of the United States Navy, the Emergency Fleet Corporation, and the representatives of the different national and international unions engaged in the metal-trades industry, working out the solution of the difficult war problem in the shipyards along the entire Pacific coast, as well as working out some plan whereby strikes and lockouts will be eliminated in the future, and providing a plan insuring industrial peace for the duration of the war, thereby assuring the continuity of production of ships for both the Shipping Board and the United States Navy.

I am happy to say that after several days of uninterrupted conference a happy medium was struck and a basis laid to avoid all future controversy.

This is the important work that I was engaged upon, otherwise I would have been in the House an enthusiastic supporter of the resolution reported by the Foreign Affairs Committee.

JOHN I. NOLAN.

THE PHILIPPINES (S. DOC. NO. 130).

The copies of the franchises inclosed are described in the accompanying letter from the Secretary of War in transmitting them to me.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, December 12, 1917.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, in the midst of the confusion and strife of the world we pray for peace, for the peace of God which passeth all understanding, which keeps our hearts and minds in the knowledge of God, peace that the world can not give and can not take away, peace in our hearts which arises out of a sense of security and calm as we are responsive to Thy will and obedient to Thy law. Grant that nothing shall come into our lives which will separate between us and God, and that Thy Word may be our law and Thy will our guide in all the actions of life. For Christ's sake. Amen.

JOHN B. KENDRICK, a Senator from the State of Wyoming, and HENRY L. MYERS, a Senator from the State of Montana, appeared in their seats to-day.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. VARDAMAN and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, I have petitions signed by thousands of representative citizens of Michigan in favor of the immediate submission of a Federal suffrage amendment to the legislatures of the several States. I hold in my hand a fair sample of these petitions and desire to read one of them. It is very brief:

> The undersigned men of Wayne County, State of Michigan, do hereby petition you to work and vote for the immediate submission of a Federal suffrage amendment to the legislatures of the several States in order that the women of the United States may become the political equals of those of Great Britain, Australia, New Zealand, Canada, and the Scandinavian countries.

That petition is signed by Paul H. King, a very representative young man of our State; by Edward N. Hines, by Judge Webster, of the Wayne County Circuit Court, and Judge Sellers; by Milton Oakman, the treasurer of Wayne County, and numerous other very representative men. I think it calls for more than passing comment. I will say that these petitions have been circulated and signed by men who have never heretofore engaged in any propaganda in favor of this very just cause. In presenting the petitions not in a merely informal way I am presenting them with my sincere hope that the Senate will take up and pass the joint resolution which is now on the Calendar, and that Senators may thus be given an opportunity to vote upon it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution having been reported from the committee, the petitions will lie on the table.

Mr. GRONNA. I ask to have printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs a short resolution adopted by the Commercial Club of Bismarck, N. Dak., asking for a law establishing military training.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

UNIVERSAL MILITARY TRAINING.

> Whereas we covet for the United States the high honor and prestige of a peaceful Nation engaged in the pursuits of trade and the advancement of learning; and

Whereas the present state of society local in the State and in the Nation seems to require police power to protect it in the proper pursuits of peace; and

Whereas the present world conflict might have been avoided under such just and fair protection; and

Whereas an effective police must not only be properly equipped and maintained but must be specifically trained: Be it

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Bismarck Commercial Club, at its annual meeting of 1917, held at the Grand Pacific Hotel December 4, that all male citizens within proper ages should be called into military training, with a view to their preparation for the exigency of attack or for the protection of the Nation's honor against a possible foe; and

Resolved, That we hereby petition our Representatives in Congress to use their best endeavor in the enactment of such law.

Mr. GRONNA presented petitions of sundry citizens of Williams County, N. Dak., praying for the immediate submission of the Federal suffrage amendment to the legislatures of the several States, which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. GALLINGER presented a petition of the National Council of American Cotton Manufacturers, praying that liberal appropriations be made for the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce in the Department of Commerce, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. NELSON presented petitions numerously signed by citizens of the State of Minnesota, praying for the submission of the Federal suffrage amendment to the legislatures of the several States, which were ordered to lie on the table.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-four Senators have answered to the roll call, and there is a quorum present. Is there objection to the present consideration of the unfinished business?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 2316) to promote export trade, and for other purposes.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, in view of the course the discussion of the pending bill has taken in the last day or two, I feel as if I ought to make answer to some of the criticisms indulged in by its opponents. I hope I may be pardoned if I say that while the discussion was going on I was almost constrained to think that the bill which was being discussed was not the bill which was being considered by the Senate. I trust Senators will bear with me a little while while I shall aim to analyze the bill and try to demonstrate the importance of having legislation upon the subject at this particular time.

It has been repeatedly said, with all due respect to the able Senators who have discussed the bill, that it was substantially a repeal of our entire trust legislation. With that proposition I must take issue. The bill itself presents no suggestion of dissatisfaction with the general trust legislation or policy of this country. The purpose of the bill is only to modify the present legislation with a view to benefiting our country and increasing our export trade.

Senators, it will be observed that the words "export trade" are very clearly and definitely defined in the first section. It limits "export trade" to "mean solely trade or commerce in goods, wares, or merchandise exported or in the course of being exported from the United States or any Territory thereof to any foreign nation," and then it defines specifically what is not to be embraced in the phrase "export trade." It shall not include "the production, manufacture, or selling for consumption or for resale within the United States or any Territory thereof of such goods, wares, or merchandise or any act in the course of such production, manufacture, or selling for consumption or for resale."

On the second page of the bill the committee defines the associations which may have the privileges of the bill as meaning "any corporation or combination, by contract or otherwise, of two or more persons, partnerships, or corporations." I think the language is so explicit that whatever organization is formed will be so subject to the laws of the land that it would be impossible for foreigners to engage in this business and continue the association in violation of the laws of the United States.

But I want to suggest, for the consideration of Senators at this time, that if they have any doubt about this language it could be amended by providing that these associations could be composed only of two or more persons, partnerships, or corporations who are resident in or situate within the United States. Such an amendment would prevent absolutely any foreign corporation or cartel from becoming interested in the association. I do not believe it is necessary, but it may be that it would be a wise additional safeguard.

Much of the discussion on yesterday would lead Senators to believe that this bill, if enacted, would completely hamstring the Sherman law and the Clayton trust law, and I wish now to direct your attention for a few minutes to that objection.

In the first place, the bill provides that section 2 of the Sherman law shall not "be construed as declaring to be illegal an association entered into for the sole purpose of engaging in export trade and actually engaged solely in such export trade, or an agreement made or act done in the course of export trade by such association." I wish to emphasize the language—any act or agreement.

Further, while the debate was in progress it seemed to me the very able Senators failed to give proper effect to the provisos contained in this section. Now note, these associations may be organized only for the foreign trade and can engage in it only when they or the agreements they may enter into or the acts they may perform are, first, not in restraint of trade within the United States; and, secondly, not in restraint of the export trade of any domestic competitor of such association.

Some Senators seem to have difficulty in understanding the phrase "restraint of the export trade of any domestic competitor." In one of the earliest drafts of this bill the words used were "any American competitor," but on reflection it was believed they were comprehensive enough to include competitors who lived in the other American Republics; hence the word "domestic" was substituted for the word "American" and is in contradistinction to the word "foreign."

But that is not all. There is a third proviso, and, in my judgment, a very important one, to which it also seems to me Senators have failed to give proper effect. It is this:

> That such association does not, either in the United States or elsewhere, enter into any agreement, understanding, or conspiracy, or do any act which artificially or intentionally and unduly enhances or depresses prices within the United States of commodities of the class exported by such association.

I realize and every student of the subject must realize if he desires to continue the policy of the Sherman law, that the operations of these export associations must be so limited that they will not seriously interfere with the operation of the Sherman law within the United States; that they will not unnecessarily interfere with the foreign trade of a domestic competitor; and that their business should be so conducted that it will not unduly affect the prices of domestic commodities to the domestic consumer, either by way of increase or decrease. If we bear in mind this particular paragraph, many of the fears which Senators have been apprehending as a result of this proposed legislation will be dissipated.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. POMERENE. I will yield for a question. I am not feeling very well this morning, and I had a little rather not be interrupted. I will, however, yield for a question.

Mr. CUMMINS. What does the Senator from Ohio understand the words "in restraint of trade of a domestic competitor" to mean? I will put the question in this more specific way: Suppose a combination organized under the bill pursuing perfectly legitimate methods, but selling at a lower price than a rival can sell, takes away the trade of a domestic competitor, is the trade of that domestic competitor "restrained" under the terms of this proposed act, or must the combination pursue vicious or wrongful practices in order to bring about that result?

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I take it the words "in restraint of trade" have been definitely defined by our Supreme Court in the Standard Oil, and the American Tobacco cases, and that judicially construed they mean any undue restraint of trade. The Senator from Iowa asks me as to what would be the effect of a reduction of prices by perfectly legitimate methods employed by these associations. I answer if they were to attempt by any method of unfair competition to interfere with the trade of a domestic competitor that act would be under the control of the Sherman antitrust law and would not be protected under the pending bill. If the larger association was able by reason of its greater efficiency or by exercise of greater economy in its methods of distribution and sale to reduce the price of the article, then, of course, that would be a kind of competition which would not be objectionable under the law.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. REED. After the Senator's expression that he did not want to be interrupted and would prefer not to be interrupted, I hesitate to ask a question; yet I should like to call the Senator's attention, by way of a question, to a matter which I think is of very great importance.

Suppose that the exporters of wheat in the United States, corporate and individual, were to organize themselves into one export company and thus embrace within themselves all of the people engaged in exporting wheat, is there anything in this bill that would prevent them doing that?

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I will answer the question, but really I would prefer not to be interrupted. I will come to that later in my remarks, but in answer to the Senator's question, I will say this now: In the first place, he is putting an almost impossible proposition; and, in the second place, if there should be such an organization as he has suggested, and it should artificially or intentionally and unduly affect prices either by depressing or increasing them in the United States, it would be an objectionable practice under this proposed law and the Federal Trade Commission would have the right to investigate the association and compel it to conform its entire business methods to the law as Congress has prescribed it.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will not the Senator permit me to say that such an organization effected would undoubtedly have the right to go into the American market and offer whatever price it pleased for American wheat, and that if that would be regarded as illegal under the bill, then it would be the first time that a purchaser had been denied the right to offer his own price?

Mr. POMERENE. Well, Mr. President, I realize that the Senator has some conceptions of this measure which I do not have. I think that Senators lose sight of the fact in the discussion that it is not the larger aggregations of capital that are seeking this legislation; it is the smaller companies.

Mr. REED. The Steel Trust is seeking it.

Mr. POMERENE. If the Senator will bear with me, I shall hope to answer the Senator fully before I get through.

Mr. REED. Very well; I should like to keep within the record; that is all.

Mr. POMERENE. I should like to keep within the record also. It is true, I will say in further answer, that many of the organizations—in fact, nearly all of the export organizations of the country—are favorable to this legislation, and for reasons which I shall indicate later on. But the questions propounded by Senators have been diverting me from the course of the argument which I intended to pursue.

I desire now to call attention to the third section of the bill, that relating to the construction to be placed upon section 7 of the Clayton Act. Senators have referred to this section as if it were a repeal of section 7 of the Clayton Act. With all due respect to Senators who have taken that view, their statement must be accepted with a very material modification. Let me read:

SEC. 3. That nothing contained in section 7 of the act entitled "An act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes," approved October 15, 1914, shall be construed to forbid the acquisition or ownership by any corporation of the whole or any part of the stock or other capital of any corporation organized solely for the purpose of engaging in export trade, and actually engaged solely in such export trade—unless the effect of such acquisition or ownership may be to restrain trade or substantially lessen competition within the United States.

And now note the following language—

And if the acquisition of any such stock by an association would either restrain trade or substantially lessen competition, then it would be a violation of this bill if it becomes a law.

Again, section 4 extends the control of the Federal Trade Commission under the Federal Trade Commission act to our extra-territorial commerce and all acts which may be performed in territory outside of the United States. This leads me to call attention to the very able argument made by the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] on yesterday. He cited a case in Two hundred and thirteenth United States Supreme Court Reports, which in substance held that an act which was done in foreign territory and conformed to the laws there could not be reached under the Sherman law. He was right as to that contention under the facts set forth in that case; but I desire to direct the Senator's attention to the further modification of that principle as contained in a case in Two hundred and twenty-third United States Supreme Court Reports, on page 512, where the court distinguishes the case then under consideration from the American Banana Co. against The United Fruit Co. case, reported in Two hundred and thirteenth United States, 347. The syllabus in part reads:

While a statute——

Mr. CUMMINS. Is the Senator now reading from the American Tobacco Co. case?

Mr. POMERENE. No; I am reading from the case of United States against Nord Deutscher Lloyd.

Mr. CUMMINS. In Two hundred and twenty-third United States?

Mr. POMERENE. In Two hundred and twenty-third United States, page 512:

While a statute has no extraterritorial force, and one can not be indicted here for what he does in a foreign country, the making of a contract in a foreign country may, as in this case, create a condition operative in this country, under which acts of omission or commission can be punished here.

A vessel owner taking security in a foreign country for the return passage of aliens brought to a port of the United States violates section 19 of the immigration act of 1907, and the retention of the money in the United States for the return passage is an offense at the place where it is retained.

So that, I conclude from the principle laid down in this case, although an association organized under the pending bill should enter into some agreement or perform some act in a foreign country which met the requirements of law there, if at the same time the effect of it were such as to materially interfere with the policy of the United States under its trust laws, then it would be subject to the jurisdiction of the authorities of this country, including both the Federal Trade Commission and the Department of Justice.

These associations are placed under vigorous supervision by the departments. In section 5 of the law they are required to register annually with the Federal Trade Commission, giving, among other things, their location, the names of the companies and corporations or individuals or partnerships that may be interested in them, the kind of business they are doing, copies of their charters, if any, or their articles of agreement forming the association; and later on, if the Federal Trade Commission at any time has reason to believe that they are violating any of the laws of the land, the commission can compel them to bring before them all of their books, all of their contracts, and everything pertaining to their business for their investigation; and it is made the duty of the Department of Justice, as well as the United States district attorneys, to see to the enforcement of this law.

These associations, as shown in section 2 of the bill, must not be in restraint of trade within the United States or of the trade of a domestic exporter, and their acts must not be such as to artificially or intentionally and unduly enhance or increase prices. If they do any of these acts or enter into any of these agreements, then the Federal Trade Commission has the right to inquire concerning them and to make recommendations requiring these associations to conform their business to the requirements of the statute. If they fail to do it, then the proceedings shall be certified over to the Department of Justice for such action as it may deem proper. I shall perhaps a little later on call attention to that subject, when I come to a discussion of some of the different illustrations which were placed before the Senate on yesterday.

Now, a word as to the necessity of this legislation.

In the debate the other day one of the Senators stated that there was nothing in the report of the committee showing the necessity for this legislation. With all due respect to the Senator's statement, I do not think he read the report. It may be that it fails to go as fully into the question of the necessity of this legislation as it should have gone; but I want Senators to bear in mind this fact: I think I fairly state the facts when I say that at the time of these hearings Senators did realize that our commerce was at a serious disadvantage under the present legislation in its competition with foreign cartels and combinations. The only question was, What, if anything, shall we do for the purpose of ameliorating conditions? In drafting this report the writer was content to make this simple statement concerning the necessity for the legislation:

The Federal Trade Commission, in a summary of a report made May 2, 1916, points out the liberality with which foreign and particularly European nations permit organizations or combinations with respect to their foreign trade. This is the common practice in Germany, England, France, Italy, Austria-Hungary, Switzerland, Holland, Sweden, and Belgium, as well as in Japan. In Germany alone prior to the beginning of the European war there were 600 important cartels or combinations embracing nearly every manufacturing and commercial industry in the Empire. Many of these organizations devoted themselves largely to the export trade, and they "carried on vigorous campaigns to extend their foreign business, to prevent competition among German producers in foreign markets, and to secure profitable prices."

Since the beginning of the European war the allies have even organized buying agencies for the benefit of their Governments and their people. Our merchants and manufacturers must meet this situation. Very few of them can compete single handed with these great combinations. Our belief is that it is necessary to permit our business men to form similar organizations or associations so as to enable them to meet foreign competitors on a more equal footing. In this way they will be able to reduce the selling cost and keep in closer touch with the demands of the foreign markets.

The most of the report was devoted to a consideration of certain amendments which had been suggested by the several members of the committee and which were later incorporated in the reported bill as it was presented to the Senate; and in the last bill passed by the House of Representatives, which is now before the Senate, most of those amendments were adopted.

The opponents of the bill insist there is no necessity of this legislation. There is a very full discussion of trade conditions in the foreign markets in the hearings before the committees, both of the House and of the Senate, as well as in the hearings held by the Federal Trade Commission. The question for us to meet, in my judgment, is this: Does the American Congress wish to place our American business man on an equal footing with his foreign competitor or does it not? If we are seeking foreign trade in some third country, should we compel our people to go single-handed after a contract, while Germany and France and Great Britain and nearly all other competing countries allow their business men to enter into combination for the purpose of getting that contract? That is the situation.

The House passed a bill similar to this on September 2, 1916. The vote on it was 199 yeas and 25 nays. On June 13, 1917, the House voted on the bill now under consideration. The vote on it was, yeas 249, nays 29.

The different trade organizations of the country have been most earnestly in support of this legislation. I realize that some of them may be criticized because perhaps they have done things which they ought not to have done, and left undone the things that they ought to have done; but when organizations come as a whole and ask for legislation of this character in view of world conditions what shall we do? Do we want the foreign trade or do we not? Those Senators who fear that sales abroad may affect the price of sales at home, if they are going to be entirely consistent, would shut off entirely our foreign trade. But they want our foreign trade to increase, so why not take counsel of the experience of our competitors in our lands.

Of course, we realize that there can not be a pound of pork or a barrel of flour sold abroad which to some extent does not affect our local prices; but we have our surplus products. We want to sell them abroad. I care not whether these surplus products come from the farm or the factory or the mine; when they go abroad they are helping our domestic industries, and we want the best prices we can secure for them. Do we want to help them or do we not? That is the question for us to consider.

Mr. A. C. Pierson, representing the Associated Business Papers of New York, an association which represents more than 100 of the trade papers of the country, testified before the Interstate Commerce Committee that all of them favored the principle of this law. No one industry was against it.

The American Manufacturers' Export Association, with a membership of 550, favored it; and the hearings show that among the membership of this association were not only bankers and business men but farmers' associations as well.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator permit an inquiry? Did he say the American Manufacturers' Association?

Mr. POMERENE. The American Manufacturers' Export Association.

Mr. REED. Is that the same concern that had its headquarters in Washington and was investigated by a committee of the Senate, and was found to be maintaining a lobby here?

Mr. POMERENE. I do not know. Perhaps the Senator from Missouri has some information on that subject.

Mr. REED. I do not know; but the names are very similar.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I rise to suggest that the body which was investigated by a committee of which the Senator from Missouri was a member was the American Manufacturers' Association, I think, and had nothing to do with and was not the body to which the Senator from Ohio refers.

Mr. REED. Is the Senator familiar with the personnel of the two?

Mr. POMERENE. Well, Mr. President, I prefer not to be interrupted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Ohio has the floor. He does not desire to be interrupted, and he has a right to proceed without interruption.

Mr. POMERENE. A short time ago the Fourth National Foreign Trade Convention was held. There were present, so these hearings show, 1,305 delegates, representing all activities in foreign commerce in all sections of the country, and they unanimously supported the principle of this bill.

The Merchants' Association of New York, with a membership of 5,000, unanimously supported the principle of this bill. At the First National Foreign Trade Convention, with 400 American business men present, the principle of the bill was again indorsed.

A word on this subject from the distinguished American Ambassador at Berlin during the last three or four years may be of interest. I read from the Public Ledger of Saturday morning, September 8, 1917, under the subheading "Combine for selling abroad":

> The only thing that can maintain a fair price after the war for the products of American firms, miners, and manufacturers is permission to combine for selling abroad. There is before Congress a bill called the Webb bill permitting those engaged in export trade to combine, and this bill, which is manifestly for the benefit of the American producer of raw materials and foods and manufactured articles, should be passed.

I have before me a report of some hearings before the Federal Trade Commission. There appeared before this commission Mr. Ernest Thurnauer, who represented, it is true, one of the large electrical companies of this country. He was asked to discuss conditions as they existed abroad. I am only going to take the time of the Senate to read a paragraph:

> The cartels are perhaps more strongly and more largely organized in Germany than in any other country, but there are some in France and England as well, and there are some which are international. They are generally selling organizations. They contract between the different producers of a certain article or commodity or a material. These are contracts under which they arrange for the sale of the products, either jointly or they divide them up pro rata, or they aid each other financially, even. These cartels are very frequently under government control. They are very much favored by the government, especially for export purposes. In certain cases the government has been directly interested in them as partners.
> For instance, there are some coal cartels in Germany. The German Government own certain coal mines, and they are in these cartels just like others. They take part in them, they get their share of the sales, they participate in the fixing of prices, and they are really partners, like the private enterprises.

Consul General Julius G. Lay, Berlin, Germany, in November, 1915, made a report to the State Department on cartelization in Germany. This report is printed in volume 2 of the Federal Trade Commissioner's Report on American Cooperative Export Trade.

If anyone has any doubts as to the extent to which combinations are organized and operated, both in the domestic trade and in her foreign trade, I am satisfied they will be clarified by reading this report. It shows that nearly all of the important industries of Germany are combined in cartels of one kind or another. He speaks especially of the large combinations, among which he names—

1. The coal, iron, and steel industries.
2. The coal industries.
3. The potash industries.
4. The German Portland cement companies.
5. Electrical industries.
6. Wall-paper industries.
7. Print-paper combine.
8. Cartels in the textile industries.
9. Alcohol cartels.

Again, he speaks of the concentrated movements in other German industries, such as the plate-glass manufacturers, the Association of Window Glass Producers, concentration of the electrical glass industries, bottle industries, analine color combinations, Association of Linoleum Manufacturers, Soda Trust, aluminum and zinc organizations, German glue combination, dynamite agreement, German book trade, rubber combinations, German gold and silver plating works, incandescent-light industries, Artificial Silk Trust, stoneware combination, and the storage-battery industries, and so forth.

Mr. President, the other day there was some discussion as to the progress which was made in our foreign exports. One Senator drew the conclusion that we needed legislation of this character in order to encourage exports. Another Senator, after some analysis of the figures, suggests that we have made tremendous progress under the operation of the Sherman law. That is true; but I insist that, while these two facts may exist concurrently, there is no casual connection between them. And now, if we are to analyze these figures further, we will find this:

In the year 1913 the total value of manufactured products exported amounted to $776,297,360. Among these manufactured products were agricultural implements amounting to $40,572,352; exports of oils—mineral—refined, $129.666,995; iron and steel exports, $304,605,797; making a total of exports in these three classifications of $474,845,044. Or, in other words, 60 per cent and over of the exports of manufactured articles in this country were from these three classifications, which embrace within them the large integrated interests of the country—iron and steel, oil, and agricultural implements.

The only inference I seek to draw from these facts is this: If 60 per cent of our manufactured exports are of classes of manufacture which are produced by highly integrated companies with large investments of capital, I think I am right when I say it is largely because they were better equipped by reason of that fact to invade the foreign market.

Mr. REED. If the Senator will permit one question at that point, it is, If every one of these industries that he has referred to as being successful in the European market at the present time—the steel industry, the harvester industry, and the oil industry—did not appear either directly or by their representatives in advocacy of this measure?

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I do not know whether they did or not. I did not see them. Certain students of the subject came. Certain representatives, speaking for all these exporters, came. I am not able to distinguish them. I shall try to determine this matter upon the facts as I see them and not because certain persons appeared or did not appear before the committee.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me, that is a very high position to take, but it is not the position the Senator took a moment ago when reading us as persuasive of our action a long list of gentlemen who had advocated the bill.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I realize that I can not agree with the Senator. There is no use in our trying to agree upon the subject.

I desire to say that it is not the large industries of this country that will be principally affected by this legislation. It will be the small industries—the class of industries which do not have capital enough to permit them to invade the foreign market, to cultivate the trade, and to dispose of their goods.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BECKHAM in the chair). Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. POMERENE. I have repeatedly asked not to be disturbed. I shall be glad to answer any question I can when I shall have finished this subject, but I want to hurry along.

This subject has been very carefully considered by many very able students, and I am going to take the liberty of reading just a paragraph from one of them which is quoted in the Senate hearings on page 40. I may say it is the thought of Mr. Gilbert H. Montague, who appeared before this committee. He describes the condition, which our people meet in seeking trade abroad, so well that I believe the language will interest Senators.

> Imagine a squad of recruits, responding patriotically to their country's call for foreign service, paying out of their own pockets for their equipment and training; studying in solitude the use of their equipment, with no assistance from the Government except a correspondence course of instruction; and then, without ever having had any company or battalion drill, being sent to the front with the plaudits and best wishes of their grateful country and with the warning that if they ever fight or even drill as a coordinated army or in any way except as unrelated individuals they will be liable, when they return home, to court-martial and public disgrace. That is the situation of our exporters to-day. (Gilbert H. Montague, Third National Foreign Trade Convention, New Orleans, January, 1916.)

I realize that whatever is done upon this subject must be done in such a way as to conserve our own institutions, our own industries, and our own system of laws, and I think we have succeeded in doing it.

The Senator from Missouri yesterday in a very eloquent address referred to the fact that there were two bills before the Congress, one the pending bill and the other the price-fixing bill, known as the Stephens bill. I have no more sympathy with the latter bill than he has. The purpose of that bill is one thing and the purpose of this bill another. He spoke of it as if they were the two jaws of a wild animal. He spoke of his dislike of the Prussian Government and of the Prussian institutions, and I share his dislike. He spoke of the rapacity of the cartels and combinations of Germany, which are permitted to operate not only in Germany with her domestic trade but in her foreign trade, and he feared that our associations which we are seeking to organize under this bill would have the same effect on our domestic commerce.

He did not want our people to be ground between the two jaws of the animal. Neither do I. But let me suggest to him and to those who think like him, at the present time when our exporters are seeking to get their share of the world's trade our men, as individuals, are compelled to come in contact with this Prussian-made animal, and often they are crushed by its jaws. They, as individuals, must meet foreign competitors in combination. We must determine now whether the American Congress has enough interest in the American business man to enable him to meet these German and other associations and cartels on the same footing. If we want that foreign trade we will be for this bill, and if we do not want it, I can understand why some Senators will be against it.

The Senator also in his eloquent argument referred to the fact that all the allied trusts and combinations of the country were back of this bill. I do not know what kind of institutions he embraces within that term, but assuming for the sake of the argument that some of them or all of them are back of this bill, because they want to meet the foreign producer on an equal footing, who in the world will be in opposition to this bill? I will tell you who. It will be the German Kaiser, the German Government, the German cartels and combinations all over the world. They will be lined up in opposition to this bill and will be glad to see it defeated.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, does the Senator mean to intimate that opposition to this bill is indicative of a sympathy with Germany?

Mr. POMERENE. Not at all, sir; and if the Senator regards that as a reflection upon him I want to explain that nothing of that kind was intended. I was simply resorting to his own logic.

Mr. REED. I would not want to say it was a reflection on me, because I do not think I am under suspicion, but I think that kind of an argument is——

Mr. POMERENE. Oh, I am applying the same argument to the Senator's attitude that he was applying to the position of the proponent's of this bill.

Mr. REED. Oh, no, Mr. President. The argument made by the proponents of it was that it was necessary, because Germany had cartels. The reply was that I did not think because Germany had authorized combinations this country was obliged to follow the lead of Germany.

Mr. POMERENE. I quote the Senator's language.

Mr. REED. Quote it. It is in the RECORD.

Mr. POMERENE (reading)—

> The allied trusts of the United States, together with their servants, agents, employees, and sympathizers, are for the bill.

Mr. REED. Undoubtedly.

Mr. POMERENE. Yes; and if the Senator is justified, and I find no fault with him, in trying to align those who favor this bill because they believe in it with the allied combinations and trusts, I do not think that he should be supersensitive when we apply the same logic to his position.

Mr. REED. If the Senator will permit me, I am not supersensitive. I shall take occasion to reply to his remarks.

Mr. POMERENE. Very well.

Mr. President, if I may refer to another phase of this debate, a very plausible argument was made on yesterday when the position was taken in substance that this bill was a repeal of the Sherman antitrust law, and if it became the law of the land and these associations were authorized they would at once seek to control the foreign market, and probably enter into a combination with foreign companies and cartels engaged in the same line of business, and thus reenforced and world-wide in their control of products they would reduce the prices of food animals, of grain, and of other products and raise the prices to the consumer when it suited their purposes.

If the Senator when making this argument had recited facts instead of fancies, there might have been some force in his utterances, but he was giving free rein to his imagination. The Senator overlooked the fact that this bill does not repeal the Sherman law. He had in mind one paragraph only and lost sight of all the restrictions and qualifications it contains. I submit that when this bill is construed judicially it will be analyzed as a whole and not one part separate from the other.

The Senator forgets that neither the associations, nor their agreements, nor their actions can be in restraint of trade within the United States, nor in restraint of the foreign trade of any domestic competitor, and they can not by any agreement, conspiracy, or act artificially or intentionally and unduly either enhance prices or reduce prices domestically, and if they do they violate the law of the land.

Mr. President, I do not believe anyone who has studied this question does not know that an association or a man or a company who is strong financially will not have an advantage over the individual or company that is seeking the foreign market and is not able to enter because of lack of funds. Financial strength and unity of effort beget power and bring success.

It was stated on yesterday that there was no occasion for legislation of this character at this particular time. I do not understand the position of Senators who assume that attitude. The papers have been full of information to the effect that the German Government for two years and more have been planning for the resumption of their foreign trade after the war. More than two years ago there was a conference in Paris between British business men and government officials and French business men and government officials looking to the trade after the war. Why? Because they believe and hope that this war is going to end, and when it ends and peace is restored they must live on, and make every effort to restore conditions as they were in their respective countries prior to the war. They are not waiting until the war is over to begin. They are planning now; and our business men are eager for the day when they can go into the foreign field for foreign commerce and meet their competitors on a fair field and in a fair fight, unrestricted by the legislative handicap of our own country.

One of the principal difficulties which has confronted the American business men in the past has been the fact that we did not have proper shipping facilities. That difficulty, I believe, is now solved because the Shipping Board, under the direction of the Congress, is building a merchant fleet such as was never before known either in the history of this or any other country.

Our opponents say we must do nothing now to help our business men to prepare for this great contest. The business men of the Old World are not idle. They are looking to the future. Why should we be idle?

Oh, but it is said there is no commerce now. To-day the Government is forging cannon and making munitions not because it expects to use them to-day but because it does expect to use them during the war when American armies will be along the far-flung battle line. We are not waiting for that day to arrive before we begin preparation. To say that our business men must go single handed to seek this commerce against the methods which prevail in the Old World, is just about as logical as to say that we should send our soldiers abroad with a blunderbus in contest with the 42-centimeter guns of the Old World.

Mr. President, I do not feel that I care to occupy the time or the attention of the Senate further than to say this, with regard to the amendment which has been offered by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS]. He insists that all we need, if we need anything, is the authority to organize a selling association. I have yet to learn the distinction, in that regard, between his amendment and the bill which we have presented. I believe that our bill goes a little further. I believe that it is better, because it is impossible for us to anticipate all the things which it may be necessary for us to do. It may be that the phraseology of the pending bill is not what each Senator would have it if he were drawing the bill himself; but I submit that it is fashioned after the framework of the bill of the other House. It is not subject to any of the criticisms which Senators have been making against it. It modifies, to some extent, as I have tried to point out, the provisions of the Sherman law and the Clayton law, in so far as they may affect foreign trade. They are not repealed. It does not repeal, it does not affect the Sherman law so far as it applies to domestic commerce. It strengthens the Sherman law and the Federal Trade Commission law, in so far as unfair practices are concerned beyond territorial lines.

I hope the amendment of the Senator from Iowa will be voted down. That is all I care to say.

Mr. CURTIS rose.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. CURTIS. I intended to make the same suggestion at the request of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS].

Mr. VARDAMAN. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] on account of illness, and will let the announcement stand for the day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-six Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS].

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I do not intend to consume any considerable time in the further observations I shall make upon the bill. I rise for the purpose of having a clear understanding with the Senator from Ohio and with the Senate with respect to its meaning. In the course of the remarks that he has just made he said several times that it had been asserted that the bill, if passed, would constitute a repeal of the entire antitrust law. It may be that some one in the Senate has made an assertion of that character. If so, I did not hear it. It may be that he referred to the repeated statements which I have made with regard to its meaning. If so, he misunderstood those statements. What I have said, and what I now say, is that the bill, if it becomes a law, will repeal the antitrust law so far as foreign trade is concerned. What I say is, that it is the substantial equivalent of striking out of the antitrust law the phrase "and with foreign nations."

The Senate will remember that the antitrust law makes it unlawful to enter into contracts, combinations, or conspiracies in restraint of trade among the States and with foreign nations. It is in the language of the Constitution, which confers upon Congress the authority to regulate commerce among the States and with foreign nations. There ought not to be any doubt about this; we may differ with respect to the wisdom of doing what is proposed, and there is room for honest difference of opinion; we may not agree with regard to the policies which will best promote and most certainly expand our trade with foreign countries, but we ought not either to misunderstand or disagree concerning the effect of this bill.

The bill declares that the antitrust law shall not be construed to make illegal any combination, any association, any corporation, any agreement, or any act done by virtue of such combination, agreement, or association in the export trade. The export trade of the United States is the foreign trade of the United States. To export commodities means to sell them and transport them to some other country in the world. That is our foreign trade, and this bill nullifies the antitrust law so far as export trade is concerned. There must not be any difference of opinion or misunderstanding about that part of the measure.

Now, if the Senator from Ohio believes—and I am sure he does—that our export trade ought to be conducted free from any restriction, such as the antitrust law has thrown about commerce, then he is perfectly right in advocating and in endeavoring to secure the passage of this bill; but we must understand what we are doing. We are simply ridding the laws of this country of an absolute prohibition against restraint of export trade, and hereafter, if this bill is passed, we will have no regulation of commerce so far as exports are concerned.

Mr. STONE. So far as export trade is concerned, but the bill in no wise changes the law with respect to domestic trade.

Mr. CUMMINS. It does not. I answer that of course upon the phraseology of the bill. I have attempted to show, and other Senators have attempted to show, that when we repeal all of the restrictions with regard to export trade—that is, repeal all our regulations with regard to export trade—there will be a license and a liberty in this country that must necessarily affect our domestic trade. The two things are so inseparably connected with each other that you can not strike down the regulation that covers the one without very materially affecting the other. However, so far as this particular proposed bill is concerned, it is not intended to repeal the prohibition of the antitrust law so far as trade within the United States is concerned.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator pardon an interruption?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield.

Mr. REED. But the contention has been made that the control of the price of the surplus of a product controls the price of the product; that this bill authorizes the creation of trusts and combinations to control the foreign market of the United States; and that whoever controls that foreign market, to wit, the surplus of the United States, will necessarily dominate and control in the United States.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, having thus stated what I conceive to be the effect of this bill, I turn for a few moments to the saving provisos—at least they are thought to be saving provisos by the Senator from Ohio.

The first is that nothing in this act shall be construed to make legal restraints of trade within the United States; that is, that in repealing our regulations so far as export trade is concerned we are not repealing our regulations so far as domestic trade is concerned. The proviso is unobjectionable and unnecessary. We have fallen into the habit in legislation of attaching provisos to proposed enactments simply to satisfy the conscience or satisfy—what may I call it?—the fears of the people who are engaged in constructing the legislation. It is unnecessary because there is nothing in the effective or affirmative part of the section which pretends to repeal that part of the antitrust law which prohibits restraints of trade within the United States or among the States. I therefore put aside entirely the first proviso.

The second proviso declares that nothing in the act shall be construed to make legal restraints of the trade of a domestic competitor. I repeat that the language is absolutely meaningless. There is a wide, fundamental, philosophical difference between a prohibition against the restraint of trade generically and a prohibition against the restraint of trade of a particular competitor. If it means what the Senator from Ohio says it means, then it is simply a recognition of the law that we already have against unfair methods of competition or unfair or dishonest practices in business. But that is not what it says. It again, in my judgment, is inserted in this bill simply to appease those who instinctively are against the repeal or the modification of the antitrust law. It never can accomplish anything, because if construed in its literal sense it would make illegal the restriction of the trade of a competitor in a perfectly honest and upright way. As I remarked yesterday, when you say that it is illegal to restrain the trade of a competitor, you say that there can be no business done at all, because every sale made by one of two rivals in the same business does, or may, at least, restrict or restrain the trade of the other.

I attach no importance whatever to it. I agree, however, that under the law which we now have in the act creating the Federal Trade Commission there would be found an effective prohibition against unfair methods of competition or dishonest or oppressive practices in business, but this particular proviso might as well be forgotten. There is no vitality, no efficiency in it, and I repeat that up to this time, at least, we have nothing in the statute but a plain repeal of the words "and with foreign nations" as found in the antitrust law, not disturbing, of course, the regulation, so far as our domestic trade is concerned, except that the inseparable association of foreign and domestic trade must not escape the minds of those who are about to pass on the question.

The third proviso is vicious in itself. It will have no effect, probably, upon the repeal of the antitrust law. It does not change at all the argument I am making with regard to the proposition that this is a plain, simple repeal of the antitrust law so far as export trade is concerned. But there is in the third proviso a thought which ought not for a single moment to be accepted by this Legislature or any other in the regulation of commerce. That proviso reads in this way——

Mr. SHAFROTH. From what page does the Senator read?

Mr. CUMMINS. I begin near the bottom of page 2:

And provided further, That such association does not, either in the United States or elsewhere, enter into any agreement, understanding, or conspiracy, or do any act which artificially or intentionally and unduly enhances or depresses prices within the United States of commodities of the class exported by such association.

I pass the word "artificially" with a single observation. What is it artificially to enhance or depress prices of commodities anywhere? What is meant by the word "artificially"? I shall not stop to answer that question. I content myself with saying that it defies answer, because it has never before been applied to a subject of this character, so far as I know. It is a new criterion, a new phrase, in connection with the regulation of industry or commerce. I may return to it a moment later. It is not, however, the part of the proviso which particularly challenges my criticism. I read it again with that left out, because that is independent of any other:

That such association does not, either in the United States or elsewhere, enter into any agreement, understanding, or conspiracy, or do any act which intentionally and—

Mark you, both—intentionally and unduly enhances or depresses prices within the United States.

This proviso seems to provide for the people of this country a standard which never before has been recognized, and it is the equivalent of saying that any association or agreement organized under this act may enhance prices within the United States if it does not do it intentionally and unduly. Just what would be the practical application of the word "intentionally" I am not able to say. I suppose that the rule of the law would apply, however, namely, that any man is presumed to intend the natural consequences of the acts which he performs, and in applying the word "intentionally" to a particular case I assume that if what he did or what his association did naturally tended to enhance prices, then he would come within this provision. But what next?

He is to be protected by the law unless he intentionally increases prices, and, further, unless he unduly increases prices within the United States. I should like the Senator from Ohio or any other Senator to answer me this question: Who is to determine whether the prices that may result from any act performed by any such association or corporation or combination are undue prices or not? This is not applicable in time of war. I am not arguing it upon the assumption that we need it or could need it in time of war.

Everybody admits that until the war ends we do not need any modification of the antitrust law, for we meet no competitors in any markets in the world that we can not successfully meet. I am speaking, therefore, of a time of peace.

Imagine the combination or association brought to the bar of justice. Imagine that it is alleged against it that it has intentionally and unduly enhanced the prices of certain commodities in the United States. Who is to determine whether the increase or enhancement has been due or undue? Who is to determine what is a fair and a reasonable price for any commodity so affected?

This statute is intended to give, or does give, at least, to the courts of the United States a jurisdiction which has never before been conferred upon them, and which is repugnant to every American instinct. In order to test the validity of an association of this sort, we are to enter in the courts into an inquiry as to whether this particular association has lifted up beyond the point of reason and fairness the prices of commodities in which it deals in the United States.

What is the standard for the ascertainment of fair prices? We have a standard for ascertaining the value of a service when rendered by a public-utility company. From time immemorial the courts and legislatures have applied a standard. But what is the standard for oats, for wheat, for meat, for steel, for wood, for any other of the great commodities which make up our industrial activity? Tell me what the standard is. There is none. There can be none.

Here is one producer working under such conditions that we will assume that it costs him—and now I will refer to steel—$34 a ton to produce a certain form of steel. Here is another operating under such circumstances that it costs him $50 a ton to produce steel. What is a fair price for steel under those conditions? What is a fair profit to be reaped by those who are engaged in the industry?

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. POMERENE. It has been some time since I have looked at the record of the Standard Oil Co. and the American Tobacco Co. cases; but one of the unfair practices complained of in those cases was that these companies would at times depress prices until they drove competitors out of the market, and then raise the prices. I take it that the court had to determine, in those cases, whether the prices were intentionally or unduly depressed or raised. Now, what is the difference between a case of that kind and a case such as this?

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, the Senator from Ohio entirely misconceives the Standard Oil Co. case in that respect, as well as the American Tobacco Co. case. The court at no time in either case, as I recall, entered into any inquiry as to the reasonableness of the price at which the commodity dealt in by the one or the other was sold. It was alleged that in view of the great ramifications of each of these companies it could take a particular community, and in order to drive out a competitor who had risen up in that community the price would be lowered below the cost of production, and the competitor, being weak and new, could not endure that kind of competition. Then, with the competitor removed, the price would be again restored to its former point. It was in that connection that the Supreme Court reviewed the acts of these two companies in lowering and raising prices in particular communities.

But I suspect this word "unduly" crept in here because the word "undue" was used by the Supreme Court in the Standard Oil case in determining whether the restraint of trade practiced in that case was in violation of the statute or not. I am not going to quarrel with that decision; I have no disposition to do it; from my standpoint it can be justified; but what the Supreme Court really said there was that it was not every restraint of trade that came into conflict with the statute, that the restraint must be an unreasonable or an undue restraint of trade, so as to prejudicially affect the people of the country, so as to close up the channels of commerce and transportation and to a degree that really inflicted a hardship upon the people of the country. The use of the word "undue," however, in that connection has no relation to the use of the word "unduly" in this act. You are applying that word to the price of an article, and I repeat that it would be dangerous if not impossible to remit to the courts of this country the inquiry as to whether 20 cents a pound for a particular article was an unduly high price or not, for there would be but one way in which the courts could pursue the inquiry, and that would be to enter upon an investigation as to the cost of production and the cost of putting it upon the market and then allow the producer a fair profit upon the transaction. I have just pointed out, however, that that is a course that is impracticable on account of the wide variety of conditions which surround production.

I can not believe that we will deliberately adopt a statute which inferentially says that these combinations and associations may artificially increase prices in the United States, limiting their influence in that respect only by the qualifications that the increase must not lift the commodity to an unduly high point. We will have reversed our entire policy, we will have disregarded all the learning of the past, we will have launched our boat upon an uncharted sea, for, so far as I know, there is not a country in the world, even Germany, with her intimate connection with her industrial interests, that has ever pretended to establish any such standard or apply any such rule.

I have said so much because I feel deeply upon the question, upon the abandonment of all our former ideals and all our former standards to enter upon an experiment in which this Nation will be the pioneer and which, in my judgment, can lead to nothing but disaster.

Mr. STONE rose.

Mr. CUMMINS. Does the Senator from Missouri desire to interrupt me?

Mr. STONE. If the Senator will yield.

Mr. CUMMINS. Certainly; I shall be very glad to yield.

Mr. STONE. If I may say a word before I put the question I desire to ask, I am in very hearty accord with what I understand to be the general purposes or purpose of the bill. I have for a good while thought it important that we should do whatever we could do safely to promote the export-trade business of the country. The purpose of the bill is to do that.

The Senator has been criticizing the phraseology of the bill. Just now he has been particularly criticizing the proviso in section 2 of the bill. I am in hearty sympathy with any effort the Senator from Iowa may make, for I know no Senator—I do not mean this as flattery at all—who has a finer capacity for criticizing and perfecting legislation than he.

I say I am in entire sympathy with any effort he may make to perfect the bill, but mere criticism does not perfect it. It aids it; it is the beginning of the work of perfection. But while the Senator criticizes the proviso to which I have referred, he is making no suggestion as to phraseology that would make it better to accomplish the evident intention of the bill.

Now, is the Senator against the principle or policy outlined in the bill itself? Is he against that, or is he against the mere phraseology of the bill? If it is his object to perfect the bill, then I want to work with him. If he is against the bill itself, then I would be under the necessity of parting company with the Senator. I should like to understand the attitude of the Senator from Iowa on the basic question involved. Are you for the bill, the principle of it, or against it?

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I would be very sorry to have the Senator from Missouri think that I am a mere critic.

Mr. STONE. Not at all. I do not say that.

Mr. CUMMINS. The committee of which the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] is a member, from which this bill comes, and of which I am also a member, has been considering this subject for five years. This bill was the result of that consideration, although the bill came from the House. Three days ago I spoke upon the bill for about an hour and a half, giving my reasons for the conclusion that the export trade of this country, in order to do just what it says it wants to do, required no modification of the antitrust law.

Yesterday I spoke again for an hour upon the same general subject. Both these speeches were made in advocacy of an amendment which I have offered to the bill as a substitute for it, which is printed and upon the desks of all Senators. So the Senator will see I am not merely criticizing the bill. I am really trying to provide something which will meet the demand, although I think the demand for legislation grows out of an unreasonable fear of an interpretation of the antitrust law which never yet has been given to that law.

I know that the Senator from Missouri and I want to reach exactly the same end, and I hope he will make himself familiar with the amendments I have offered. In order to make the examination of those amendments easier I will say that instead of repealing the antitrust law, which is a prohibition against restraint of trade, I have proposed that we make it affirmatively lawful for exporters or manufacturers or producers in the United States who may be engaged in the poduction of the same kind of goods to establish and conduct in any foreign country a common selling agency. Of course, that agency must not be managed so as to restrain the trade of the United States, which is just the thing that we want to maintain, and we want to expand it. I am doing everything in my power to bring this legislation to a point that will give to the producers of the United States all they ought to have. I think they have it now, but it is said there is a fear with regard to it, and I have proposed to remove that fear in so far as it can be said to be based upon an unreasonable interpretation of the antitrust law.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. I should like to ask the Senator whether he thinks the manufacturers of the United States who are seeking the export trade, in part or in whole, of the world would be satisfied with the mere opportunity, free from any legal restraint, to establish selling agencies in foreign countries? Do not the manufacturers want to go further and under the guise of securing the export trade, in part or in whole, of the world combine domestically for the purpose at least of securing raw material or combining for the purpose of securing economies in the production of the articles in our own country which they seek to export abroad? If that be their purpose, would they be permitted to accomplish it under the bill offered by the committee; and if they were permitted to accomplish that end, if I may embrace two questions in one, would not that be in the teeth of the Sherman antitrust law and be disadvantageous to the manufacturers?

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I endeavored to point out all phases of the matter yesterday. I believe that the common selling agency meets every requirement that the exporters or the manufacturing associations are willing to make public. That provision fulfills their demands, so far as I am able to understand them, as laid before our committee; but I feel that there is an ulterior design in giving or in seeking absolute freedom and liberty from any regulatory provision of the law. I know and the Senator from Utah knows there are a thousand things that they can do in the United States that will prejudicially affect the people of the United States if they are not held in leash by some provisions such as we now have in the law.

I am not willing to give them this blanket license. I am willing to give them affirmatively what they really need and what they say, or what most of them say, they really want, but I am not willing to accompany it with permission to organize any kind of an association, any kind of a combination, and label it an association for export trade, knowing that it is utterly impossible to disassociate the activity of an association organized for export trade and the industries carried on for consumption within the United States. Have I answered the inquiry?

Mr. KING. You have.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I have said all I care to say with regard to the subject. I have been deeply interested in it. I have been very fearful about it, because I know the force of the seductive arguments under which the propaganda has been carried on. There are a great number of exporters who want some legislation who are absolutely sincere and who see an obstacle in the way of the enlargement of their trade with foreign countries. As I have said so many times, in my judgment that obstacle is purely imaginary under a proper interpretation of the law, but I am willing to remove even that misty obstruction in the way of commerce. But let us not hastily abandon a statute which has done something at any rate to curb the avarice and control the greed of the unconscionable people who are willing to take everything that their genius and audacity enable them to take. I want to hold fast to the essential parts of the protection we have enjoyed for so many years.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS].

Mr. REED. If the Senator from Iowa is willing to have a vote on his amendment at this time, I shall not interfere.

Mr. CUMMINS. In view of the many engagements of Senators and the imperative nature of the work they are impelled to do in these early days of the session, I am not willing to have it come to a vote now, but I have had to accept in times past many things that I was not willing to take.

Mr. REED. While I have a few words to say in regard to the bill, I would waive them if the Senator desired to have a vote at this time.

Mr. CUMMINS. No.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I am perfectly aware, as is the Senator from Iowa and as everyone is, that the mind of the Senate is not on this bill. I have talked on the floor of the Senate this morning with at least four Senators, men of great earnestness of purpose, who expressed doubt with reference to this measure and yet who say that they absolutely can not take the time just now to listen to the debate or to carry on an investigation for themselves. One of those Senators said to me that the people of his State were freezing for want of coal. He said he was trying to do something to relieve that situation. Another Senator made a very similar statement to me. We know there is hardly a man in the Senate who does not have fifty to a hundred matters pending before the departments growing out of the military situation or growing out of the fuel or food situation. So we meet here and have roll calls, and the moment the roll call is over there is an exodus. I do not think this bill ought to be brought forward and forced to a vote under these circumstances. I think the Senate ought to adjourn for two or three days and let the committees catch up.

Mr. VARDAMAN. If the Senator is going to make a motion to adjourn, there are some matters of an executive nature which ought to be considered.

Mr. CUMMINS. I suggest to the Senator from Missouri—I do not see the Senator from Ohio——

Mr. REED. He is in the room.

Mr. CUMMINS. At some opportune time the motion ought to be made, and if no one else will make it I will, to recommit this bill to the committee. In view of the discussion which has now taken place upon it, I do not think it ought to come up before the holidays, at any rate, before we really settle down to legislative work.

Mr. REED. I was about to remark, in line with what I was saying a moment ago, that the Military Committee, which has, I think, 15 or 17 members, is engaged in an investigation of a far-reaching character relative to the entire military situation. They barely got started this morning when the bell rang for the assembling of the Senate. The investigation which they are conducting ought to go on. They are obliged to call before them Army officers, who are the busiest men in the world now and who ought not to be dragged back and forth. It is important that that committee should go on. It is important that whatever doubts Congress may have shall be cleared up and whatever suggestions Congress may have shall be elucidated and laid before the military authorities.

Mr. MYERS. Will the Senator yield to me to make an observation there?

Mr. REED. There is just a sentence more that I want to utter. The Committee on Manufactures has been instructed by the Senate to begin an investigation of the causes for the shortage in fuel and sugar. That investigation, if it is to be of any service, ought to begin at once, and it ought to be pressed without interruption or delay. Other committees of the Senate have before them matters of very great importance. It does seem to me that the committees ought to be allowed to work and that Senators ought to be allowed an opportunity to clear up their business, and that this legislation, which is as important as any which has been before Congress, outside of war measures, for years, should have the real serious attention of the Senate. I yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I am not in charge of this bill on the floor of the Senate. That is well placed in the hands of the very able Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE], who is discharging his duties very faithfully and ably. Nevertheless, being a member of the committee from which the bill was reported and knowing something about it, I have a very strong interest in the bill, and I have my feeling as one member of the committee and a Member of the Senate.

I have not been able to hear all the arguments that have been made on the bill, as I have been unable until to-day to attend the sessions of the Senate. I appeared on the floor of the Senate to-day for the first time this session, and I have been greatly surprised at some of the statements given as reasons why the bill should not be considered at this time. Some of them have been made to-day and some of them have been made on other days, within the last few days, while the bill was under discussion.

It is urged that the bill should not be considered or passed now because the attendance of the Senate is so slight and because Senators are busy with other things. That argument is utterly fallacious and untenable. The same condition of affairs prevailed before we entered the European war, and the same condition of affairs prevailed before the beginning of the European war between the warring nations of Europe. I have seen hundreds of bills during my service in this Chamber debated for hours and for days with a very slight attendance. During the debate on the Canadian reciprocity bill in the summer of 1911 I heard able Senators deliver forceful speeches with not over three or four Senators in attendance. I saw one Senator speak for several hours on the Canadian reciprocity bill with only three occupants on the floor of the Chamber, being the speaker, the Presiding Officer, and one other Senator, who was waiting his turn to follow the speaker. There is nothing in that.

The attendance of the Senate is just as good as it has ever been upon an average since I have been here, and I do not believe that Senators have much more of other matters to distract their attention now than they have had for a number of years past.

We all have committee meetings and hearings. The forenoon is supposed to be devoted to those matters and the afternoon to legislation. If we do not stay here and hold the bill before the Senate, manifestly it never will pass. If some committees have to sit and have hearings at times during the afternoons, the Senate business should not be suspended on account of that.

About three years ago the committee of which I have the honor to be chairman, the Committee on Public Lands, held hearings on water-power legislation and land-leasing legislation for three months almost daily. It sat during the afternoon as well as the forenoon, more or less, for weeks and even months, but I did not ask, and no other member of the committee asked, on account of that that all other business of the Senate be suspended and that legislation should cease because we had some hearings and could not be present in the Senate at all times.

I notice that my esteemed friend the able Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] yesterday complained because this bill had been under consideration by committees for five years, and stated that there was something suspicious about it, that it raised a very grave suspicion in his mind as to the merits of the bill because it had taken the committee five years to frame proposed legislation on the subject. Now, we have in all earnestness a suggestion to refer it back to the committee and put it under more suspicion with the Senator from Missouri by investigating it some more.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

Mr. MYERS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator from Montana must not infer from anything I have said on the subject that I thought there was anything vicious other than my explanation upon the floor of the Senate. I made that remark because I wanted to advise the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE] that the subject was not a new one and had been for a long time under examination by a committee of the Senate. It was for the very opposite purpose from the one now suggested by the Senator from Montana.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, the Senator from Iowa misunderstood me. My words were uttered with reference to the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED]; and while I have very warm regard for both the Senator from Iowa and the Senator from Missouri, I would not confuse them, because each might possibly object.

I will quote here from the Senator from Missouri. He said yesterday:

> The Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] states that it has been before his committee for five years. If it has taken the committee five years to make up its mind whether this bill ought to pass, it surely comes here under a considerable cloud of suspicion and distrust.

That was the language of the Senator from Missouri. I do not think I have misquoted him.

Mr. REED. I said that.

Mr. MYERS. Now, we have a suggestion made by the Senator from Iowa, who I know is a very earnest student of this subject and who has been a very highly valuable member of the committee which has handled it, to refer the bill back to the committee for further consideration. If having been under consideration for five years has made it the subject of suspicion, to consider it further surely would do the bill no good. If we have not sufficiently considered it in five years, I can not conceive of any good reason for referring it back to the committee, and I sincerely hope that such a motion will not prevail.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

Mr. MYERS. I yield with pleasure to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. CUMMINS. I hope the Senator from Montana will not misunderstand me.

Mr. MYERS. I hope not.

Mr. CUMMINS. I never conceal what I am attempting to do. I should vote to recommit the bill simply to prevent a vote upon it in the Senate at this time. I do not think the committee can do anything further with it.

Mr. MYERS. Does the Senator desire the bill referred right now, this afternoon, or to-morrow?

Mr. CUMMINS. But it will be a very good way to dispose of a measure which ought not to be considered at this time. There is no reason for its consideration, as I attempted to point out two or three days ago. I want the Senator to know that I have no concealed purpose about it.

Mr. MYERS. I am satisfied of that. I have never known the Senator to have a concealed purpose about anything. The Senator is always very frank and has afforded valuable contributions to the consideration of this measure; but I was somewhat surprised, after legislation of this character had been considered, off and on, for five years and over, at the Senator's suggestion that it ought to be recommitted to the committee. I certainly hope that suggestion, if again made, will not prevail.

I do not see any reason why this bill should not be kept before the Senate until it is finally disposed of. If the Senate is not ready and able to finally dispose of it now, I do not know when it will be. A bill of this character has been twice passed by the House of Representatives; it has been recommended twice by the Senate Interstate Commerce Committee; it has been advocated in presidential messages repeatedly by the President of the United States; it is recommended by the Federal Trade Commission, which has investigated the matter; and it is also favored by the Secretary of Commerce. If Senators are not ready to vote on it now, I should be glad to have the debate proceed until they are ready to vote on it, but I do not think the consideration of the bill ought to be postponed for an indefinite length of time.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I did say that the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] had stated that this bill had been before his committee for five years, and that, if it had taken the committee five years to make up its mind whether or not the bill had to pass, it surely comes here under a considerable cloud of suspicion and distrust, and I repeat that language.

If this bill has been during all these five years necessary for the carrying on of the foreign commerce of the United States, if our foreign commerce has been suffering and dwindling and shrinking up during these five years, it is very strange that the committee did not discover it long ago and make a report long ago. When the situation is such that it takes a committee five years to make up its mind whether anything at all ought to be done the Senate ought to regard the question with sufficient distrust at least to give it careful investigation.

A singular thing in connection with this bill is that when a Senator undertakes to point out that it will injure the American people by taking away their free foreign market, the answer we get is that "the Kaiser of Germany is against this bill." That is a species of logic that is becoming a little disgusting. Who knows that the Kaiser of Germany is against this bill? Who knows that the Kaiser of Germany ever heard of this bill or ever heard of its illustrious author? Who is it that has a right in the Senate of the United States to impugn the motives of a Senator and to insinuate that he is a compatriot of the Kaiser of Germany because that Senator is not willing to surrender the foreign business of the United States to a few trusts?

I took occasion to say that we did not need to follow the example of Germany; that I did not propose to take my philosophy or my politics from Germany; and I did take occasion to say that I was growing very weary of seeing Germany held up before the world as an example to be followed.

In my opinion, the writer of history, looking back and observing the events that have transpired from that distant perspective which enables a complete and perfect view, will set it down that every act of the German Government which destroyed the individuality of its citizens, which compelled them to act in response to the imperious will of an imperious master, although apparently of temporary advantage, in the end wrought for the destruction of the German people. I believe it will be written that this ghastly and bloody world war is the legitimate outgrowth of the centralizing, paternalistic, and imperial socialism of Germany. So I do not think we need to turn over the foreign business of the people of the United States to favored trusts and monopolies because Germany has handed over her foreign business to certain trusts and monopolies. But even Germany has not given these combinations, cartels, or whatever you call them, an unrestricted rein. The Government has retained some kind of jurisdiction over them; whereas it is proposed here to permit organizations to be created without any kind of restraint or control whatsoever.

Deny this as you may, there is no escape from the fact that the bill put in plain terms means this: The trust laws of the United States shall no longer apply to the foreign business. Accordingly, men may meet and organize for the purpose of controlling that foreign business. We are told that the purpose of these organizations is to compete in the European market; that side of the picture is constantly presented to us; but if they are to be organized so that they can compete in selling in the European market, they must buy somewhere, and they will buy in the United States. Hence the great monopoly or combination which you create for the purpose of controlling the selling of goods in the European market will be the great combination that will control the purchasing of goods in the American market to be sent to the European market. If these concerns are great enough to control the price of American products in the European market, then they must have an exclusive control, or substantially an exclusive control, of the selling for export market of the United States.

It follows, therefore, that the concern engaged in selling wheat that is strong enough to exercise a potential influence in the European market must be strong enough substantially to control the sales of all wheat or the purchase of all wheat for export to the European markets. In other words, you will have one exporter for the farmer's wheat where to-day there are a large number of exporters bidding against each other in the American market, and perhaps competing also with the European merchants who come here to buy for the European markets. This bill authorizes all these exporters to combine. We are told that there is an advantage in combination. If there is an advantage in combination, then naturally they will combine. We are to-day authorizing the creation of a single selling agency for American wheat. That means a single buying agency for American export wheat. If you set that sort of thing up in this country, I say to you the day will come when you will regret it.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. If the Senator from Missouri would like a concrete case of foreigners absolutely controlling the domestic market, he has only to raise his eyes and look at Cuba, where foreigners do control the production and the output of sugar as powerfully as it is possible for any combination of men to control the output of any natural product. Cuba is in a high state of prosperity, of course; she never was so prosperous as she is to-day; her export trade was never so large as it is to-day; but the sugar produced, I think averaging now about two and a half million tons, or perhaps a little more than that, is absolutely controlled by an organization made up largely, I think, of Americans, who conduct the business of raising and selling sugar. If its influence is helpful to Cuba, it is because Cuba has not a large population, and has a marvelous sugar productivity. But reverse the situation; suppose that here we were producing 2,500,000 tons of sugar a year and there was a demand for it outside the confines of the United States, how much influence would the men who owned that output have in fixing the price and in controlling the market? If they desired, why could they not cooperate with one another against the people of the United States?

Now, when we give this power to a domestic corporation controlled largely by foreigners—and we are giving them paramount rights in foreign trade which we withhold from our own people—it seems to me we are toying with a situation which is fraught with great danger to our own people.

Mr. REED. Let me take the Senator's sugar illustration. Let us suppose that the sugar production of Cuba was entirely in the hands of native owners and planters and that there were a half dozen exporters, Cubans, engaged in the business of exporting sugar, competing against each other, so that Cuba always got the benefit of the world's market for her sugar. Now, suppose that the Government of Cuba were to pass a law authorizing all the exporters to combine into one corporation, so that there would be no longer any rivalry, and so that they could substantially fix such price as they saw fit; what would we say about the Cubans? Would we not declare that they were not fit for self-government? Would we not say that the sugar combination had controlled them?

Now, what is the situation here? The proposition is to permit combinations to be formed to control the export business of the greatest people on earth. You say that that is for the purpose of enabling them to sell in the European market; but if they are great enough to dominate the selling market in Europe they must be great enough to dominate the purchasing market in America for export to Europe.

I illustrated this matter with cotton yesterday in the absence of some Senators who are now present. We know that until recently under war conditions there were a great number of foreigners who came to this country to buy cotton; also there were a great number of our citizens who bought cotton to be shipped abroad; there was an active cotton market. Suppose that this bill is passed and all exporters of cotton, as the bill contemplates, shall form themselves into a single great concern for the purpose of shipping cotton to Europe. Now, when that combination is formed for the purpose of selling in Europe, it will also be the one single concern to buy the cotton in this country for export to Europe. The cotton planter will speedily find himself with one single buyer. That is what we are proposing to set up by this bill.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, if legislation of this character were needed at any time, I submit that the defect to be cured does not now exist. The social or economic ill that it proposes to correct is not in existence. I maintain that legislation of this character, which I am sure is not needed, had better be postponed until after this fever produced by war is over. It is most dangerous, and I would warn the Senate against the enactment of legislation of a permanent character under stress of war conditions that is not needed in the conduct of the war. Things may be done under present conditions that will be regretted when we reach that point where we can see things in their due proportions and calculate accurately their consequences. I am opposed to legislation of this character at this time. I do not believe its purpose is to benefit the masses.

Mr. REED. I thank the Senator. Now, at the risk of further repetition of what I said yesterday, take the packing industry. It is well known, to begin with, that a few packing houses in the United States constitute to-day substantially the sole domestic market for all the countless herds raised in America. There is, however, a direct market for export. At the present time these various packing companies compete with each other in the purchase of the farmer's live stock. There may be some kind of an understanding or agreement which is too close for comfort, but there is at least a pretense of competition kept up. These packing companies also sell in competition with each other in the domestic market. But after the domestic market is supplied they have left a surplus which they must send to Europe and sell in competition with each other and also with the independent American exporters and with all the exporters of the world.

The result is that the farmer in America gets the European market price less the usual costs and charges incident to the business. Observe that he has the benefit of world prices because the packing houses to which he sells are throwing their surplus into the world market, and are at the same time in competition with each other in the American market for the live stock to supply the world market.

I am repeating substantially what I said yesterday, because it was as well said as I know how to say it, but I am repeating it because there are Senators here who were not here then. Let us say, instead of 25 or 30 packing houses of considerable size, there were only 3, the Cudahy's, the Armour's, and the Swift's.

Now, suppose that these three companies were carrying on the whole packing industry of the United States and shipping abroad and selling in competition with each other, then comes this bill, which authorizes them to organize themselves into one company for the purpose of carrying on the foreign business, and accordingly they organize the Swift-Armour-Cudahy Export Co. Thereupon each of these companies consigns all of its surplus to the combination company, in which they each own one-third; the combination company then proceeds to sell the goods turned over to it by the parent companies.

What follows? The first result is that immediately these three companies are able to control the price of the entire American meat export. They can put it down or they can put it up at will. The second result is that every farmer in the United States, in effect, has to market his stock that goes to Europe through that one company; for while he sells to one of the constituent companies, it in fact is all marketed through that one company. The result is that the farmer of the United States is at the mercy of the combination export company, not only as to his stock actually shipped abroad but also as to that consumed in the United States, for the price of the surplus of a product always fixes the price of the product. Moreover, when you have organized that Swift-Armour-Cudahy Export Co. and done away with all differences in prices paid by the constituent companies for export cattle, have you not necessarily done away with any difference of price on cattle purchased for the home market? How can Armour, who is buying from a farmer a thousand head of beef, 20 per cent of which will go through this export company to Europe, and Swift, who is buying a thousand head of beef, 20 per cent of which will go through this export company to Europe, and Cudahy, who is buying a thousand head of beef, 20 per cent of which will go through this export company to Europe, and there all be sold at one price, pay different prices for the cattle they buy?

Manifestly, they can not do it. Why, if Armour paid 7 cents for his cattle and 20 per cent of them went to the combine, and Swift paid 8 cents for his cattle and 20 per cent of them went to the combine, and Cudahy paid 10 cents for his cattle and 20 per cent of them went to the combine, there to be all sold at the same price, how could the parent concerns equalize the business?

The cold truth about the matter is that when you unite these companies in a common selling agency which takes care of their surplus, that common selling agency becomes the Siamese twin attachment that ties all three of them together, and all of their business will be brought under that one control. There is no escape from that conclusion if men will pause and reason about it. That is what this bill was intended to accomplish. That is not what the Senator who sponsors the bill intends, but it is what the trusts back of this bill know they mean to do.

Mr. President, this bill did not grow up, like Jonah's gourd, in a night. It is not the inspiration of a statesman. It is not the dream of some enthusiast. It is not the plan of some reformer. This bill had its origin in the brains of those men who want to form combinations for the purpose of controlling prices and making profits. A propaganda in favor of the bill has been waged for years. An organization was gotten up, I think, for the purpose of promoting this bill. This organization was known as the National Foreign Trade Council. I will not say it was gotten up on purpose for this bill, but one of the men who appeared in favor of it was the secretary of that council; and when we come to inquire who are the members of that council, notice:

The chairman of that organization, the first one on the list of these "small concerns" that need to be protected, is James Farrell, president of the United States Steel Corporation. I suppose the Steel Trust is not able to compete. Why, I know what the Steel Corporation wants to do in Europe. It wants to extend its American monopoly and make it a world monopoly, and this bill gives it the right to form that kind of a combination.

The treasurer is Mr. Walter Clark, manager of the Westinghouse Co., another weak and diminutive concern that needs to be protected lest it be crushed out by greater rivals.

One of its members is Morris Coster, managing director for the Westinghouse Electrical Export Co., of New York City.

Then come the great Washburn-Crosby Mills—I am omitting a number of great concerns—the Baldwin Locomotive Works; the International Harvester Co., by Cyrus H. McCormick; the Anaconda Copper Mining Co., by John D. Ryan, its president. Then there are Eugene P. Thomas, president of the United States Steel Products Co., and Frank A. Vanderlip, president of the National City Bank of New York, which means the entire Morgan interests.

These are the little concerns that are asking protection.

I am talking about these poor little follows that need protection. It appears they organized this foreign-trade commerce. I have no doubt it helped push the propaganda that reached all parts of the United States. The long list that the Senator from Ohio read of organizations that have petitioned Congress to pass this bill is evidence of a propaganda. The fact is plain that back of this bill is not the demand of the small exporter, is not the demand of the small business man, but is the conspiracy of the great trusts and combinations. We are presented with the spectacle of this powerful attack upon our trust legislation, being led by men who I have always thought were especially devoted to the interests of the people.

Why, I remember that when the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] came here, he had hardly landed in the seat which he has ever since adorned and dignified until he introduced a resolution to once more disembowel the old Standard Oil Co.; and now behold the nose of the trust camel inside the "tent of Democracy," with the Senator from Ohio pulling at the bits, the Steel Trust and the Harvester Trust boosting at the hips, while the president of Morgan's bank twists the animal's tail. Surely a change has come over the spirit of our Democratic dreams.

Mr. President, the statement has been made here this afternoon that those who object to combinations to control trade abroad object to any trade abroad. Not at all. We want to keep the trade abroad for the American people. We object to a few combinations grabbing that trade for themselves. I repeat what I said yesterday, and I shall then yield the floor. I leave the thought with Senators.

We are fighting this war for the freedom of the seas, for the right of our commerce and our people to travel the highways of the ocean undisturbed. In order to maintain that right we are sacrificing the lives of our soldiers, the sons and brothers of our women, and at the moment we are asking them to die for the maintenance of the freedom of the seas and the right to trade with all the world it is proposed to turn over that foreign trade, for which, in part, they die, to a few combinations and trusts!

If this war is being waged that the trusts may have the trade of America, let the trusts shed the blood; but if it is being waged on behalf of a free people, of their trade and their commerce—their right to travel—then let the trade and commerce remain theirs, even as the duty of laying down of life and pouring out of blood is theirs.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After six minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

PROMOTION OF EXPORT TRADE.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 2316) to promote export trade, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SUTHERLAND in the chair). The pending question is the amendment of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS].

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The absence of a quorum is suggested. The Secretary will call the roll.

Mr. REED. I make the point of order that a motion to adjourn has precedence over any other motion.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I want to get a quorum on that question.

Mr. REED. Why, you can adjourn without a quorum. A motion to adjourn takes precedence over the question of a quorum or anything else.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order made by the Senator from Missouri is sustained. The motion before the Senate is the motion of the Senator from Nebraska that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. POMERENE. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. STONE. I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. SMOOT. Before that ruling stands, Mr. President, I want to say a word about it. A suggestion of the absence of a quorum is in order at any time under Rule V, paragraph 2, and when the motion to adjourn is offered any Senator has a right to suggest the absence of a quorum and the roll called. No motion is in order.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

Mr. KING. I rise to a point of order. The Presiding Officer has already ruled, and there is no appeal from his decision. I call for the question on the motion.

Mr. LODGE. A motion to adjourn does not require a quorum, and it takes precedence, of course, of everything.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. That is right.

Mr. TOWNSEND. It does not.

Mr. SMOOT. A motion to adjourn takes precedence of any other motion that may be made; but suppose one Senator was in the Chamber, or two Senators were in the Chamber——

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. He could adjourn.

Mr. SMOOT. And suppose one Senator offers a motion to adjourn and the other Senator suggests the absence of a quorum. It has been the practice of the Senate that the roll has been called.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The Senator is wrong.

Mr. SMOOT. No; I am not wrong.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I should like to inquire if the roll call has been commenced?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. One name has been called and no response has been made.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I believe that a motion to adjourn has precedence, although I am personally very much opposed to adjourning. I want the business of the Senate to proceed.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. What is the ruling of the Chair on the subject?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair ruled that the motion to adjourn was in order.

Mr. TOWNSEND. And the motion has been made?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion has been made.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Upon that I demand the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The yeas and nays are demanded. Those in favor of ordering the yeas and nays——

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I wish to say to the Senator from Missouri that there is no question that the motion to adjourn, when made, was in order. That motion was certainly in order; but the suggestion of the absence of a quorum is always in order even if a motion for adjournment has been made.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. No; it is not.

Mr. SMOOT. I submit that it is.

Mr. JAMES. I call for the regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is advised by the parliamentary clerk that the uniform practice of the Senate is to allow the making of a point of no quorum while a motion to adjourn is pending. And therefore the Chair will be obliged, in order to be correct, to change the ruling in that matter.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I can not allow that ruling to stand without calling the attention of the Chair to Senate Rules, page 21, Rule XII. It shows so clearly that a motion to adjourn takes precedence over all other questions.

Mr. SMOOT. We know that.

Mr. GRONNA. In fact, the calling of the roll discloses whether or not a quorum is present. But, Mr. President, the point of no quorum can not take precedence over the question of a motion to adjourn after a roll call has been ordered.

I trust that the Chair will not revoke or change his first ruling, because the ruling of the Chair in the first instance I believe to be absolutely correct and in accordance with the rules.

Mr. CUMMINS. I call for the regular order.

Mr. SMOOT. Regular order!

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of no quorum having been made, the Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bankhead	James	Overman	Smith, Md.
Borah	Johnson, Cal.	Page	Smith, Mich.
Calder	Johnson, S. Dak.	Pittman	Smith, S. C.
Chamberlain	Jones, N. Mex.	Poindexter	Smoot

Hollis	Norris	Smith, Ga.	Weeks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-six Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The question is on the motion to adjourn. Before the question is put, with the permission of the Senate, the Chair will have the Secretary read the rule under which his decision was made, being section 2 of Rule V.

The Secretary read as follows:

V.

2. If, at any time during the daily sessions of the Senate, a question shall be raised by any Senator as to the presence of a quorum, the Presiding Officer shall forthwith direct the Secretary to call the roll and shall announce the result, and these proceedings shall be without debate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is now upon the motion to adjourn.

Mr. POMERENE. Upon that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MYERS (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN], which I transfer to the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] and vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. SWANSON. I desire to state that my colleague [Mr. MARTIN] is detained from the Senate on account of sickness in his family.

Mr. SHIELDS. I wish to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. MCKELLAR] on official business.

Mr. MYERS. I announce the absence of the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] on official business.

Mr. CURTIS. I am paired with the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] and withhold my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 11, nays 47, as follows:

YEAS—11.

Borah	Gronna	King	Sterling
Cummins	Hitchcock	Norris	Vardaman
Gore	Kenyon	Smith, S. C.

Fletcher	Myers	Sherman	Trammell
Hale	New	Shields	Underwood

James	Overman	Smith, Ariz.	Weeks
Johnson, Cal.	Page	Smith, Md.

NOT VOTING—37.

Curtis	Kellogg	Penrose	Williams
Fall	Kendrick	Phelan	Wolcott
France	Kirby	Reed
Frelinghuysen	La Follette	Saulsbury
Gallinger	Lewis	Smith, Ga.

So the Senate refused to adjourn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS].

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I move to recommit the bill to the Committee on Interstate Commerce for its further consideration, and upon that motion I desire to be heard.

The debate of the last day or two is the first discussion of this subject, as I remember it, which has occurred in the Senate. I think it is true that by far the greater number of Senators had not until a few hours ago and possibly have not yet fully examined the bill nor investigated the matter which it covers. It is too serious and grave a departure from the established policy of the United States to be carried out hastily, without every opportunity for study and reflection.

I really think that the further consideration of the bill by the committee would be beneficial. I believe the discussion had on the floor of the Senate will be very helpful to the members of the committee and would fasten their minds upon the matter as they have never been fastened before.

I do not want unduly to use a word that is found in the bill itself to delay the consideration of the bill or its final disposition, but I am so unalterably opposed to it in its present form that I feel I would be lacking in my duty if I were not to insist upon every reasonable opportunity for consideration and debate.

I hope that my motion will prevail, and if it is then thought desirable by the committee that the subject shall be again brought to the attention of the Senate it will not be difficult to do so.

Upon my motion, whenever it reaches the stage of a vote, I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I desire simply to say that I hope this motion will not prevail. This bill, or the subject matter of the bill, has been under consideration, as it has been repeatedly stated, for four or five years before the committee. I think the members of the committee at least have matured their views. I recognize that the Senator from Iowa is unalterably opposed to the bill in its present form. He is quite willing to accept the responsibility to vote against it. I certainly am willing to accept the responsibility of voting for it, and I join in the request for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The yeas and nays are demanded on the motion of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] to recommit the bill to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CURTIS (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK]. Not knowing how he would vote if present, I withhold my vote.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH]. Not knowing how he would vote on this question, I withhold my vote.

Mr. OVERMAN (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN]. Not knowing how he would vote, I decline to vote. I would vote "nay" if I were not paired.

Mr. VARDAMAN (when his name was called). Has the junior Senator from Idaho [Mr. BRADY] voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He has not voted.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I withhold my vote, being paired with that Senator.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I transfer my general pair with the junior Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] to the senior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] and vote "nay."

Mr. SHIELDS. I wish to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. MCKELLAR] on official business. If he were present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I transfer my general pair with the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. HARDING] to the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD] and vote "nay."

Mr. KING. I desire to announce that the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] is detained on important business, and that the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY] is detained on official business.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I wish to announce that my colleague, the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. WOLCOTT] is detained from the Senate by illness.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I desire to announce that my colleague, the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES] is detained on account of illness.

Mr. CURTIS. I was requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN];

The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS];

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS]; and

The Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON] with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. WOLCOTT].

The result was announced—yeas, 12, nays 47, as follows:

YEAS—12.

Cummins	Hitchcock	King	Smith, Mich.
Gore	Johnson, Cal.	Norris	Sutherland
Gronna	Kenyon	Reed	Trammell

NAYS—47.

Bankhead	James	Newlands	Smith, Ariz.

Dillingham	Kellogg	Ransdell	Stone
Fernald	Knox	Robinson	Swanson
Fletcher	Lodge	Saulsbury	Thompson
France	McLean	Shafroth	Townsend
Frelinghuysen	McNary	Sheppard	Underwood
Gallinger	Myers	Sherman	Wadsworth
Hale	Nelson	Shields	Weeks
Hollis	New	Simmons

NOT VOTING—36.

Ashurst	Gerry	McCumber	Smith, S. C.
Brady	Goff	McKellar	Thomas
Brandegee	Harding	Martin	Tillman
Broussard	Hardwick	Overman	Vardaman
Calder	Hughes	Owen	Walsh
Colt	Kendrick	Penrose	Warren
Culberson	Kirby	Phelan	Watson
Curtis	La Follette	Poindexter	Williams
Fall	Lewis	Smith, Ga.	Wolcott

So the Senate refused to recommit the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS].

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. The pending question is the amendment which I offered?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is the question before the Senate.

Mr. CUMMINS. Inasmuch as we are about to vote upon the amendment, I take the last opportunity I shall have, if it shall be defeated, to make an observation merely in explanation, for I think there are Senators here now who were not here when the matter was debated yesterday or the day before.

The bill repeals the antitrust law, so far as export trade is concerned. It abandons a policy which we have maintained for many years, and this is the first attack upon it in a legislative assembly. Never before has it been proposed to abandon the policy of the antitrust law in a legislative assembly. I have heard a great many attacks upon that law; I have heard many men declare that it had hampered, if not destroyed, the growth and development of the United States; but those attacks have always emanated from those upon whom the hand of the law had fallen.

To say that I am surprised that the movement for a repeal of the law itself can find the number of supporters who seem to have gathered around the propaganda in this body is to express my amazement in very inadequate and imperfect language. But I do not conceal from myself, and I would not from anyone else, the significance of the vote that has just been had.

The amendment which I have proposed does not repeal the antitrust law nor does it modify it. It does make clear what is perfectly clear already to every good lawyer in America, but seems to be somewhat obscure to certain men of business in the United States. I am not criticizing them for entertaining the fear, but I am endeavoring to remove its cause. My amendment simply substitutes affirmatively for the repeal of the antitrust law the privilege of organizing and conducting in foreign countries common selling agencies established and conducted by those who may be rivals or competitors in the United States. It goes no further, and it is as far as any man who ever appeared before our committee dared to go. No one who has advocated this measure before the Committee on Interstate Commerce has avowed any other purpose. The real design I leave you to infer.

Upon my amendment, Mr. President, and I assume that the series of amendments will be voted upon together, I ask for the yeas and nays whenever the vote comes.

Mr. REED. I ask to have the amendment reported.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the amendment of the Senator from Iowa.

The Secretary read as follows:

Strike out sections 1, 2, and 3, and substitute the following therefor as section 1:

"It shall be lawful for two or more persons, partnerships, or corporations engaged in competitive business or otherwise to establish and conduct in any foreign country a common selling agency or agencies for the disposition of goods, wares, and merchandise exported by any such person, partnership, or corporation to such foreign country and by agreement or arrangement to thereby lessen or eliminate competition, as between themselves, in the markets of such foreign countries: Pro- vided, however, That no unfair methods of competition shall be practiced by any such agency or through any such agreement or arrangement against any person, partnership, or corporation not a party thereto, engaged or proposing to engage in exporting goods, wares, and merchandise from the United States to any such foreign country."

Strike out of line 15, page 3, the numeral "4" and insert the numeral "2."

Strike out section 5 and in lieu thereof insert as section 3 the following:

"SEC. 3. That before establishing any such selling agency provided for in section 1 of this act the persons, partnerships, or corporations proposing to establish and conduct the same shall file with the Federal Trade Commission a copy, verified under oath, of all the agreements, arrangements, or other instruments which define the terms, purpose, scope, and conduct of such agency, and it shall set forth its location, with the names and addresses of all the persons, firms, or corporations which enter into it. Upon demand there shall also be furnished to the commission such further information as the commission may require concerning its organization, business, conduct, practices, management, and relation to other associations, corporations, partnerships, and individuals. A failure to comply with the foregoing provisions shall deprive the persons, partnerships, or corporations entering into the agency of all the benefits of this act, and each delinquent shall also forfeit to the United States the sum of $100 for each and every day of the continuance of such failure, which forfeiture shall be payable into the Treasury of the United States and recoverable in a civil suit in the name of the United States in any district court of the United States having jurisdiction of any such person, partnership, or corporation. It shall be the duty of the various district attorneys, under the direction of the Attorney General of the United States, to prosecute for the recovery of the forfeiture. The costs and expenses of such prosecution shall be paid out of the appropriation for the expenses of the courts of the United States.

"Whenever the Federal Trade Commission shall have reason to believe that any such common selling agency, or any member thereof, is violating any law of the United States it shall summon all the persons, partnerships, or corporations in such agency before it and thereafter conduct an investigation into the alleged violation of law. If, upon investigation, it shall be concluded that the law has been violated it may make such recommendations for the readjustment of the organization, business, conduct, practices, or management of the agency and its members as may be necessary in order to fully comply with the law. If there is a failure within such time as the commission may fix to comply with the recommendations so made, the commission shall refer its findings and recommendations to the Attorney General of the United States for such action thereon as he may deem proper.

"For the purpose of enforcing these provisions the Federal Trade Commission shall have all the powers, so far as applicable, given to it in 'An act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes.'"

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS].

Mr. REED. Mr. President, the sole argument that has been advanced in favor of this legislation is that our merchants are at a disadvantage because they can not have a common selling agency. That is not the real reason back of this bill, but that is the only reason that anybody dares to state for the bill. It is the only reason that ought to appeal to any Member of this body.

The amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] permits the organization of such a selling agency; it permits the organization of that agency and allows it to become as large and as powerful as it may be necessary for it to be. It does not, however, waive the terms of the Sherman Antitrust Act, so far as they would apply to other practices or other combinations than those specifically authorized by the amendment.

I desire, however, to offer an amendment to the amendment. If we are to permit common selling agencies, then they ought to be agencies that all of the citizens of the United States can avail themselves of. They ought not to be common selling agencies for a few people who may profit thereby and who may so employ them as to crowd out of the market the individual seller. They should be common selling agencies, so organized that any American citizen could have the benefit and advantage of them. I should like to have time to prepare an amendment of that character to the amendment. I have been engaged since early this morning; two important committee meetings took all my time this afternoon, and I should like to ask if this bill can not go over until to-morrow?

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, on Monday, at the request of the Senator from Missouri, I asked that we adjourn, and yesterday the Senator discussed the subject very fully and very ably from his standpoint. I can not agree with his argument. The issue seems to be drawn between this bill and the amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa. I do not agree with the Senator from Iowa as to the merits of his amendment. I think the bill should be adopted as it now is. The Senator from Missouri has repeatedly urged that there was other business before our committees that needed attention, and I am more than anxious to get this bill out of the way so that Senators may give their attention to other business, I therefore hope that the Senator from Missouri will not insist upon having an adjournment at this time.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. REED. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to suggest to the Senator from Ohio that he ask for a unanimous-consent agreement to vote upon the bill at some time to-morrow.

Mr. POMERENE. I have not so asked.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to suggest that to the Senator. Perhaps that would give ample time for the Senator from Missouri to prepare the amendment which he desires to offer, and which I think he ought to have.

Mr. REED. Oh, Mr. President, I understand that the Senator in charge of the bill does not want to yield, and I can see no reason for entering into any unanimous-consent agreement to vote upon the bill at some time to-morrow. I know that there are half a dozen Senators in the Chamber who have expressed a feeling to me that they desire to investigate this bill, and who possibly would desire to speak upon it. I think they ought to have an opportunity to do so, but the disposition is to deny them that chance and to drive this bill on. If, however, the Senator in charge of the bill thinks—it is now 10 minutes past 4—after all that has been going on to-day, he can not afford to wait, I shall simply make a motion to adjourn, and we shall proceed in the ordinary manner.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I am very sorry that I do not see my way clear to yield to the request of the Senator from Missouri. I, too, have conferred with a large number of Senators in the Chamber, and I know that they are exceedingly anxious to have this matter disposed of. I think Senators have had an ample opportunity to consider this bill. It was discussed at the last session and has been critically discussed at this session. I do not believe that any advantage will arise from an adjournment until to-morrow, and I hope that we may proceed to a final vote upon the bill this afternoon.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I sought during his speech to ask the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] a question, and he postponed it at the time. I should like to put the question to him now. Suppose this bill passes, and under it associations for the sale of manufactured goods are made in other countries; suppose I am a manufacturer, and five or six other manufacturers form an association for sales abroad; they agree upon prices; they have common agents; and I apply to them for admission to that association and they decline to admit me; what can I do?

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, the Senator from Nebraska would be in no different position that I would be if I wanted to have an interest in the great paper which he owns and edits, and he should decline to allow me to do so. I suppose I would have the privilege of establishing a new paper if I so desired, and he as a manufacturer would have the privilege of joining his fortunes with others if he so desired.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. That is what I want to get at. Then, if this bill passes we should be in the position that with six manufacturers in the field, five of them can unite to control the foreign field, and one man alone will be left in a helpless position in competing with them abroad. Is that correct? If that is true, where does the protection come in to the small owner?

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, the Senator from Nebraska does not fairly, I think—I do not mean that disrespectfully, of course—state the issue. It is true that, under those circumstances, when it has come to the sale of American goods, there would perhaps be competition between the association to which he refers and himself. The purpose of this bill is to secure the foreign market in order that our people here may have an opportunity to meet foreign competitors—the large cartels and combinations there on an equal footing.

It is to be assumed that the sale of goods abroad will redound to the benefit of the American people. If that were not so we would not seek to encourage our foreign trade. It is to be assumed that the six men—if they are together—will be better able to get a portion of that foreign trade than they would be if they were acting as individuals. That is the purpose of the bill.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Then the Senator construes the bill as meaning that these associations now being in existence, dividing the American market, and dividing also the foreign market, after the bill is passed, five of them can unite to control and dominate the foreign market, and the single institution left alone will be practically in an attitude of being driven out of the foreign market by this combination?

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, allow me to disabuse the mind of the Senator from Nebraska. There is nothing in this bill authorizing the division of territory abroad.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I have not said that. The Senator from Ohio has stated, however, that five or six manufacturers can unite for the sale of their manufactured goods in foreign fields, and they can discriminate against and bar a competitor and refuse to admit him to the privileges of that union.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I assume that they would have the right to prevent another man, who was persona non grata to them, from going into that association; but that individual has the same right to go into that foreign field and to secure the trade if he can or he can form another association. That is one of the incidents of trade.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. He can not form an association by himself. As it is now he stands on an equality with all the others in the foreign field, just as in the domestic field; he has a show, but what show has he under this bill if five men can unite and leave the sixth manufacturer out in the cold? He then is in the position of competing against a trust—an American trust—in a foreign field. That means that he will be wiped out of the foreign field.

Mr. POMERENE. No, Mr. President; that does not necessarily follow. If the five or six can by superior business acumen, by larger capital, by larger resources, sell in the foreign market better in competition with foreign concerns by combining together, necessarily the country at large is going to get benefit from it, and I think that that privilege should be granted.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Well, if combination in the foreign field is a desirable thing, why should not the Senator's bill provide that all American manufacturers shall be admitted to the combination?

Mr. POMERENE. For the very same reason that it would not be a wise thing to compel the Senator to take into his organization every newspaper man in Omaha who might be interested in that great paper.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I am amazed at the Senator's illustration. There is no more highly competitive business in the world than the newspaper business. Every newspaper is a tub standing on its own bottom and fighting every other newspaper, and it is just as illegal for newspapers to unite in this country to crush competition as it is for other business institutions to unite. But the Senator has a bill here which is designed to permit American institutions to unite for the purpose of spreading trade in foreign countries, and yet he admits that combinations so formed can be used to exclude undesirable American competition and practically drive it out of the field. I think that is a decided weakness in the bill. It seems to me that if this is to be a bill for the propagation of foreign trade for American manufacturers in foreign fields it should at least be so drawn as to prevent any discrimination, and a combination should be compelled to admit American manufacturers of a certain class to it; otherwise we simply by legislation here are preparing a means by which manufacturers can combine to crush their smaller competitors.

Mr. President, I have been rather slow to come to this conclusion——

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. CUMMINS. I want to suggest to the Senator from Nebraska what is really intended to be accomplished by this bill, or one of the things intended to be accomplished by it. It is not the establishing abroad of a common selling agency to which others might be admitted. What some ambitious men in this country desire is that corporations may be organized in the United States which shall buy all the material they care to buy of a particular kind and be the exporters of that material or commodity to the foreign country. The desire is to create a monopoly of the exporting business by organizing great institutions here for the purpose of buying everything it is desired to export to another country. Without the least imposition, as understood by the law, upon any individual, that policy will concentrate the export business to a particular country in a particular commodity or line of commodities in a single corporation. That is the thing that is wanted.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nebraska permit me to ask the Senator from Iowa one question?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I yield.

Mr. KING. Would not the consequence of that also be, I ask the Senator from Iowa, that having organized the corporation of which he speaks for the purpose of controlling the export business, of necessity there would be a direct or a reflex action upon the domestic market, and that corporation would control the prices at least of the raw materials furnished by the American producer that went into the product shipped abroad?

Mr. CUMMINS. It is perfectly evident that it would be impossible to give any corporation in this country the power to control the exports of a particular commodity without affecting the price in the United States; it could not be done.

Mr. KING. Then, if a corporation were organized for the purpose of controlling, for instance, the copper export trade, that corporation would fix the price of the domestic product in this country; and so with every other article that could be enumerated. Is not that true?

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I will not mention any names, but I may reveal the information that came to the committee sufficiently to say this, inasmuch as the Senator from Utah has mentioned the subject of copper: It was claimed before the committee that the copper producers of the United States were in a bad way. I do not know whether or not that claim can be made at this time; I do not know whether or not it would be made at this time; but it was claimed that the buyers from other countries consolidated; that is, they united in some kind of an arrangement and presented to the sellers of the United States a single buyer, and that it was desirable to enable the copper producers also to unite so that there would be presented to the buyer a single seller. That is one of the arguments that was made before the committee by certain persons who represented that particular interest. Personally I have no sympathy with that proposal. I do not think it ought to be permitted; but that is one of the things, of course, which this bill in its present form is intended to accomplish. The other is the organization of a great corporation like the United States Steel Corporation that can take care of all our exports to other countries.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, I was interested in the colloquy between the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] and the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] with reference to the publication of newspapers, and was especially interested in the reply the Senator from Nebraska made, having in mind the question of Associated Press memberships. It is true, as the Senator says, that there is no more highly competitive business than the newspaper business; and, yet, if I went to Omaha to-day and undertook to start a newspaper there I could not get a franchise in the Associated Press to save my life, even by the payment of any amount of money. The members of the Associated Press there would not permit it. I might be privileged to go in with Mr. Hearst, who runs a news agency of his own on similar lines with the Associated Press, or with the Scripps-McRae Syndicate, or possibly with somebody else, just as merchants will be permitted under this bill to become affiliated with various organizations; but I could not get into the Associated Press and I would have to avail myself of opportunities entirely outside of its agency. So I do not think the answer the Senator made is conclusive at all.

Mr. WEEKS and Mr. FLETCHER addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts asked recognition first, and is recognized.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, I do not wish to discuss this bill to any extent, but one of the comments made by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] attracted my attention. What we want to do is to develop foreign trade, and it is not so important to us as a people who does that trade. The hypothetical question which he asked might have application; there might such an instance develop as the one which he brought to the attention of the Senate; but, as a matter of fact, under present conditions none but large corporations can consider engaging in foreign trade. Take, for example, banks that are doing business in South America. There are only a few banks in the United States—as a matter of fact, only two or three have gone into the business—that have sufficient capital and resources to warrant their going to South America to engage in the banking business. So that in effect we are to-day limiting that business to two or three large corporations, while, if this bill passes, it might enable a series of banks coming together to conduct their business in South America through a single agency. It is going to be on the whole beneficial to the small people and harmful to that degree to the larger ones, and while the instance cited by the Senator might possibly happen in the development of trade, I think there will be forty cases where such a law as is proposed will enable small traders, small business concerns, to combine and get some part of the trade where there will be one that would come under the category which he has instanced.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts this question: What would be the objection to such a provision as would compel these combinations which we propose to legalize to admit any American manufacturer in a particular line?

Mr. WEEKS. Well, Mr. President, there are very few kinds of business in which there are only five or six people engaged, and to compel one business man to take another business man into partnership is a bad business principle and bad business ethics as well. I do not think it desirable or wise that Congress should attempt to do such a thing.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, I may be able to furnish other instances like those referred to by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS]. I think this bill will materially assist the small manufacturer desiring to engage in foreign business. For example, take our business in the East. We have but four concerns doing business in China to any extent, as nearly as I can tell. One is the Standard Oil Co. or its combinations; another is the Steel Corporation; another the British-American Tobacco Co., which is, I think, owned and controlled by the American Tobacco Co. interest; and the other is the Singer Sewing Machine Co. Those are the only companies doing any considerable American business in China. The reason they can do business is because of their immense capital, because they can stand the great overhead charges, and because they can carry the great stocks that are necessary to supply the Chinese merchants, who buy in small quantities at short periods.

We have not any foreign commerce, practically, in China except by these great concerns that we can regulate. They are the only concerns that can do business there in competition with foreign traders. My idea of the effect of this bill and the great benefit—and I want to say that we have considered this bill for two years, I think, in the Interstate Commerce Committee—is that by passing it we will enable the small traders in this country to combine and place their various wares before the foreign purchasers; and we will have plenty of time to regulate all these horrible things that may occur when some of them do occur. What we are trying to do is to give as many of our people as can get a chance at foreign trade a chance to do foreign trade, which they can not do now.

This bill, I think, is the considered judgment of practically all the members of the Interstate Commerce Committee, with a very few exceptions; and we want to get action on this matter, because we have considered it in that committee for years. We considered it before we passed the Clayton bill. I remember that it was under consideration in the committee in connection with the Clayton bill before that bill came over from the House. At that time we were considering the two bills, the Federal Trade Commission bill and the Clayton bill, jointly, intending to bring them into the Senate as one bill; and I think practically all the considerations that have been referred to here had some discussion as long ago as the time before we brought in the Federal Trade Commission bill.

I sincerely think it is time we were doing something and giving, as I believe, the small traders of this country a chance to engage in foreign commerce. When these terrible conditions arise which have been so graphically pictured, then we will consider how we may best regulate them.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I had not expected to say anything on the bill, and do not wish to delay a vote at this time; but I have heard repeated so many, many times what the objects of this bill were by Senators who are opposed to it, and the influences which have brought it to pass, that I felt that as one member of that committee I desire to repudiate those statements.

There are reasons why this bill should pass, in my judgment. When this war is over we are going to be brought into the strongest and bitterest competition which this or any other country has ever known. Europe has laws which permit combinations in those countries. We are expected to go in there and share that market handicapped with that kind of a condition. It is one of the objects of this bill to liberate American genius and enterprise in those fields which it will be called upon to occupy hereafter.

Another reason which has been so well stated by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY] just now was discussed freely, and that is to permit the man who is now prevented from entering the foreign field by the fact that he has not means wherewith to do business there to enter that field. Instead of promoting monopoly, this bill, in my judgment, will tend to reduce it. That is the object of the bill.

I know that the provisos that have been put in the bill have been scoffed at as of no consequence; but, in my judgment, at least, I think it is surrounded by every safeguard to prevent the imaginary evils which Senators have pointed out here. I say this because I believe the committee has given it very careful and conscientious attention. It is not laboring under any delusions. Most of these arguments have been made before the committee. Members of the committee have presented the same arguments, and they were met in the committee and understood thoroughly in the committee at that time.

While I do not wish to discount the sincerity or integrity of the Senators who have opposed the bill, yet I feel that it is absolutely unjust for them to say that there is some sinister motive back of this bill. There can be none, Mr. President. I think the members of the committee understood it very well and understand it now; and these imaginary things which have been brought up are intended, in my judgment, more for delay than for any other purpose. The whole trend of the argument has shown that; and I have been very glad, indeed, that the Senator who has the bill in charge, having given ample opportunity for full discussion, has insisted that the matter which the Senate is now ready to vote upon shall be held before the Senate until it is disposed of.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, as another member of the committee which has considered this bill or legislation of like character for several years, I desire to say a word about the influences back of this legislation, to which reference has been so freely made.

I can name some of the influences. Legislation of this character has been recommended repeatedly by the President of the United States in presidential messages to Congress. It is favored by the Secretary of Commerce. It is favored by the Federal Trade Commission, which has made an exhaustive study of our trade conditions in Europe, and has made a printed report, which is obtainable by the Members of this body, stating that there are combinations and organizations of buyers in Europe of our exported products which put our exporters at a very great disadvantage; and that body has recommended that some legislation such as this is needed in order to give our exporters a better opportunity to contend with those combinations in Europe. That report has been made and is obtainable by all the Members of this body.

This legislation is favored by the Chamber of Commerce of the United States of America and by numerous trade and export bodies of the United States, and has been really opposed by nobody, so far as I have learned, except some Members of this body who do not find themselves in accord with the principles embodied in the bill.

We not only have to combat those combinations and organizations in Europe but we have to combat similar organizations in South America and other parts of the world. One manufacturer of barrels in the State of Ohio stated before the Senate committee, in response to examination by me, that buyers of his product, barrels, in South America combined for the purpose of making purchases of that product from United States manufacturers, and would only offer so much, would offer less than the selling price in this country, and they would not buy until they got their terms. This gentleman stated that the large manufacturers could in a way and under some disadvantages do business under those conditions, but the small manufacturer, such as he, could not.

This is the gist of the entire situation, as I have gleaned from our extended hearings: That the large manufacturers and exporters in this country can, in a way, and do, carry on business with foreign buyers under those conditions, but they do it only at a disadvantage, and the small manufacturers and exporters oftentimes find themselves utterly unable to do business under those conditions; and, as set forth in the report of the Federal Trade Commission, legislation of this character is in the interest of the small manufacturer or exporter, and not of the large exporter. Large concerns can do foreign business without this legislation; small exporters can not, or only under a tremendous disadvantage.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KING in the chair). The question is upon the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS].

Mr. CUMMINS. I ask for the yeas and nays upon that amendment.

So Mr. CUMMINS's amendment was rejected.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I move to strike out of line 1, on page 3, the words "and unduly," so that the proviso will read:

Provided, That such association does not, either in the United States or elsewhere, enter into any agreement, understanding, or conspiracy, or do any act which artificially or intentionally enhances or depresses prices within the United States of commodities of the class exported by such association.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 3, on line 1, after the word "intentionally," it is proposed to strike out "and unduly."

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I commented at some length upon this proviso at a former time. I do not intend to repeat what I said then, but I desire to call the matter directly to the attention of the Senate at the instant they are about to vote on the bill.

The affirmative part of this section repeals the antitrust law with regard to export trade. The proviso is that the association which is legalized and the act or thing done which is legalized shall not artificially or intentionally and, as it is now in the measure, unduly enhance or depress prices within the United States. To me even the suggestion that an association of this sort, organized for export trade, shall be permitted under the law to artificially and intentionally increase the prices of commodities in this country is abhorrent. I should like to hear some defense for the use of the word "unduly." If the association or combination or conspiracy—I care not what you call it—intentionally and artificially enhances prices of commodities in the United States, why ought it not to be condemned? Why should it be permitted to enhance prices, provided it does not unduly enhance prices? And what is it to unduly enhance a price?

There is no one who can answer that question. I challenged an answer to it this afternoon, and I repeat the challenge. Such a thing never has been dreamed of in the legislation regulating commerce. If we are to abandon the antitrust law—as we evidently are about to do—at least let us not approve and fortify a corporation or association engaged in export trade which intentionally and artificially enhances prices in the country.

I can not understand why this language is insisted upon, and I move to strike it out.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I ask that the amendment be stated, and that the text be read in connection with the proposed amendment, so that we will understand it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Secretary will state the amendment in connection with the text.

The SECRETARY. On page 3 of the bill, in line 1, it is proposed to strike out the words "and unduly," so that, if amended, the proviso will read:

And provided further, That such association does not, either in the United States or elsewhere, enter into any agreement, understanding, or conspiracy, or do any act which artificially or intentionally enhances or depresses prices within the United States of commodities of the class exported by such association.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS].

Mr. REED. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GALLINGER (when Mr. CURTIS's name was called). The Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] has been called away on official business. He is paired with the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK].

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN (when his name was called). I make the transfer of my pair as before announced and vote "yea."

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when Mr. GOFF's name was called). I desire to announce that my colleague, the senior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF], is absent on official business. He is paired, however, with the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN].

Mr. PENROSE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS]. He is absent, and I will transfer my pair to the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. TOWNSEND (when the name of Mr. SMITH of Michigan was called). I desire to make the same announcement as before, that my colleague [Mr. SMITH of Michigan] was called from the Senate on official business.

Mr. UNDERWOOD (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as to my pair with the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. HARDING] and its transfer that I made on the last roll call, I vote "yea."

Mr. VARDAMAN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Idaho [Mr. BRADY]. He is absent, and I withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I would vote "yea."

Mr. WATSON (when his name was called). In the absence of my pair, the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. WOLCOTT], I withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I desire to announce the absence from the Chamber of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] on official business.

The result was announced—yeas 53, nays 9, as follows:

So Mr. CUMMINS's amendment was agreed to.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I think it is perfectly obvious that there ought to be an opportunity given to our exporters to maintain in foreign countries, where they are competing for trade, a common selling agency. My opinion is that permission to do that would meet the needs of our foreign commerce so far as they have been expressed by representations that have been made to the Interstate Commerce Committee or to Congress, and so far as they are in evidence anywhere through the experience of those who are engaged in that commerce. I would prefer that the bill should be confined to the granting in as few and as clear words as possible of that privilege. The bill ought to be affirmative, in my judgment, rather than to be burdened with so many negative provisos as to what can not be done under the authority that it purports to grant.

It is obvious, however, I think, that there is no opportunity to accomplish that object in any way except by the passage of the bill as it is reported by the committee and now stands before the Senate. While it is objectionable on account of the granting of certain authority and then qualifying and beclouding the authority granted, and the provisos that are loaded upon the bill will undoubtedly lead to litigation and uncertainty and difficulty in its application, I expect to vote for it as the only means of accomplishing the object which I have referred to.

I proposed an amendment, or rather a substitute for the bill, in the committee, and I am going to offer it here, not with any expectation that it will be passed, but in order to keep the record clear, have it printed, and voted on. I think that while it is only a few words it is in such clear language as to relieve the legislation of any possible doubt as to what authority is granted, and when we make up our minds as to what we want to do, if we are satisfied that that ought to be done, there is not any use in putting in provisos as to what the effect of that action shall be and what it shall not be. We shall have to take the consequences of the action if we are going to authorize it at all, whatever it may be.

I only want to add this statement of my position before voting on the bill. In the foreign countries in which the effects of this bill are to operate our exporters are competing with foreign merchants who are not subject in any way whatever to our laws, and competition with the world will regulate the trade and prevent any undue restraint.

There is another consideration which controls the situation. If there should possibly be any combination, or trust, or agreement in the foreign trade in the nature of monopoly between the merchants of different countries selling goods in some foreign country that monopoly can be controlled and can only be controlled and regulated by the jurisdiction in which it operates. So there are those two safety factors—the competition which necessarily must exist between the different countries engaging in the trade and the power of the country in which the trade is carried on to regulate, control, or prevent monopolies in restraint of trade.

For those reasons I can see no possible harm that will come to the people of this country, or of any other country for that matter, from this legislation. On the other hand, it ought to afford a means by which our merchants will be put upon an equal footing in the competition for the world's trade with merchants who are organized and who do maintain common selling agencies.

One purpose of it is to prevent the duplication of expenses. Those engaged in trade in South America or merchants engaged in attempting to establish business in Siberia or in China would now under our laws, or under the construction that is placed upon them by some of our lawyers, who are compelled to operate independently of each other and to maintain three or four high-salaried agents in those countries, are evidently at a disadvantage with the merchants of competing countries who have one agent, and who not only thereby reduce their expenses, but are enabled to develop the highest degree of efficiency in the fixing of prices and the distribution of commodities.

I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will report the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington.

The SECRETARY. Strike out all after the enacting clause and substitute the following:

It shall be permissible for any person, association, partnership, or corporation engaged in export trade to maintain, in cooperation with other such persons, associations, partnerships, or corporations so engaged in export trade, joint or common selling agencies abroad for the purpose of selling goods abroad exported from the United States.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, just one word. This proposed amendment is substantially the same as the amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa. I think the fullest authority is given in the bill as it is now before the Senate for everything that is authorized in the proposed amendment. I therefore hope that the amendment will not be agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington.

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is in Committee of the Whole and still open to amendment.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I am not rising to suggest other amendments, but there is in line 1, page 3, an amendment that was proposed by the committee. It has been, I understand, agreed to in Committee of the Whole. I desire to reserve for a separate vote the proposed amendment, found in italics in line 1, page 3, when the bill reaches the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there are no further amendments as in Committee of the Whole, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole, with the exception of the one reserved by the Senator from Iowa.

The amendments were concurred in.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment made as in Committee of the Whole which was reserved by the Senator from Iowa will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 3, line 1, insert after the word "enhances" the words "or depresses."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in this amendment.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, whatever may be proper legislation on this subject, I think a moment's reflection will convince the Senator from Ohio that the committee amendment, to which I have referred, ought not to be adopted. The words "and unduly" have been stricken out so that the section now reads that such association or combination or conspiracy shall not do any act which "artificially or intentionally enhances or depresses prices" within the United States of commodities of the class exported by such association.

It surely can not be the intent of those who favor this bill to declare that it shall be unlawful for any association or combination or person, artificially or intentionally to depress prices in the United States.

I can understand that there are some circumstances under which a combination ought not to be permitted to depress prices, but to say that no person or association doing business under this bill shall be permitted intentionally or artificially to depress prices within the United States baldly, absolutely, is a proposal that I think will not meet the approval of the people of this country, and I do not believe it would meet the approval of Senators if they would give their time to it.

What the Senator from Ohio evidently intends is that for certain purposes they shall not be permitted to depress prices, but if such an association believes the price in the United States, of a particular commodity, is too high and reduces that price to the people of the country, to make that association or person a criminal is absurd upon its face. I do not say that there may not be some kind of legislation that is desirable if a bill upon the subject is to be adopted at all, but I can not refrain from entering my protest against that particular feature.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I hope that those words will be retained in the bill. The bill as originally drawn had only the word "enhances." When it was before the Senate during the last session of Congress the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] called attention to this phraseology, and with his fine discriminating mind suggested that the words "or depresses" should be inserted in the bill. The reason for it that he gave then was that where there were exporters doing business abroad—as, for instance, in the case of cotton—sometimes those exporters, for the purpose of depressing prices in the United States, would enter into some arrangement to depress prices abroad, with a view to the effect it might have on the prices in this country, so that they might buy up at these depressed prices to ship abroad, whereby serious injury might be done to the trade, just as well by unduly depressing prices as by unduly enhancing them. It was for that reason that those words were inserted, and, with all due respect to the opinion expressed by the Senator from Iowa, I think they should be retained.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon concurring in the amendment as reported. [Putting the question.] The amendment is concurred in.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I think it would be only fair to state that this is an amendment proposed by the committee, and that the question is whether the amendment proposed by the committee shall be adopted by the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Whether it shall be concurred in by the Senate. If there is any misunderstanding——

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, there was a misunderstanding. As I understand, this amendment was inserted by the Senate at the last session of Congress.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. This amendment was offered and adopted as in Committee of the Whole. The question is whether the amendment offered and adopted as in Committee of the Whole shall now be concurred in in the Senate? The Chair will put the motion again. As many as favor concurring in this amendment will say "aye." [A pause.] Those opposed will say "no." [A pause.] The amendment is concurred in.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President, in line 1, page 3, I move to strike out the word "intentionally" and to insert in lieu thereof the words "the natural effect of which."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Tennessee will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 3, line 1, it is proposed to strike out the word "intentionally" and in lieu thereof to insert the words "the natural effect of which."

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order. An amendment of this kind was not proposed as in Committee of the Whole, and my understanding is that it would now be out of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is under the impression that the bill being in the Senate is open to amendment. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS].

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, may the amendment be again reported?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will again state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 3, line 1, it is proposed to strike out the word "intentionally" and to insert the words "the natural effect of which," so that it will read:

or do any act which artificially or the natural effect of which enhances or depresses prices within the United States."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Tennessee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, on that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

It is not my intention to go on with the bill to-night, but after it has been made the unfinished business I will ask that it be temporarily laid aside.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, December 12, 1917.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

In grateful recognition, Almighty God, our Heavenly Father, of that Providence which has shaped and guided the destiny of our Republic through all the vicissitudes of the past and made it strong and great, we most humbly and devoutly pray that Thou wilt continue to uphold, sustain, and guide us.

Help us to remember that righteousness exalteth a nation, while sin is a reproach to any people.

Hear us when we commend to Thy care the lawmakers of the land, those who sit in judgment upon them, and those who execute them, that we may press forward toward the ideals which commend themselves to our judgment.

Help us as a people to appreciate the blessings of a Republic, that we may fix our minds upon one great thought, namely, the prosecution of the war in which we are involved, to lose which is to lose all; to gain which is to secure not only for ourselves but for all the world freedom in thought and action, especially the great privilege of worshiping Thee according to the dictates of our conscience. In the spirit of Christ Jesus our Lord, amen.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

PROHIBITION AMENDMENT.

Mr. DYER rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Missouri rise?

Mr. DYER. To ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, that I may have two days, as a member of the Committee on the Judiciary, in which to file minority views on the prohibition amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks that he be permitted to have two days in which to file the views of the minority of the Committee on the Judiciary——

Mr. DYER. My own personal views, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. His own personal and individual views on the prohibition amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 2860. An act transferring Hardeman County to the Wichita Falls division of the northern judicial district of Texas.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado, by unanimous consent, was granted leave of absence indefinitely, on account of illness in his family.

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY.

The SPEAKER. This is Calendar Wednesday. The Clerk will call the committees.

The Clerk called the Committee on Indian Affairs.

COAL AND ASPHALT, CHOCTAW AND CHICKASAW NATIONS.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 195.

The SPEAKER. You do not have to move it. The House automatically resolves itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of House bill 195, with the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU] in the chair.

Thereupon the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 195, with Mr. POU in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 195. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER] has used 30 minutes. No time has been used on the other side. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 195) providing for the sale of the coal and asphalt deposits in the segregated mineral land in the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations, Oklahoma.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I ask for recognition on the bill. The bill is of the very greatest importance. The matter was before the Committee on Indian Affairs in a different form from that in which it was reported.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes; I yield.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I understand that I have 30 minutes left?

The CHAIRMAN. That is correct. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] has used none of his time.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. None whatever. The bill was before the committee in a different form. There was a hearing, a series of hearings, on the bill. As a matter of fact, the general subject has been under consideration for some years. There has been a wide diversity of opinion upon the bills that were before the committee. I am not now raising a question as to the time that this bill was reported, but, as a matter of fact, I understand that the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs got the contending parties together and sought an agreement, and that agreement was embodied in amendments, and the amendments were incorporated in the bill as it has been reported.

I was not present in the Committee on Indian Affairs when these amendments were agreed to. I have not talked with those who are opposed to the bill in the form in which it was first introduced since the amendments were agreed upon.

I asked that this bill go over on last Wednesday for the purpose of giving time to those who were opposed to the bill, so that if they still have objections their objections might be laid before the House to-day. The chairman of the committee notified the coal operators in Oklahoma and others interested. I have had no word from Oklahoma nor from any one interested in the provisions of the bill, either for or against its passage in its present form.

I make this statement so that if any question should arise hereafter as to the agreements that have been incorporated in this bill as amendments said to have been agreed to by all the parties interested, those affected can not say that they have not had an opportunity to present the matter to the House.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma rose.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I yield to the chairman of the committee first.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, the statement made by the gentleman from Kansas is substantially correct, as the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNYDER], I think, can also testify. After the hearings were had upon this bill, the representative of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Tribes, who was also an employee of the Interior Department, agreed upon by the two chiefs of the tribes, a representative of the coal operators, and representatives of the citizens' committee, met and agreed upon these amendments, with one slight exception. The attorney for the tribes said he would offer no objection to the retention by the lessee of one-half of the advance royalty, but he did not want to unqualifiedly commit himself to that at this time. This, he stated, was because the bill might not pass at that session. If this bill did not pass, then he might be called into negotiations in the future and might be asked at a future time to make further concessions than that, which he considered as a concession, although the committee did not so consider it. That is about the status of the agreement.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the gentleman from Kansas a question?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. Has this land been offered for sale once before?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The surface has been sold. The coal underlying it has been estimated or surveyed. It has not been sold.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. The gentleman from Kansas is correct in so far as his statement goes; but these coal deposits were offered for sale once, in 1905. At that time no adequate bids were received and none of the coal lands were sold. Since that time, under the act of February 19, 1912, the surface of these lands has been disposed of, except that portion that was retained as necessary for the operation of the mines. That part was set apart and reserved from sale.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. That is, proper reservations were made of the surface.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Proper reservations were made and the lessees were given the right to buy them at the appraised value, but up to this time the lessees have not chosen to take them at that price.

Mr. BORLAND. Let me ask the gentleman from Kansas a question.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri for a question.

Mr. BORLAND. I understand that a portion of this land is now under lease and that the coal is being mined under lease.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Probably more than 100,000 acres of it.

Mr. BORLAND. That probably embraces the best and all the available coal lands.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Oh, no; there is much very good coal that is not under lease; but it is farther from the railroads or means of transportation than that which has been leased and is not now available, but it is a good investment as coal property.

Mr. BORLAND. It is designed to sell the land that is under lease, as well as the land that is not under lease?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. BORLAND. Why is it not a very good proposition for the Indians to permit that coal land to remain under lease and let them get proper royalties under lease?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The proposition is for the leases to go on. These leases, some of them, do not expire for from 12 to 14 years; but there is a desire on the part of citizens of Oklahoma—heretofore not generally concurred in by some others—that this estate be closed out, that the property be converted into money, that it be distributed among those who are entitled to it, and that the administrator be discharged.

Mr. BORLAND. I suppose that is in order that the Indians may finally be absorbed into the citizenship of Oklahoma and cease to be under the care of the Government.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. That, of course, is the ultimate ambition of the people of Oklahoma, to incorporate the Indians, with their property, as citizens of that State.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. What is the gentleman's opinion about this being a good time to dispose of this property? Does he think we can get a better price for the property now than to wait until later?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I should hesitate to undertake at this time to float a large proposition similar to the one involved in this property. It is difficult to finance great enterprises just at this time; and yet it may be that organizations can be made, in Oklahoma or elsewhere, that will buy this land. It is estimated that it is worth all the way from $12,000,000 to $4,000,000,000. Nobody knows exactly the value of the residium of this estate, but it is large. There is no question that there is a valuable coal property remaining in Oklahoma to the Choctaw and Chickasaw Indians. Whether or not this is a good time to put it upon the market and sell it is a very serious question.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. The gentleman stated a few moments ago that the interested parties had a meeting and agreed on certain amendments. I understood the gentleman to say that.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. That is correct.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. I was going to ask the gentleman if in that meeting the Mississippi Choctaws had a representative.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I have not been advised as to that. My suspicion is that the Mississippi Choctaws were not there.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. May I ask the gentleman who were the interested parties who attended that meeting?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The operators, the chiefs and attorneys of the tribes, and citizens adjacent to the property.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. Was that meeting held here in Washington or was it held in Oklahoma?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. It was held here in Washington; and many hearings have been held before the Committee on Indian Affairs in the past four years upon this subject, participated in by citizens of the towns and cities adjacent to these properties, by the lessees of the properties now under lease, by operators interested in the coal property, and by the attorneys and chiefs of the tribes. I do not recall that the Mississippi Choctaws ever submitted their views with respect to the immediate sale of this remaining portion of the estate belonging to the Choctaws and Chickasaws.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. The gentleman does not doubt that heretofore they have submitted their claims?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Upon other subjects, but not upon this.

Mr. ROBBINS. I should like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. ROBBINS. What royalty do the Indians get now under the leases they have?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Eight cents a ton, as I understand.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. That is correct.

Mr. ROBBINS. What is the yield per ton per acre?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The royalty runs probably from $250 to $350 an acre.

Mr. ROBBINS. Then the vein must be very thin.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. It runs from 3 to 4 feet.

Mr. ROBBINS. Does not the gentleman think it would be better for the Indians to get their money in monthly allowances rather than to get it in a lump sum, in the way this bill proposes? Are they not noted for spending their money rather freely and being unable to care for their estates?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. That is true. That is one of the big questions involved in this proposition. But I will say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania the estate must be closed up at some time. We promised by treaty many years ago to close it up. There has been something carried over from one fiscal year to another, involving matters deemed to be of great importance, that have made it impossible to close up this estate.

Mr. ROBBINS. Why is it desirable to close it up? Would it not be better for the Government to continue to handle it and pay up gradually and yearly the sums derived from royalties on these coal leases?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. That is a view taken by many people who have an interest in the Indians but not an intimate acquaintance with them or with the local situation in the Five Civilized Tribes. Promises were made by this Government many years ago to release the Five Civilized Tribes from supervision by the Government as fast as it could be done, and the whole estate was to have been closed up on the 4th of March, 1906. That promise was looked forward to with a good deal of interest by the Indians. You will understand that many of the Five Civilized Tribes whose property is supervised by the Government are men of the highest education and business ability; they are men who are presidents of not one national bank but two, of interurban railways, owners and managers of great business properties, men who are rated financially from $25,000 to one-half a million dollars, and yet have their interests in this estate supervised by the Indian Office.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. If the gentleman will permit, it is even worse than that.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I am stating it mildly.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Not only supervised, but held as a community proposition; an individual is not permitted to use any of the funds that accrue from his royalties for his own purposes, it all goes for tribal schools. We have State schools established in Oklahoma which are almost ample to provide for the Indian children. It is not necessary to hoard up a large amount for schools, although it might be necessary to keep some.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I will say this, having made the Indian question a study for years and having been vitally interested in the welfare of the Indian, I have always taken the position on this floor and in committee and in committees of investigation and elsewhere, that the first thing to be considered is the welfare of the Indians. The time has arrived when the Indian will have to cut loose from the supervision of clerks in the Indian Office [applause] and become an independent factor in the State of Oklahoma, or wherever he lives, and run his own affairs. I do not hesitate to say that as between the ability of some of these Indians, the scope of their vision, and their general business capacity, and the general scope of vision and business capacity of some of the clerks who control and supervise them that the Indian is far superior. [Applause.] There are agents—and this is outside of the Five Civilized Tribes—to-day who are squatting on Indian reservations pretending to look after the interest of the Indians whose services are absolutely useless. They are pretending to serve men of affairs in their community, men who own farms, living in good houses, heated with steam, having bathrooms, men who not only own one pair of horses but several pairs of well-bred horses, good breeding and milch cows, with splendid farms, and running them like good farmers. Every time these Indians turn around they have to go down to the Indian agent and consult him. He is a little fellow who has been sitting there for years and generally is without sufficient energy or enterprise even to cut his own wood or to take care of the lawn of the property in which he lives, or raise his own potatoes, and he tells these splendid farmers what they may do with their farms or the surplus of their stock, this, that, and the other thing, that the average farmer in a prosperous community has to do.

There are agents that are as useless as would be a supervisor or guardian for the most intelligent man you know in your community. In my judgment the time has arrived when the Indian Office ought to be simply cleaned out of everything that is not absolutely essential in the conduct of the affairs of incompetent Indians.

There has been more waste of money in proportion to the work done with respect to the Indians than in any other branch of the Government up to the last two or three years. I do not see any way of putting an end to it until Congress says, by legislation, not another dollar for this agency and that agency, for this purpose and that purpose, and let the men who are sitting around these agencies seek employment elsewhere, where their services may be useful. [Applause.] It is an injustice to an able young man to permit him to occupy a position of ease and indolence and uselessness for years and years.

I have in mind now a fine-looking young man who has sat for seven years in the same place and is now so indolent that, while there is ample ground surrounding the property, he does not even raise tomatoes or potatoes; with farm lands under his control, he buys his hay, or we buy it for him. He buys corn, or we buy it, to feed his driving horse. We buy wood all cut and delivered and furnish a man to make the fire for him. That is what we are doing at Indian agencies at the expense of the Government and the Indians. It is becoming absolutely intolerable.

Mr. FERRIS. If the gentleman will pardon me, his words are music to my ears, for I have made that same talk for 16 years. But is it not true that if a bill was reported now from any committee for that purpose seeking to take away the salary of one of these fellows it would be opposed by a lot of men who would say that we were trying to take away the protection from these Indians?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes; and if you gave them time enough you would have magazine articles and newspaper articles charging graft, that you were laying plans for dishonest white men to get the remainder of the property of the Indians away from them.

Mr. HASTINGS. That has been the character of the attack on such legislation for the past 25 years, has it not?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. It is, and will continue to be while the Government of the United States makes appropriations in these bureaus and departments for publicity agents. There are men in the public service to-day whose only service is to prepare articles and newspaper interviews which furnish the country with a lot of misinformation, the purpose being to affect public opinion, to affect the action of Congress, not with a view to bettering Indian or other conditions but with the view of perpetuating a lot of men in soft jobs in which they are rendering no service of value to the country.

Something ought to be done to close out a lot of these useless positions. When we consider the Indian appropriation bill I shall insist that many agencies be left out entirely as absolutely useless, and I shall begin in my own State. The conservation of the useful manhood of the men in many of these positions will be affected by putting them out on their own resources. They are as useless and as indolent as any Indian, and will become as helpless as the Indian if they are permitted longer to be pampered by the Government in positions in which they are rendering no service of value.

Mr. Chairman, as to this bill, I have only one question and that is whether or not in a big way this is a good time to place the property upon the market? It is a very valuable property, and whether or not it will bring the price that it is worth at this time is a matter of very serious consideration. I suggest also that when the bill is taken up for consideration under the five-minute rule the provision for the expense of a further survey of the amount of coal be stricken out for the reason that there is now on file in the office of the Secretary of the Interior ample data to enable the Secretary to ascertain the amount of the coal that underlies the surface that is now proposed to be sold.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. The gentleman is aware of the fact that two appraisements have been made of this property?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. One, of course, was a very exorbitant appraisement by people who knew nothing about the value of coal, running up to billions of dollars, I think, and the other was an appraisement by practical coal men amounting to something like $12,000,000, as I recollect. These two appraisements are so widely at variance that the Secretary thought he ought to have the right to fix another price on these lands, and he did not feel like taking the responsibility of selling this property without being given that right. As the gentleman knows, there is a proposition in the bill to have three appraisers, one to be appointed on the recommendation of the chief of the Choctaw Nation, one by the governor of the Chickasaw Nation, and a third upon the recommendation of the Secretary, all to be appointed by the President.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. That provision was put in out of deference to the chief of the Choctaw Nation and the governor of the Chickasaw Nation. They thought that when the final value of these coal deposits was fixed they ought to have a man present to see something about it, and the provision was inserted out of deference to Gov. Johnson and Chief Lock. I have no interest in it except such deference as I have for those gentlemen.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Such an appraisement as would be made by a committee of that kind would be a summary of the drill holes that have been made that are now on file in the office of the Secretary of the Interior and of the reports that are now on file. It is easy enough to take them from the office of the Secretary of the Interior or from the office in Oklahoma and estimate from the drills that have been made upon this property.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I think the appraisement ought to be made. I think the Secretary is right about that, but I have no objection whatever to having that appraisement made from the data now on hand without the taking of a single bit of other information.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. LENROOT. Does not the gentleman from Oklahoma think the entire matter of the appraisement should be left with the Secretary, and that if he is satisfied to take that data that exists, he should be permitted to do so?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I have just stated that I was content with that, and this other proposition is put in the bill only out of deference to the chief of the Choctaw and the governor of the Chickasaw Nations.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Under the language of the bill I think there could be a very elaborate and expensive survey of the property.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. We went into that with the Interior Department officials, and they assured us that they expected to make an appraisement from the records already on file in the Indian Bureau.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. But the language incorporated in the bill does not confine him to that.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I have no objection to confining him to the records now on file, because that is what the Secretary expects to do.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. It has been claimed, and whether the claim is well founded or not I do not know, that there are Indians and Indians, and that the smart Indians have cheated those who are not so smart, and that most of them are not smart.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. There is a good deal of humanity about the Indian. He is very, very much like the white man. Some of them are smart and some of them are not. Some of them will beat a white man just as readily as they would an Indian. I would not take my chances with a great many Indians I have seen, in a business deal.

Mr. CANNON. And with opportunity given for the utilization of proper capital, the smart fellow would overreach if he could his red brother?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. There is no greater disparity between Indians than there is between white men.

Mr. CANNON. Does the gentleman measure his words covering Indians throughout the United States, or even those in Oklahoma; does the gentleman measure his words when he makes that statement?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. There is a cunning wisdom even in the blanket Indian. He knows a great deal more than he will tell. He measures a man's motives and protects himself in many ways against both the Indian and the white man.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Some white men tell more than they know.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. If the gentleman's statement is correct, now something has happened in the Indian territory or the balance of Oklahoma and throughout the country where it is alleged, and in some instances I believe to be true, that while the Indian gets good bargains once in a while he has been swindled twice in a while, and that is being done under the supervision we have to-day in Oklahoma.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, what the gentleman from Illinois said is absolutely true. The Indian is no different from the white man. I have heard of cases of a smart white man taking advantage of his weaker brother, and the Indian is just as much a human being as the white man. Now, I agree with the gentleman from Illinois that sometimes Indians make good bargains, the uneducated Indians, but usually a bad one. The record shows us that when the Indian tribes made a good bargain with the white man's Government sometimes the white man has repudiated that bargain. This is an instance in which the Indian has made a good bargain with his white brother. The bargain for the sale of these coal deposits and the division of the funds among the different members of the tribe was made in 1902, the sales were to be made in three years, and the estate closed up by 1906. It is already some 12 or 15 years delayed, and what we ask now is that the white man keep his bargain with the Indian, which is a good bargain for the Indian.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has 25 minutes remaining; he has used 35 minutes.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNYDER], a member of the committee.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, as a member of the subcommittee on this measure I have attended, I think, all the hearings and have gone as deeply into this question as was possible during the time at our disposal. I believe that this is a proper measure; I believe that it has a tendency toward which the Government should carry on its activities with the Indians. It is the advertised policy, at least of the Government, to close up its affairs as quickly as possible with the Indians and get rid of them as quickly as possible. At least that has been my policy and my desire in the three sessions I have served on the committee. It seems to me that it is the policy of the Indian Department, however, not to let loose any Indian until he absolutely tears himself away from it. This is a measure that is justifiable and at this particular time I believe it would be proper to attempt to dispose of these mineral rights. There certainly, I think, never will be a time when coal will be more greatly needed than it is to-day and there need be no fear on the part of any gentleman of this House about the Indians getting their share of the property too quickly, whether it is in the form of royalty or in the form of purchase price. The department exercises the jurisdiction over what shall be given to the Indians from year to year and it has been very difficult since I have been a member of the committee to distribute the money that was actually on hand to which the Indian was entitled. I am heartily in favor of this measure inasmuch as all parties that are interested seem to agree that this is the time and this is the proper way to dispose of the property and eventually get the money from the Indian to the Treasury and finally into the hands of the Indian and get him finally broken away in his arrangements with the Government over his affairs.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNYDER. I will.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. Did I understand that the primary object of this bill is to dispose of the property as soon as the money gets into the Treasury by distributing it to those entitled to it?

Mr. SNYDER. It would be my desire and my idea as a member of that committee to do that very thing. Whether it is the committee's policy or not to do that I woud not undertake to say. This bill does not attempt to do that thing.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. If there is some money in the Treasury, as soon as it comes in the object would be to distribute it?

Mr. SNYDER. My object would be that if we make an agreement with the Indians to do a certain thing, to do it as quickly as possible after the agreement is made and as nearly as possible upon the date agreed upon. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD].

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I am lead to believe from the remarks of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] that the Choctaws and Chickasaws and other Indians in Oklahoma are a far superior kind to the Indians that are general throughout the Northern States, and particularly those whom I know about in Wisconsin. But Indians the country over, I venture to say, have the same traits. A few are enterprising and industrious, but the great majority are indolent, shiftless, and are unable to conserve their own property.

I can not subscribe to the policy that we should sell and dispose of all of the property of the Indians throughout the country and apportion and allot the money to them, and then have them wards of the Government of the United States or wards of the individual States.

We have attempted in Wisconsin to try to make the Indians work. Some 10 years ago it was proposed to establish a Government sawmill on the Menominee Indian Reservation, with the idea that we could utilize the time and energies of the Menominee Indians. Some gentlemen on this floor opposed that very humanitarian, and I might say, judging from the results that have followed, chimerical proposition. The Indians had something like $3,000,000 in trust funds. We went ahead, following this proposal, and established a modern sawmill at Neopit. We built Government roads and railroads on the reservation and spent of the $3,000,000 of the trust fund of the Menominee Indians $2,000,000 as an investment in the plant, and yet nothing is there resulting to the benefit of the Indians save the standing buildings and roads and railroads that were established and erected by the Government at the expense of "Poor Lo."

They may have a different kind of Indian down in Oklahoma, but from my knowledge of the Indians, and I have seen a few of them, I believe they are the same everywhere. There are superior ones in each tribe, but they are the exception. They are our wards. It has been the policy of the Government for years back, recognizing their nature and characteristics, to protect them as wards of the Government and not dispose of their property to the highest bidder, but to hold the property in trust.

A very important proposal is before the House to-day, involving the disposal absolutely of 445,000 acres of good coal land belonging to these two Indian nations. Over 100,000 acres of those coal lands have been leased, and on very favorable terms for the Indians, running for a period of 30 years, and with leases which will expire in something like 15 years at the latest. True, the Government did enter into an agreement, through a duly authorized commission, providing for the sale of these Indian lands. But it is the first time, gentlemen, in the history of this House when we have subscribed to the policy of selling coal lands. We all know that coal lands are a monopoly, and if we were starting this Government to-day with the possession of the coal deposits throughout the country as we know them to be, there would not be anyone in this House, there would not be a majority of this House, at least, who would subscribe to the policy of allowing the coal lands to be sold outright. It would be necessary as a governmental policy to have the Government hold control of the coal fields and dispose of the coal mines under a leasing proposal. If there is a policy to which this House has subscribed in late years, it is the policy of leasing our natural resources.

It would be far better, in my opinion, and not only for the welfare of the Indians but for the welfare of the people of Oklahoma, to have the Government, if it was necessary to carry out the agreement to-day with these Indians, for the Government itself to purchase these lands and then to lease them for the benefit of the people, not only of Oklahoma, but the country tributary to Oklahoma.

This bill, I think, is open to criticism in another particular, and I direct the attention of the committee particularly to that. That is giving those who have a leasehold estate the prior right to purchase the fee at the price of the highest bidder. I can not understand just because a corporation has taken a leasehold on property why it should be given a prior right to purchase it at the maximum figure somebody else may wish to offer. Suppose an ordinary tenant of a business property should be given such a privilege, it would not be to the interest of the outside public to bid and raise the price for that property held by a lease. There is no interest in an outside bidder making a bid on a property which he knows he would not have the right to own when the holder of the leasehold estate has a prior right to obtain it. There should be no greater privilege extended to the owner of a leasehold than the one who has not a leasehold. And yet this bill provides that the owner of a leasehold shall have the right to purchase the property at the bid made by the highest bidder.

Mr. LENROOT. And that may be less than the appraised value?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. If the gentleman will permit me, we have an amendment providing that it shall not be less than the appraised value.

Mr. STAFFORD. Of course. Even if the amendment as suggested be incorporated, it still takes away the incentive to any third party to go and bid on that property. As the bill was originally introduced by the gentleman from Oklahoma, and which the Department of the Interior reported on, there was no such privilege granted to the owners of the leasehold. That was an afterthought. This bill as it is framed seems to be, in that particular at least, entirely to the interest of the holder of the leasehold.

Now, coming to the question as to whether it is desirable at the present time to dispose of the land.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. I will.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. What is the situation? Does the lessee in some cases have a large investment of personal property that would be a loss to him in case he is not permitted to purchase the land?

Mr. STAFFORD. He has not a large investment, and even if he has it would be more to his interest to bid higher on the property than some outside person. The gentleman can see that. Why should the Government give a prior right, an exclusive right, to a person who happens to have the leasehold, running only maybe, in the longest tenure, for 15 years more, and say that he shall have the right to purchase it at the price fixed by somebody else?

There are two motives involved which I am protesting against. There is no interest in an outside party going and bidding on that leasehold estate, because he knows he will not be able to get it when the owner of the leasehold has the first right. Next, and the corollary, it is directly to the interest of the owner of the leasehold. Any person can see that that would be directly to the benefit of the holder of the leasehold and not to the benefit of the outsider.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I think, if the gentleman will permit me, that this leasehold is not permitted to be sold, according to former language in the bill, anyway, at less than the appraised value. I want to correct the gentleman's statement.

Mr. STAFFORD. Right in that connection, if the gentleman will permit——

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. If there is no bidder on this leasehold property, then under the general clause of the bill it will be open later on to other bidders. It all tends to benefit the owner of the leasehold. Now, I want to ask the chairman of the committee this question.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Why do you give that decided benefit to the owner of the leasehold?

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia). The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. STAFFORD. I ask that the gentleman give me more time.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I give the gentleman two minutes.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman from Oklahoma had a half hour of time.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. My time has all been spoken for.

Mr. STAFFORD. Let me have three minutes, and the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] will give me two minutes.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I give the gentleman two minutes.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Very well; I yield to the gentleman three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for five minutes more.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. With reference to the improvements on the land I know the gentleman does not want a wrong impression to get before the House.

Mr. STAFFORD. I admit that there is some improvement.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. A vast amount of money is invested there by the lessees. In one instance a lessee who appeared before our committee said that he paid $100,000 for the improvements that he had purchased from another lessee and had placed $400,000 additional improvements on the property. That is half a million dollars.

Mr. STAFFORD. How many years has that lease yet to run?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Fifteen years. The leases were all made from 1900 to 1902 and for 30 years.

Mr. STAFFORD. But there is no denying the fact that the owner of the leasehold will have a decided advantage in bidding on that property under the terms of this bill. Now, why should he have such an advantage? It is far better for the interests of the owners that the money should accrue to the benefit of the Indians in the royalties that will be paid in the next 15 years.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes; I shall be very glad to yield, but my time is running. I had another thought to submit.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. The gentleman asked why should the lessee be given this advantage. When the lessee took this lease with the Indian owners it was away back in 1900 and the lease was made for 30 years. He went in with the Indian as a landlord, and the Secretary of the Interior as an arbiter between him and the Indians. Now, you are changing the terms of the lease in the middle of the life of that contract.

Mr. STAFFORD. I say it is far better for the Indian trust fund to allow that lease to continue under favorable terms with the Indians than under such conditions as are provided here.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. The Indians say not.

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, there are always Indians who wish to get control of the money, and yet we have a fiduciary function to perform with reference to these holdings, to determine what is best for the interests of the Indians.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Yes; and we have given a pledge to them to sell these lands.

Mr. STAFFORD. We would be keeping that pledge by selling the remainder of the acreage that is not subject to this leasehold and selling the remainder of the estate that is subject to leases, so that the lessors will be protected and the lessee also will be protected.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. The gentleman knows that only about 40,000 or 50,000 coal-bearing acres are left. There are only 100,000 acres leased and 335,000 acres not leased.

Mr. STAFFORD. Now, as to the question whether or not this is a favorable time at which to sell this property, I accept the statement that we are under agreement to sell this land for the benefit of the Indians, but I question whether the time at present is opportune for selling this property. We all know that banks are declining to advance loans; bankers are apprehensive of business conditions, and they are calling in their loans; they are declining to advance money on building projects, even when the security is gilt-edged. These properties will require, maybe, millions and millions of dollars in order to get the full value for them, so as to have the Indians' rights protected. The purchasers will necessarily be obliged to obtain loans from the banks. Although the price of coal is high that does not necessarily determine that the sale price will be accordingly high. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SNYDER] said that this is a most favorable time to sell coal, because coal is needed. Yes; it is needed, but it is not scarce because there is not coal to be mined, but it is scarce because there are not operatives and labor available to work the mines. That is the reason why coal is scarce. There are plenty of mines available for working, but the laborers are not present to mine the coal.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. I notice that of these appraisers one shall be appointed upon the recommendation of the Choctaw Tribe and one on the recommendation of the Chickasaw Tribe, and one on the recommendation of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. What becomes of the Choctaws of Mississippi?

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. That is what I want to ask.

Mr. STAFFORD. I know when the gentleman rises he always has the Choctaws of Mississippi at heart.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has again expired.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am sorry my time has expired, so that I can not enlighten the gentleman from Mississippi on that subject.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER] is recognized.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Does the chairman of the committee desire to use some of his time now?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Not at the present time.

The CHAIRMAN. Then the Clerk will read.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. No; one moment. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, last Wednesday we had some controversy as to whether the Secretary of the Interior had favorably recommended this bill. After some discussion, as those who were then present will remember, it was admitted by those in charge of the bill that there were certain provisions of the bill that had never been considered by the Secretary of the Interior, and hence there is really no report of the department on those provisions.

Since that time I have had opportunity to further examine this bill, and I have discovered other provisions in the bill that have not only not been recommended by the Secretary of the Interior, but in the bill that was pending in the last Congress, on which the Secretary reported——

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Does the gentleman say there is no report on this bill?

Mr. LENROOT. There was not last Wednesday, from the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. The gentleman called attention to that last Wednesday, and I sent down to the Secretary and now have a report.

Mr. LENROOT. The House has not the benefit of that report.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I could not have it printed without printing another committee report. I tried to have it printed, but I could not print it without making another committee report.

Mr. LENROOT. I am entirely correct in my statement. If the gentleman has a report from the Secretary of the Interior that nobody has ever seen, the membership of the House can not be charged with knowledge of the existence of such a report.

But I want to repeat what I said a moment ago, that in the report which the Secretary of the Interior made upon the bill introduced in the last session he made a recommendation in very positive language that is not included in this present bill, notwithstanding the statement of the committee. That is, that in the bill providing for the reoffering of these coal lands at the end of one year the Secretary recommended that an amendment be inserted providing that at that reoffering the lands should be sold at not less than the appraised value. He recommends that amendment, notwithstanding the fact that the previous bill had a provision with regard to appraisement. No such provision as that recommended by the Secretary is found in the bill now before the committee, and as this bill now stands a premium is offered to responsible coal operators not to bid at all, because at the end of a year the Secretary is required to reoffer the land without regard to the appraised value.

Mr. HASTINGS rose.

Mr. LENROOT. I can not yield. I am stating the fact. At the end of a year the Secretary is required to reoffer the land for sale without regard to the appraised value, and then, if it is not sold, the Secretary is authorized, within six months, to advertise again, and to sell these coal lands without any regard to the value of the same, so far as the appraisement is concerned.

I shall take that up under the five-minute rule, but I want to say that much has been said here about a solemn agreement with the Chickasaw and Choctaw Indians for the sale of these lands. But in that very agreement it was provided that the Secretary of the Interior should have the right to reject any bids that he might deem inadequate.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. That is certainly provided in the second and third sections of this bill.

Mr. LENROOT. I understand; but the gentleman has made the flat statement that here was a solemn agreement to sell these lands, while the fact is that here is an agreement to sell these lands provided a fair value can be obtained for them.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. That is provided as to every sale under this bill.

Mr. LENROOT. We will see about that. And now as to the solemnity of this agreement: The very next bill that this committee will call up, I assume, is one appropriating $600,000 for certain Creek Indians, and so far as I know it is a meritorious bill, and I have given it some examination; but when we come to that bill we find that some years ago $600,000 was appropriated for these same Indians and accepted by them in full compensation for their claims against the Government. There was an agreement that was improvidently made upon the part of the Indians, and this committee says that in that case Congress should pay no attention to the agreement, but that in this case it should be solemnly kept. The fact is that in all these cases, the Indians being the wards of the United States Government, we should have the welfare and the interest of the Indians at heart, and in the sale of these lands, if they are to be sold, they ought not to be given away. They ought to be sold only when the appraised value can be obtained. [Applause.]

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. What is the time remaining on each side?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma has 28 minutes.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. How much has the gentleman from Kansas?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas has seven minutes.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS].

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, this bill, as I understand it, proposes to sell 445,000 acres of reserved coal lands, the property of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Indians in Oklahoma. One hundred and eighty thousand of the four hundred and forty-five thousand acres are covered by leases held by 113 mining companies or corporations.

A treaty was made with these Indians in 1902, 15 years ago, promising that if the Indians would allow the State to be opened up the Government would sell their coal lands, their town sites, and their other surplus property and divide the money and give them a final settlement. At all times during the 15 years since that treaty the Indians have earnestly hoped that the Government would do what it promised to do when they let the white men come in and settle the State. Both of their governors, or principal chiefs, as they are called, ask that this be done. Every Indian of every kind and character, whether savage or civilized, wishes to have these coal lands sold. When we step into the State the first question asked by them is, "When are you going to sell our property? When are you going to divide our money? When are you going to do what the Government said it would do?" The Oklahoma delegation have felt it their duty, and we have believed that the House would feel it to be its duty to do the exact thing that the Federal Government promised 15 years ago that it would do within a three-year period.

Now, a word about the bill itself. The first section authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to sell these 445,000 acres of coal lands under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe. What will the Secretary do? He will make a great book of rules, preparing for this sale and safeguarding it, and seeing to it that no fraud is had, and that there is no by-bidding, and seeing to it that no mistakes or errors are made in the securement of the highest sum possible for these Indians.

Now, the second paragraph provides for the appraisement. I understand there is a little controversy among the committee as to whether this land ought to be appraised a third time or not. Personally, I hope that will be done, if it can be done without too much delay and expense, although the lands have been appraised twice. This provides for a third appraisal.

What does the next paragraph do? It says that there shall be three appraisers, one appointed by the President, one by the principal chief of the Choctaws, and one by the principal chief of the Chickasaws. That makes a trio of the two tribes and the President of the United States appointing these three men.

Let us see what is next. The compensation to be paid these appraisers is to be fixed by the President. I assume that means the Secretary of the Interior, because, of course, the President will not have any time to give to it personally. It means that Mr. Secretary Lane will pay neither too much nor too little to the men who are to perform this task. I think every man in the House who knows Secretary Lane knows that is true.

The appraisal is to be made by legal subdivisions and within six months.

Section 2 provides for adequate advertisement, so that everyone will have a full opportunity to bid and buy in the open market, where he can buy under the best conditions.

The bill provides, on page 2, lines 20 and 21, that the property must bring the appraised value. If the Indians themselves and the President of the United States appoint the appraisers, and if the land must bring the appraised value, how can there be any chance for speculation there?

The bill provides that 20 per cent of the money shall be paid down and 20 per cent each year for the four succeeding years. It was thought by the Secretary of the Interior and by the committee and by the Indians that that was the way to get the highest price. If you sold for cash, the poor man could not buy and the rich man would buy too much.

The second sale is to be one year after the first sale is to be concluded. It, too, must bring the appraisement, and it, too, may be rejected.

Mr. LENROOT. If the gentleman will pardon me, in the second sale there is no provision for its bringing the appraised value.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. If my colleague will yield, I would like to ask what this language means?—

The Secretary shall have the right to reject any and all bids.

Now, I do not object to a provision that it must bring the appraised value, if the gentleman from Wisconsin wants to put that in there.

Mr. FERRIS. Let us see who is right. Page 3, section 3, it provides that the sale shall be under rules and regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior. What do you think the Secretary of the Interior would prescribe? Of course, that it must bring the appraisement in every instance.

Mr. SNYDER. If the gentleman from Oklahoma will pardon me, I will say that as far as the subcommittee was concerned, that was their understanding of the language.

Mr. FERRIS. Yes; but if the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] thinks it necessary, he can put that in.

Now, the third sale, after it has been offered twice under the rules and regulations by the Secretary of the Interior, with full power to reject any and every bid, at last it provides for a sale that is a final cleaning up and getting rid of it. The Congress itself, the Interior Department, and the Indians themselves do not want this to last forever, and after it has been twice offered under all the rules and regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, then it is provided that there shall be a final cleaning up, as it should be. This will relate to remnants. This has been twice appraised. It will have been twice offered. It must be wound up; there must be some finality to this treaty pledge.

Let me go a little further. All of these sales are subject to the rights of the lessee. The lessees who have valid contracts with the Federal Government do not want their rights swept away. To do that would be humiliation to the State, the Congress, and the Government that did it, and I assume that no one wants to do it. It makes rebates to those who purchased the surface under the act of 1912. Preference is given to the State to buy the coal lands on which the penitentiary is situated. They bought the surface, and the State does not want the land sold out from under them, but they are to pay the appraised price. I assume everyone will agree to this. I assume this is as it should be.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FERRIS. I will.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. In reference to the second sale, what does the gentleman think of this suggestion of Secretary Lane on page 4 of the report?—

This is too valuable an estate to offer for sale "without regard to the appraised value," as proposed in the second offer, and without conditions as proposed for the final sale.

Mr. FERRIS. That is the question raised by the gentleman from Wisconsin, but it is the opinion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNYDER] and good lawyers that the language provides for that. If there is any doubt about it, it can be made clear, but anyway the Secretary of the Interior has the power to make rules and regulations for each sale and has the power and the right to reject any and all bids.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. But Congress ought to fix it and not leave it to the discretion of any executive officer. It is the property of the United States, or property over which the United States has supervision.

Mr. FERRIS. It is not national property at all. The gentleman from Wisconsin is too good a lawyer and too old a Member of this House to say that.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I did not mean to say that it owned it in fee, but it controls it as far as the sale is concerned.

Mr. FERRIS. It controls it so far as the Federal Government is willing to slap in the face their solemn promise. The property was given to these people 100 years ago if they would surrender their property in Mississippi and the East. They did what the Government wanted them to do, and they are now trying to get the Government to do what the Government promised to do.

Now, at the end of this bill there is an appropriation of $50,000 of the Indian money—not one cent during these war times is taken out of the Federal Treasury. There is a grave doubt whether or not the Federal Government is not obligated to pay for it out of its own money, but the provision here is that it shall be paid out of the money belonging to the Indian tribes after the property is sold. And after the property is sold, after they have got all it could get from the highest bidder, the money is to be given to the Indian tribes to whom it belonged. The Indians have been very patient. They ask only their undoubted rights. They are entitled to it; it is theirs. We are truly representing them. It deserves to pass without a dissenting vote.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MCKEOWN].

Mr. MCKEOWN. Mr. Chairman, a great deal of this land is in my district. I want for a moment to answer the argument of gentlemen in reference to the condition of these mines. These mines can not be operated as modern mines should be, in accordance with the laws of our State, with only a leasehold. The stripped pits that are adjacent to these mines, where the coal has been stripped from the surface, collect water, which flows or seeps into them and has destroyed valuable property, so that only about one-half of the coal can be taken from these lands under the present system of mining.

This occasions a serious loss to the Indians, as they are being paid a royalty of 8 cents a ton for all coal mined. The inability of the present operators to procure sufficient financial aid with which to construct modern mines with the latest mine equipment necessitates the mining under what is known as "the room-and-pillar method," which causes a loss of one-half the coal.

The failure to pass this bill would, in my judgment, indirectly affect the safety of hundreds of miners working in that district. The present mining conditions there are not what they ought to be, and as the years go by it follows that near the end of the term of the leases the conditions will grow worse and will result in the loss of the lives of miners and the abandonment of the mines.

Under the present lease system coal mining in this segregated district has not been satisfactory to the operators, miners, or the public generally.

Many of the miners remain in the field because they own their own homes and can not move without great financial loss, and the operators can not dispose of their mines, and the public is unable to get sufficient coal and at reasonable prices.

Gentlemen object to this bill on the ground that the Indians should be protected. They evidently overlook the purpose of this act. I have frequently heard a great deal of objection to efforts on the part of Indians to get their money out of the Treasury of the United States, but this is the first time I have heard objections being made to putting his money into the United States Treasury. This bill simply has for its purpose the changing of the character of the trust property of these tribes—a sale of the residue of their estate, namely, the coal and asphalt remaining under approximately 445,000 acres of land.

Some gentlemen are fearful of the consequences to the Indian. They certainly never have looked into the condition of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Indians. Whenever they investigate these conditions in Oklahoma where these people live they will be convinced beyond peradventure that these Indians are being troubled with too much red tape. The competent Indians of these tribes are the peer of any people anywhere. The incompetent Indians of these tribes ought to be and are protected by the United States Government, and I know that the pro rata portion of each Indian of the tribes who is incompetent will be properly safeguarded whenever Congress in its wisdom shall agree to pay the same out to them. I concur with the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] in his remarks as to the policy of cutting loose the competent Indian from the red tape of the Indian Bureau. The red tape in the Indian Bureau is causing greater dissatisfaction among the Indians of Oklahoma than the delays of the Government in carrying out Indian treaties.

Under the treaty of October 18, 1820, the Choctaw Indians agreed to cede to the United States 4,000,000 acres of land in the State of Mississippi in exchange for lands in the West, and at Dancing Rabbit Creek a treaty was concluded on September 27, 1830, in which the lands in the West were definitely described and fixed. In pursuance to the agreement the Choctaws moved west of the Mississippi into the country afterwards known as Indian Territory which was then inhabited by the wild tribes.

As the years passed, the Government, having observed the intelligent progress of the Five Civilized Tribes, determined upon the policy of giving to the members of these tribes an opportunity to make their own way in the world. The majority of the Choctaws and Chickasaws, having had the benefit of schools and colleges, demonstrated their ability to work out their destiny alongside the white man. In order to give this opportunity to the individual members of the tribes it was necessary to divide the lands and properties of the tribes among the individual members. In 1898 the United States entered into a treaty with the Choctaw and Chickasaw Indians which had for its purpose the division of the property among the members of the tribes. The parties to that treaty shortly after its completion found that the terms of the agreement were not full and explicit enough to carry out the purpose of the parties. So another treaty was entered into by the parties and was ratified at an election held by the Choctaws and Chickasaws on the 25th day of September, 1902. When this supplementary agreement was written, among the things made more definite and certain was the amount of tribal lands each Indian was to receive. It was agreed that each member living on the 25th day of September, 1902, should receive 320 acres of the average lands of the tribe.

Under the provisions of the first treaty, of June 20, 1908, provision for the leasing of these coal and asphalt lands for a period of 30 years was made, and further provision that the tracts should be 960 acres in a square as nearly as possible. When these tribes came to make the supplemental agreement they called the attention of the Government to the necessity of each Indian having sufficient funds with which to improve his allotted lands. The Government, in order to properly provide each Indian with funds sufficient to improve his farm, agreed not to lease any more of the coal and asphalt lands, but, on the other hand, that the Government would sell same within three years, it being contemplated that it would take approximately three years to complete the task of dividing the land of the tribes among the Indians. An effort was made to sell the lands at private bids, but the then Secretary of the Interior, failing to receive sufficient offers, refused to accept the bids. Then, without consulting the Indians, Congress by the act of April 26, 1906, withdrew the segregated coal and asphalt lands from sale.

Many hundreds of the members of these tribes who were living on the date of the ratification of the treaty, namely, September 25, 1902, have passed over the divide, and many of them went with a murmur of bitter disappointment at the failure of the United States to keep its treaty agreement made in good faith by the Choctaw and Chickasaw people.

If these mineral lands are sold and the tribal affairs of these nations wound up and the proceeds paid over to the competent Indians and the portion of the incompetent Indians properly safeguarded, then the Indians of these tribes who are trying to improve their farms and take their place along with their white neighbors will have an opportunity to demonstrate that they are worthy of their ancestors who for a hundred years conducted the affairs of their tribes under a written constitution and legislative acts executed by the governor or principal chief and construed by eminent judges of the judicial departments. They are only asking in this bill that simple justice be done them.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I ask the other side to use whatever time they have remaining.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, no one on this side seems desirous of occupying any more time.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I understand that I have the right to close general debate.

Mr. SNYDER. The gentleman may proceed and close it, so far as I am concerned.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. If it is the understanding that I have the right to close general debate, I shall occupy a few minutes now.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma has 17 minutes remaining.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, before the gentleman begins, I yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. ELSTON] to make a statement.

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask the privilege of half a minute in order to state that I was unavoidably absent from the House last week when a vote was taken upon the declaration of war against Austria. I wish to say that if I had been here I would have voted in favor of the resolution.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, a great deal has been said as to whether or not this is an opportune time to sell these lands. It is an opportune time, and the lands ought to be sold now, first, but not foremost, because coal conditions in Oklahoma are now just about the same as they are throughout the balance of the United States. There is a dearth, a scarcity, of fuel throughout the country, and it extends to Oklahoma. Secondly, they should be sold because these coal lands will bring the Indian owners more money now than we can ever expect they will bring after the war is over. Third, and most important, they should be sold for the reason that we have given a sacred pledge to the Choctaw and Chickasaw Indians that the coal deposits would be sold. It is now 15 years since we gave that pledge, and at that time it was agreed the lands would be sold within three years thereafter. Therefore our pledge is already 15 years delayed; but better late than never.

Some of the opponents of this bill have shown the usual disposition to disregard our treaty obligation to the Indians and to brush away our sacred pledge to these helpless wards as if it were a matter of slight importance, not involving a violation of plighted faith. Let me read to you just a moment a few words with reference to this matter in order that we may understand our moral obligation in this contention.

The treaty containing our promise to sell the coal lands is what is commonly known as the supplemental agreement entered into between the duly authorized commissioners on the part of the United States and on the part of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Tribes, ratified by popular vote of the Choctaw and Chickasaw people, and confirmed by Congress on July 1, 1902 (32 Stat. L., 641).

CHAP. 1362. An act to ratify and confirm an agreement with the Choctaw and Chickasaw Tribes of Indians, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That the following agreement, made by the Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes with the commissions representing the Choctaw and Chickasaw Tribes of Indians on the 21st day of March, 1902, be, and the same is hereby, ratified and confirmed, to wit:

AGREEMENT BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES AND THE CHOCTAWS AND CHICKASAWS.

This agreement, by and between the United States, entered into in its behalf by Henry L. Dawes, Tams Bixby, Thomas B. Needles, and Clifton R. Breckinridge, commissioners duly appointed and authorized thereunto, and the Choctaw and Chickasaw Tribes of Indians in Indian Territory, respectively, entered into in behalf of such Choctaw and Chickasaw Tribes, by Gilbert W. Dukes, Green McCurtin, Thomas E. Sanguin, and Simon E. Lewis in behalf of the Choctaw Tribe of Indians; and Douglas H. Johnston, Calvin J. Grant, Holmes Willis, Edward B. Johnson, and Benjamin H. Colbert in behalf of the Chickasaw Tribe of Indians, commissioners duly appointed and authorized thereunto—

Witnesseth that, in consideration of the mutual undertakings herein contained, it is agreed as follows:

At the expiration of two years after the final ratification of this agreement all deposits of coal and asphalt which are in lands within the limits of any town site established under the Atoka agreement, or the act of Congress of May 31, 1900, or this agreement, and which are within the exterior limits of any lands reserved from allotment on account of their coal or asphalt deposits, as herein provided, and which are not at the time of the final ratification of this agreement embraced in any then existing coal or asphalt lease, shall be sold at public auction for cash under the direction of the President as hereinafter provided and the proceeds thereof disposed of as herein provided respecting the proceeds of the sale of coal and asphalt lands.

All coal and asphalt deposits which are within the limits of any town site so established, which are at the date of the final ratification of this agreement covered by any existing lease, shall, at the expiration of two years after the final ratification of this agreement, be sold at public auction under the direction of the President, as hereinafter provided, and the proceeds thereof disposed of as provided in the last preceding section. The coal or asphalt covered by each lease shall be separately sold. The purchaser shall take such coal or asphalt deposits subject to the existing lease, and shall by the purchase succeed to all the rights of the two tribes of every kind and character, under the lease, but all advanced royalties received by the tribe shall be retained by them.

Within six months after the final ratification of this agreement the Secretary of the Interior shall ascertain, so far as may be practicable, what lands are principally valuable because of their deposits of coal or asphalt, including therein all lands which at the time of the final ratification of this agreement shall be covered by then existing coal or asphalt leases, and within that time he shall, by a written order, segregate and reserve from allotment all of said lands. Such segregation and reservation shall conform to the subdivisions of the Government survey as nearly as may be, and the total segregation and reservation shall not exceed 500,000 acres. No lands so reserved shall be allotted to any member or freedman, and the improvements of any member or freedman existing upon any of the lands so segregated and reserved at the time of their segregation and reservation shall be appraised under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, and shall be paid for out of any common funds of the two tribes in the Treasury of the United States, upon the order of the Secretary of the Interior. All coal and asphalt deposits, as well as other minerals which may be found in any lands not so segregated and reserved, shall be deemed a part of the land and shall pass to the allottee or other person who may lawfully acquire title to such lands.

All lands segregated and reserved under the last preceding section, excepting those embraced within the limits of a town site, established as hereinbefore provided, shall, within three years from the final ratification of this agreement and before the dissolution of the tribal governments, be sold at public auction for cash, under the direction of the President, by a commission composed of three persons, which shall be appointed by the President, one on the recommendation of the principal chief of the Choctaw Nation, who shall be a Choctaw by blood, and one on the recommendation of the governor of the Chickasaw Nation, who shall be a Chickasaw by blood. Either of said commissioners may, at any time, be removed by the President for good cause shown. Each of said commissioners shall be paid at the rate of $4,000 per annum, the Choctaw commissioner to be paid by the Choctaw Nation, the Chickasaw commissioner to be paid by the Chickasaw Nation, and the third commissioner to be paid by the United States. In the sale of coal and asphalt lands and coal and asphalt deposits hereunder the commission shall have the right to reject any or all bids which it considers below the value of any such lands or deposits. The proceeds arising from the sale of coal and asphalt lands and coal and asphalt deposits shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of said tribes and paid out per capita to the members of said tribes (freedmen excepted) with the other moneys belonging to said tribes in the manner provided by law. The lands embraced within any coal or asphalt lease shall be separately sold, subject to such lease, and the purchaser shall succeed to all the rights of the two tribes of every kind and character, under the lease, but all advanced royalties received by the tribes shall be retained by them. The lands so segregated and reserved, and not included within any existing coal or asphalt lease, shall be sold in tracts not exceeding in area a section under the Government survey.

Upon the recommendation of the chief executive of each of the two tribes, and where in the judgment of the President it is advantageous to the tribes so to do, the sale of any coal or asphalt lands which are herein directed to be sold may be made at any time after the expiration of six months from the final ratification of this agreement, without awaiting the expiration of the period of two years, as hereinbefore provided.

No lease of any coal or asphalt lands shall be made after the final ratification of this agreement, the provisions of the Atoka agreement to the contrary notwithstanding.

Where any lands so as aforesaid segregated and reserved on account of their coal or asphalt deposits are in this agreement specifically reserved from allotment for any other reason, the sale to be made hereunder shall be only of the coal and asphalt deposits contained therein, and in all other respects the other specified reservation of such lands herein provided for shall be fully respected.

The chief executives of the two tribes shall execute and deliver, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, to each purchaser of any coal or asphalt lands so sold, and to each purchaser of any coal or asphalt deposits so sold, an appropriate patent or instrument of conveyance, conveying to the purchaser the property so sold.

When allotments as herein provided have been made to all citizens and freedmen, the residue of lands not herein reserved or otherwise disposed of, if any there be, shall be sold at public auction under rules and regulations and on terms to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, and so much of the proceeds as may be necessary for equalizing allotments shall be used for that purpose, and the balance shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the Choctaws and Chickasaws and distributed per capita as other funds of the tribes.

This agreement shall be binding upon the United States and upon the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations and all Choctaws and Chickasaws, when ratified by Congress and by a majority of the whole number of votes cast by the legal voters of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Tribes in the manner following: The principal chief of the Choctaw Nation and the governor of the Chickasaw Nation shall, within 120 days after the ratification of this agreement by Congress make public proclamation that the same shall be voted upon at any special election to be held for that purpose within 30 days thereafter, on a certain day therein named; and all male citizens of each of the said tribes qualified to vote under the tribal laws shall have a right to vote at the election precinct most convenient to his residence, whether the same be within the bounds of his tribe or not. And if this agreement be ratified by said tribes as aforesaid the date upon which said election is held shall be deemed to be the date of final ratification.

The votes cast in both the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations shall be forthwith returned and duly certified by the precinct officers to the national secretaries of said tribes, and shall be presented by said national secretaries to a board of commissioners consisting of the principal chief and the national secretary of the Choctaw Nation and the governor and national secretary of the Chickasaw Nation and two members of the Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes; and said board shall meet without delay at Atoka, Indian Territory, and canvass and count said votes, and make proclamation of the result.

In witness whereof the said commissioners do hereby affix their names at Washington, D. C., this 21st day of March, 1902.

Approved, July 1, 1902.

Mark the language, "This agreement shall be binding upon the United States and upon the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations and all Choctaws and Chickasaws."

We are now engaged in a world war not only for our liberties but for our existence as a Nation. We have called upon our red brethren in Oklahoma and in other States to assist in defending our Nation's life. They have responded nobly and several thousand of them are now serving in various capacities reaching from that of lieutenant colonel and major to high private in the rear ranks. The Choctaws and Chickasaws are not seeking charity. They are only asking their just rights in compliance with our sacred promises, and again I repeat, the Choctaws and Chickasaws have lived up to these agreements to the letter.

Since these two races, the red and the white, first came in contact, a multitude of agreements and pledges have been made on both sides. It is a matter of record and history that the Indian has always observed and kept sacred any pledge made to his pale face brother. As a rule he has kept these pledges willingly and gracefully, but if the time ever came when he felt unable to keep his pledge with the white man, no matter how hard a bargain the pale face may have driven, no matter how much the shoe may have pinched the Indian, the red man has always been forced to keep his contract by the inhuman and inexorable law that might makes right.

But what is the record on the other side of the transaction; The keeping of the white man's pledge with the Indians? We all know full well that the history of these events is one of the blackest pages in our national records. They present to us a multitude of violated treaties, repudiated promises, and broken pledges.

We present here to-day an opportunity to redeem one of these pledges some 15 years delayed, but redeemable now at this late day, and while it is possible to dispose of this property at a good price for our wards. Shall we keep our word with our helpless wards as we have forced them to do with us? Or shall we continue to stand as disregarding our plighted faith, discredited in the eyes of our wards, whom we ask to follow us and help to fight our battles in this crucial crisis? I do not believe this Congress will ever adopt any such disreputable course.

Now, what does this bill provide? Section 1 provides for the authorization of sale of these lands and appraisement as near as possible in accordance with the supplemental agreement of 15 years ago.

Section 2 provides for the first sale within a stipulated time after the appraisement has been completed.

Section 3 provides for the second sale and appraisement and for the third sale, all properly safeguarded and passed upon by the Secretary of the Interior and recommended for favorable action in this House after careful consideration by your House Committee on Indian Affairs.

Section 4 deals with the rights of the present lessees under the new conditions that will exist when the Indian ceases to be the landlord and the purchaser of the coal deposits takes up that responsibility.

First. The sale of the deposits is made subject to the rights of the lessees under their leases which is in accordance with vested rights.

Second. It provides for the cancellation of all departmental rules and regulations and for the operation of mines by lessees under applicable laws. Certainly this provision is necessary, for after the Indian ceases to be the owner of the coal properties, the Federal Government supervision should reach no further than it does over other property of other United States citizens.

Third. If the lessee becomes the purchaser under this bill he is given credit for advance royalties, and future royalties are fixed at 8 cents per ton. Permit me to say that advance royalties are required to be paid by the lessees of $100 for the first two years, $200 for the third and fourth year, and $500 thereafter. I have no interest whatever in the coal lessees except to give them that protection to which they are entitled under the terms of their leases. Let us bear in mind that this advance royalty is neither a penalty nor a bonus. It was required to be paid by the operators as evidence of their good faith to develop and work these mines, and was to be credited on their royalty account when the coal is mined, as is evidenced by the following extract from the Atoka agreement:

All lessees shall pay on each coal or asphalt claim at the rate of $100 per annum, in advance, for the first and second years; $200 per annum, in advance, for the third and fourth years; and $500 for each succeeding year thereafter. All such payments shall be treated as advanced royalty on the mine or claim on which they are made, and shall be a credit as royalty when each said mine is developed and operated.

The reason for fixing a royalty at 8 cents a ton is that when these leases were made they were made on behalf of two contracting parties, to wit, the Indians and the proposed coal operators, and the Secretary of the Interior, who was given the right to either raise or lower the royalty, was not expected to be interested on either side of the transaction, but was to act as a kind of arbiter. Since this status of arbiter must be eliminated when the ownership of the mineral passes into the hands of the individuals, it is extremely necessary to have a fixed royalty in order to avoid future complications.

Fourth. It is stipulated that transfer of leases may be made without restriction. Many restrictions are now placed on these transfers by the Secretary which could not be intrusted to anyone but an arbiter.

Fifth. Lessees are given preferential right to purchase the deposits. About this I will have more to say when this item is reached in the reading of the bill.

Sixth. It is provided that the lessee may have credit for one-half of the advance royalties already paid by the lessee in case he becomes a purchaser. Again I call attention to the fact that the lessee is entitled to credit on a ton basis for all advance royalties paid. The lessees did not surrender one-half of these royalties without a vigorous protest, because they said they felt they would be surrendering money which actually belonged to them, and they should be permitted to apply not one-half but all on the purchase price. The tribal attorney, however, thought different, and this one-half advance royalty credit proposition was a compromise between the two contentions.

Seventh. The lessees are given the right to purchase additional surface in accordance with the act of February 19, 1912.

Section 5 defines the surface rights of certain lands purchased by the State of Oklahoma for the State penitentiary and gives the State an option to purchase at the appraised value 1,580 acres of coal lying adjacent to the State penitentiary.

Section 6 is the usual provision authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to prescribe rules and regulations and further provides for the establishment of an office at McAlester for advertisement and sale of this property.

Section 7 is with reference to patent and delivery thereof, and also stipulates that the purchaser may pay coal out at any time.

Section 8 carries an appropriation of $50,000 for the expense of appraisement and sale.

This explains all the provisions of the bill as I understand them, and I shall be very glad to have suggestions from any Member of the House with reference to anything that may be necessary and proper to be placed in the measure.

Since 1902, when this Atoka agreement was made pledging the sale of these lands and division of these funds, about 50 per cent of the Indians who were living at that time are dead. Unfortunately we can never redeem our pledge with them, but we can redeem it with the one-half who are now living and with the offspring of those now departed.

On last Wednesday gentlemen made complaint that some amendments to this bill recommended by the Indian Committee had not been submitted to the Secretary of the Interior for report. This was an unheard-of proceeding to me. I knew the usual procedure requiring the submission of all bills to the head of the department expected to administer thereon, and I recognize the necessity of such procedure, but I had never heard before that it was necessary for amendments to such a measure suggested by a committee or a Member or anyone else to have to run the gantlet of the head of any department. In a spirit of abundant precaution, however, I have again submitted this bill to the Secretary of the Interior and have now a report, under date of December 7, and this is what he says:

WASHINGTON, December 7, 1917.

DEAR MR. CARTER: I am in receipt of your letter of December 6, 1917, requesting a report on H. R. 195, entitled "A bill providing for the sale of the coal and asphalt deposits in the segregated mineral land in the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations, Okla."

Section 13 of the act approved April 26, 1906 (34 Stats. L., 137–142), provides:

"That all coal and asphalt lands, whether leased or unleased, shall be reserved from sale under this act until the existing leases for coal and asphalt lands shall have expired, or until such time as may be otherwise provided by law."

It therefore requires further legislation by Congress before the coal and asphalt deposits in the segregated mineral land of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations can be sold.

I have given careful consideration to the provisions contained in H. R. 195—

That is, this bill without amendment—and see no objections to the enactment of the bill, provided it is amended in line 18, page 2, by inserting after the word "sale" the words "at public auction to the highest bidder"—

I gave notice at the meeting last Wednesday that we would propose that amendment—and by inserting after the word "appraisers," line 15, page 2, the following:

"Provided, That said appraisement shall not be effective until approved by the Secretary of the Interior."

If the bill is amended as herein suggested, I recommend that it receive the favorable consideration of Congress.

Cordially, yours,

FRANKLIN K. LANE, Secretary.

Hon. C. D. CARTER,
Chairman Committee on Indian Affairs,
House of Representatives.

Mr. Chairman, how much time have I used?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has five minutes remaining.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not believe this House is going further to repudiate its pledge with these Indians when we have such an opportune time to dispose of these coal deposits. If any amendment can be offered to strengthen or improve this bill, I have no objection. I have no pride of authorship in the bill, because really I was not the sole author. A great many others helped. I shall, of course, oppose any amendment that I think would tend to hurt the bill and cause delay in selling the land under appraisement or otherwise.

Mr. BOOHER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I will.

Mr. BOOHER. Would the chairman of the committee have any objection to inserting a clause in the bill giving the Government the right to take over these coal and asphalt lands at their appraised values?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. We have been following that "will o' the wisp" ever since I first came to Congress 10 years ago. Every time things have looked favorable for redeeming this pledge with our helpless wards some one has revived that hoary impossibility. I would rather the gentleman would not embarrass the bill with any such suggestion, because he must know we never could get such a thing through the House——

Mr. BOOHER. The gentleman is talking about taking over coal mines, and if we are going to take them over we had better do it before they get into the hands of the speculators.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I think the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] can give the gentleman some valuable information on that. He has told me we have more coal than we can use in the next 20 generations on the public lands of the United States and in Alaska.

Mr. BOOHER. But we have not got enough coal for the present generation, and that is what we want to get.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I have only the word of the gentleman from Oklahoma, chairman of the Committee on the Public Lands, about that; I am not familiar with it. However, Mr. Chairman, I have to close, because I want to yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. HASTINGS] five minutes in which to address the House.

Mr. BOOHER. All I wanted to suggest now is that we need the coal. There is enough coal in the country, but we can not get it.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Just exactly. And if I failed to impress the gentleman with the idea that here is this vast acreage of coal land which can not under the present law be opened for use, then I have failed completely. Under present conditions coal can not be mined, but if it is sold, as this bill provides, then some fellow can open up the mines and increase the production of coal.

Mr. BOOHER. The coal area of the country is not short.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. True, the coal area in Oklahoma is not short, but 335,000 acres—the major portion of that area—can not be worked under existing law, while our people are suffering for fuel. The adoption of this bill will open up production, badly needed, on this large area. Let me appeal to the gentleman, come on and help us, and do not let our people freeze to death while we are chasing some phantom of Government ownership.

Mr. BOOHER. If they had the coal on the banks, they could not get it to the people on account of transportation; the people can not get it.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, may I suggest to the gentleman from Missouri that we have 53,000,000 acres of public coal land now owned by the Government, free from monopoly, containing 450,000,000,000 tons, and at the normal rate of consumption that is enough to last until we are all gone. It is estimated it will last for more than 400 years at the normal rate of consumption.

Mr. BOOHER. But the people can not get it on account of transportation facilities.

Mr. FERRIS. Oh, we have a lot of transcontinental lines running. Of course, transportation always plays an important part in all bulky articles.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired; all time has expired, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to sell the coal and asphalt deposits, leased and unleased, in the segregated mineral area of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations, in Oklahoma, in the manner hereinafter set forth.

Before offering such coal and asphalt deposits for sale the Secretary of the Interior, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, shall cause the same to be appraised by a board of appraisers, consisting of three members, to be appointed by the President, one upon the recommendation of the Secretary of the Interior, one upon the recommendation of the principal chief of the Choctaw Nation, and one upon the recommendation of the governor of the Chickasaw Nation, the compensation of each to be uniform and fixed by the President of the United States, and such appointments shall be made within 60 days after the passage of this act. Such appraisement, both as to leased and unleased lands, shall be described in tracts to conform to the descriptions of the legal subdivisions heretofore designated by the Secretary of the Interior, and shall be completed, sworn to by such appraisers, and final report made to the Secretary of the Interior within six months from the date of the appointment of the appraisers.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment there.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma: Page 2, line 15, after the word "appraisers," insert:

"Provided, That said appraisement shall not be effective until approved by the Secretary of the Interior."

Mr. LENROOT. Will the gentleman yield for a suggestion?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Yes.

Mr. LENROOT. I understood from the gentleman that he was willing to accept an amendment simply authorizing and directing the Secretary himself to make the appraisement?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Has the gentleman an amendment to offer?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Let my amendment be pending, and the gentleman can send his up and I will withdraw mine.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. LENROOT: Page 2, line 1, after the word "appraised," strike out all of lines 1 to 8, inclusive, and the word "act" in line 9.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, we have no objection to that.

Mr. HASTINGS. Let the Clerk read the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will again report the amendment.

The amendment was again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT].

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment here which I would like to read to the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood there was no controversy about this amendment.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I have an amendment which I want to read for the information of the gentleman from Wisconsin, and which, I think, will perhaps settle the whole controversy and save a little time. It is as follows:

Page 1, line 7, strike out all of lines 7, 8, and 9, and the succeeding part of the section on page 2, and insert the following:

"Before offering such coal and asphalt deposits for sale the Secretary of the Interior, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, shall cause the same to be appraised. Such appraisement, both as to leased and unleased lands, shall be described in tracts to conform to the descriptions of the legal subdivisions heretofore designated by the Secretary of the Interior, and shall be completed within six months after the passage of this act."

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, that covers entirely my thought, and I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my amendment.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my former amendment and insert this in its place.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the requests will be agreed to.

There was no objection.

Mr. ROBBINS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the chairman of the committee what these subdivisions contained in line 11, page 2, include.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. They are the subdivisions under which the land was formerly appraised, of 960 acres each. When the leasing system began prior to 1898 there had been a national contract by the chiefs and citizens of the tribe, and the leases were circular in dimension. Now, when the new leases were made the law provided that they should be made as nearly in a square as possible, and when the Secretary issued regulations he issued them to the effect that they should be 960 acres.

Mr. ROBBINS. According to this bill as it now stands, the provisions of this section, they shall be in blocks of 960 acres?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Yes; unless there is some fractional tract somewhere where, on account of its isolation, the description has to be made smaller.

Mr. ROBBINS. Why make it rigid like that? That would exclude the small purchaser.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, with coal of that character you find very few places where less than 960 acres could be profitably mined. The coal is usually at a very steep pitch, and, the mining being done mainly by shafts, it requires an investment of $100,000 or $150,000 before a man can begin to take any coal out.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for one minute more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent for one minute more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Requiring, as it does, this large investment of money, the coal could hardly be sold, in justice to the Indian, unless it was made in tracts at least of 960 acres. There are some tracts, of course, which would be smaller.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma: Page 1, line 7, strike out all of lines 7, 8, and 9 and the succeeding part of the section on page 2, and insert the following:

"Before offering such coal and asphalt deposits for sale the Secretary of the Interior, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, shall cause the same to be appraised. Such appraisement, both as to leased and unleased lands, shall be described in tracts to conform to the descriptions of the legal subdivisions heretofore designated by the Secretary of the Interior, and shall be completed within six months after the passage of this act."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I would like to move to strike out the last word in order to ask two or three questions. Do I understand that the top of the land has already been sold?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. The surface of the land has practically all been sold, except the reservation that was made on the leased lands necessary to the mining of the coal and asphalt.

Mr. CANNON. Yes. Now, then, this is a sale of the coal and asphalt?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. This bill provides for the sale of the mineral deposits.

Mr. CANNON. Is there any oil down in that country?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. There is none in that section.

Mr. CANNON. Has that been exhausted?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. None has been discovered.

Mr. CANNON. Has there been any great attempt to discover it?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. There has been a good deal of drilling for oil on portions of the land.

Mr. CANNON. The oil is not sold, then?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. When the surface of the land was sold the surface was defined to mean everything except the coal and the asphalt.

Mr. CANNON. I understand. How many veins of coal are there?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. There are two workable veins; in some instances one, and in some instances two.

Mr. CANNON. About how thick?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. The workable veins are from about 2 feet 10 inches to 5 feet. In one place, where the anticlinal comes up separate from the other part of the coal, the coal is 7 or 8 feet thick.

Mr. CANNON. Is the 5-foot vein nearest the surface?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. The coal all crops out. Some of it is at a very acute pitch.

Mr. CANNON. Which is the top?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. In some instances the thin vein, and in some the thick. As I recall, the thin vein usually lies on top.

Mr. CANNON. What kind of a roof is it?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. A very brittle roof of shale, which causes quite a bit of trouble in timbering and propping.

Mr. CANNON. After the coal is taken out it caves?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. What is the land worth, the top of it, at a rough guess?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. The top of the land sold all the way from $1 to $150 an acre.

Mr. CANNON. How much is it worth now?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. It was just recently sold.

Mr. CANNON. At how much did the gentleman say?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. From $1 to $150 an acre.

Mr. CANNON. Most of it at a dollar, I take it?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. No. The majority of it sold for from $15 to $20.

Mr. CANNON. The average would be $15?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. No; between $15 and $20.

Mr. CANNON. That is an agricultural country. The top is worth something?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Yes. I should judge that about one-fourth of it is agricultural country. The other is grazing land—rocky, mountainous land.

Mr. CANNON. How much is there—345,000 acres?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Four hundred and forty-five thousand acres; 100,000 acres have been leased.

Mr. CANNON. The reason I ask these questions is that I live in a coal country myself, where there are three veins of coal; and down in southern Illinois I think they have several veins, very valuable deposits. Now, what does the gentleman anticipate these lands will be appraised at, at a rough guess?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Well, Mr. Chairman, my ideas of the value of this coal are so much less than the ideas of some other gentlemen that I hesitate to say. We are going to sell this land, and I would not want any valuation of mine to be placed in the RECORD.

Mr. CANNON. That is satisfactory. I want to ask the gentleman if the coal land is not worth now greatly more than it was three years after this agreement was made?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Oh, yes, indeed.

Mr. CANNON. Double or triple, or possibly multiplied by 10?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. The surface is worth three or four times as much, at least. If the gentleman will permit me, I wish to say that when this three-year period expired and the time came for the sale of this land the Federal Government found conditions very disadvantageous for the sale of the land. Oil had come into use and displaced the coal as fuel, and coal was very cheap.

Mr. CANNON. Now, then, that is a very good quality of bituminous coal in the coal field where I live. I suppose there is an output of about 4,000,000 tons annually; maybe a little more. It is being further developed. It takes time to sink the shafts and drive the entries. It is very fortunate that the Government did not keep its agreement with the Indians, if there was one made, to sell it within three years, because while it has just been lying there without any expense its value has been multiplied by four.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. The Government made an honest effort to sell it.

Mr. CANNON. That is the good fortune of the owners of the coal. Now, I want to say to the gentleman that within, say, 40 years the fee of the land in my county in Illinois has advanced in price, say, from $15 per acre to $200 per acre, and the coal, reserving the surface, sold for a very small sum. Now, there coming a demand for coal, I apprehend, the coal, reserving the surface, would bring, say, $50 per acre.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CANNON. I would like about five minutes more. I just want to satisfy myself about this matter.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CANNON. The top of that land is worth now about $200, and the Lord only knows what coal is worth. It is very valuable. They have thrown away one vein because of a faulty roof. It took too much propping. They have mined the other, and in the fullness of time they will mine the third. I suppose the royalty would amount probably to 5 or 10 cents a ton; I do not know what. The mine run sells pretty high, and it is about the average of the Ohio coal; not quite so good as the southern Illinois coal.

Now, does my friend think that any considerable amount of this coal in Oklahoma could be mined by sinking shafts and driving entries before the price goes down? Are not our Indian friends who own it fairly well off now? Do they not have a large fund, and do they not get the interest on it annually? Are they not getting really enough income from the fund they now have to make a portion of them not of much account, not being compelled to work? [Laughter.] I am just asking for information. Well, silence gives consent. [Laughter.]

The conservationists, these "high brows," say, "My God, the coal will all be gone." I have heard it time and time again. They say, "In 50 years we will be coalless." The country will not be coalless in 50,000 years. There is more danger of your suffering as to this coal from the development of electricity and the improvement and distribution of electricity than there is from anything else.

Mr. STAFFORD. I hope you will not forget about that perpetual energy which Garabed has invented.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, I have an impression in my own mind that the energy will be gathered hereafter from the sun, the great center of energy of our solar system, and utilized for power. It may not come in my time nor your time, but I think it will come in the not distant future; and I do not say this as an argument for the sale of this land at once, because I think the coal will be worth more in the future than it is now.

I am not a prophet or the son of a prophet, so far as that is concerned, but there is the water power that has been running to waste for unnumbered millions of years. Before we develop the energy from the sun I apprehend that the water power will be used. Great heaven! how much of it did run to waste in the last two years? That Coosa River down South is not turning any wheels, nor will it ever be navigable [laughter]; but that is still before us, with all the other rivers.

I do not know that I am opposed to this bill, but I just thought I would ask these questions. My friend and colleague states that the value of this coal has been increased four times without any expense to these Indians, because the three-year agreement was not kept. I apprehend that if this coal should remain undeveloped for 20 years it would not hurt anybody. There is coal in Kansas, I believe, is there not?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. And there is coal in Missouri. How many square miles do these coal lands occupy? Will somebody state it in miles, so that I can get some idea about it?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. It is something over 100 miles long, running from northeast to southwest, and wide enough to make it 445,000 acres.

Mr. CANNON. What is the width, on an average?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. The width would be all the way from 2 miles up to 20 or 25 miles.

Mr. CANNON. Would it be an average of 15 miles by 100?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. It is 445,000 acres.

Mr. CANNON. I am a little cloudy as to just how many square miles there are.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. About 700 square miles, so some gentleman says.

Mr. KNUTSON. That would be pretty nearly 20 townships.

Mr. CANNON. That is pretty large. If I owned that coal I would not sell it on an appraisement made now, under all the circumstances and conditions.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That the sale of such deposits shall be thoroughly advertised, and shall at the end of 90 days from the final report of such appraisers be offered for sale in tracts to conform with the report of such appraisers at not less than the appraised value so fixed, except that isolated tracts of less than 960 acres may be sold separately under like provisions: Provided, That 20 per cent of the purchase price shall be paid in cash, and the remainder shall be paid in four equal annual payments from the date of the sale, and all deferred payments on all deposits sold under the provisions of this act shall bear interest at the rate of 5 per cent per annum, and shall mature and become due before the expiration of four years after the date of such sale.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma: Page 2, line 18, after the word "sale," insert the words "to the highest bidder at public auction."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, do I understand from the phraseology of this section that it is purposed to sell this property at the end of 90 days? The phraseology, I think, does not carry out the intendment of the committee. Permit me to read it:

That the sale of such deposits shall be thoroughly advertised, and shall at the end of 90 days from the final report of such appraisers be offered for sale.

Does that mean that at the expiration of 90 days from the filing of the report the property shall be sold?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Is the gentleman referring to section 2?

Mr. STAFFORD. I am reading from section 2. Literally construed that would require that on the ninetieth day after the final report of the appraisers the property should be sold. The gentleman does not contemplate having any such fixed time for the sale? I suppose he contemplates that a period of at least 90 days must elapse, and then advertisements shall be made providing for the sale.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. The bill gives six months for the appraisement of the land, and then 90 days after the appraisement for advertising, before the sale. I had thought that would be better perhaps than a longer time, and I think the Secretary thought so, too.

Mr. STAFFORD. Here a final report will be submitted, perhaps sent here from Oklahoma. It has to go through various hands for approval, first, the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and others. You can readily understand that a month or two months might elapse.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I would not object to the gentleman changing the words "final report" to the words "approval by the Secretary."

Mr. LENROOT. I have an amendment changing the word "report" to "appraisement," in lines 18 and 19.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I have no objection to either of these amendments.

Mr. LENROOT. That would harmonize the section.

Mr. STAFFORD. My only idea is to have an adequate time to enable the Secretary of the Interior to advertise this property. There might be conditions develop under which 90 days would not be sufficient time to advertise.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. As I recall now in previous sales where we have sold the surface, including all the mineral except the coal and asphalt, the time for advertisement was 60 days, and the prices then obtained ran up far beyond what the land was appraised for.

Mr. STAFFORD. This advertisement will undoubtedly take place in Oklahoma.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. No; the gentleman is mistaken about that. The advertisements will appear in all the great papers throughout the United States. The sum of $50,000 is provided for advertising, sale, and so forth.

Mr. STAFFORD. That argues all the greater need for giving ample time, so as to enable the Secretary of the Interior to advertise and to fix such a date as will give ample opportunity for bidders to consider the proposition and offer their bids.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Evidently the time fixed in this bill is all the time that the Secretary thought he needed, and I will say to the gentleman that it is more time than was given in the sale of other lands. The Secretary must have thought it ample, for he recommended the passage of the bill without suggesting any amendment to this provision.

Mr. HASTINGS. This only provides that these lands shall be offered for sale within that time.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. At the end of that time.

Mr. STAFFORD. At the end of 90 days.

Mr. HASTINGS. They shall be offered for sale.

Mr. STAFFORD. My understanding is that 90 days after the filing of the final report these lands must be sold.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. No; not that they must be sold, but bids received.

Mr. STAFFORD. Bids must be received?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. I can understand that conditions might arise under which they would not be able to advertise so as to give 90 days in which to submit bids, and there ought to be full opportunity.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. If anything of that kind could occur, it would certainly have presented itself to the Secretary of the Interior. We went into that quite thoroughly, and he thought that 90 days would give sufficient time.

Mr. STAFFORD. This bill is different in that particular from the bill that was submitted to the attention of the Secretary of the Interior in the last Congress.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. We submitted the bill to him recently and have a report, which I read in my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. STAFFORD. I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Oklahoma be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LENROOT. Will the gentleman yield for a suggestion?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Yes.

Mr. LENROOT. I want to ask the gentleman whether this language might not be inserted, "shall not later than six months from the final report," leaving it to the department.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I have no objection; I think it is a question of minor importance.

Mr. STAFFORD. That would meet the objection that I think might arise.

Mr. HASTINGS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Yes.

Mr. HASTINGS. Does not the language simply require the Secretary to offer it for sale?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. That is all.

Mr. HASTINGS. In other words, he has to prepare the advertisement, and the bids will be received at the end of 90 days after the final report is approved. In other words, there is a time limit in which he must put the advertisement in the paper, and then have a year to sell it.

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes; but this language would require the bids to be filed 90 days from the filing of the final report. Section 2 says that the sale of such deposits shall be thoroughly advertised, and shall at the end of 90 days from the final report of such appraisers be offered for sale, and so forth.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. That means that on that day he can begin to accept bids.

Mr. LENROOT. The gentleman's own amendment reads "offered for sale at public auction."

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. It is too short a time limit. I should say it ought to be six months, so that there will be a special date which will be compatible with the interest of all concerned.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Against that I place the judgment of the Secretary of the Interior who agreed that he only wanted 90 days, but I will agree to the amendment, if the gentleman insists on it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STAFFORD. Now, Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, on page 2, line 17, by striking out the words "at the end of 90 days" and insert in lieu thereof "not later than six months."

The Clerk read as follows:

On line 17, page 2, strike out the words "at the end of 90 days" and insert the words "not later than six months."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 18, after the word "the" strike out the words "final report of such appraisers" and insert in lieu thereof the words "final appraisement," and on line 19 strike out the words "the report of such appraisers" and insert the words "such appraisement."

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. We have no objection to that.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. That immediately after the expiration of one year after the coal and asphalt deposits shall have been offered for sale, or forfeited for nonpayment under the terms of the sale, the Secretary of the Interior, under rules and regulations to be prescribed by him, shall readvertise and cause to be sold to the highest bidder at public auction all coal and asphalt deposits remaining unsold and all coal and asphalt deposits forfeited by reason of such nonpayment of any part of the purchase price: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior, in his discretion, may reject any or all bids which he does not consider adequate, but at the expiration of six months thereafter the Secretary of the Interior may again readvertise and offer the same for final sale to the highest bidder at public auction, upon such terms as he may prescribe and at such valuation, independent of the appraised value, as he may fix.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I had intended to make some inquiry as to the section we have passed, as to whether some discretion should not be allowed the Secretary of the Interior as to the size of the tracts of land offered for sale. In the bill originally reported the unit tract was 960 acres. There is no such provision in this bill. The only provision is that it shall be described in tracts to conform to the descriptions of the legal subdivision heretofore designated by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Yes; and the legal subdivision designated by former appraisements is 960 acres. That has all been made. As a mater of fact there will be no resurvey under this bill. The data will be taken in the Secretary of the Interior's office which he now has. These were all made in 960-acre tracts except in a few instances where the coal was so isolated that it could not be put in a tract as large as that.

Mr. STAFFORD. I construed the word "subdivision" as the regular subdivision of a township, and if that is the case there ought to be lodged in the Secretary of the Interior some authority to fix the size of the tracts of land that would be offered for sale. The language in section 1, lines 10 and 11, is "shall be described in tracts to conform to descriptions of the legal subdivisions heretofore designated by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. That means 960 acres.

Mr. STAFFORD. If that means 960 acres, then the gentleman from Oklahoma has furnished the information which I desired to obtain.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Was the gentleman speaking of the legal construction of the word "subdivision"? Heretofore the Secretary of the Interior has had these lands laid out in 960-acre tracts.

Mr. STAFFORD. Let me ask the gentleman in connection with the section under consideration whether in case certain of these subdivisions are not sold and another sale is readvertised, it is purposed to have them sold in lots according to the original subdivision, or is it the intention to sell them in bulk?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Does the gentleman mean the second or the third sale?

Mr. STAFFORD. The second sale. Section 3 provides:

SEC. 3. That immediately after the expiration of one year after the coal and asphalt deposits shall have been offered for sale, or forfeited for nonpayment under the terms of the sale, the Secretary of the Interior, under rules and regulations to be prescribed by him, shall readvertise and cause to be sold to the highest bidder at public auction all coal and asphalt deposits remaining unsold and all coal and asphalt deposits forfeited by reason of such nonpayment of any part of the purchase price.

That would be construed as requiring him to sell all the lands that had not been sold or had been forfeited in one lot, whereas I assume that it is the intention of the committee to have the land sold in tracts.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Yes; I think it would be under this language.

Mr. STAFFORD. I suggest to the gentleman that to make it clear he insert in line 10, page 3, after the word "auction," the words "in tracts as may be designated by the Secretary of the Interior."

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. That amendment is acceptable.

Mr. STAFFORD. Then, Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, to insert after the word "auction" in line 10, page 3, the language to be found on page 2, lines 10, 11, and 12—in tracts to conform to the descriptions of the legal subdivisions heretofore designated by the Secretary of the Interior.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, line 10, after the word "auction," insert the words "in tracts to conform to the descriptions of the legal subdivisions heretofore designated by the Secretary of the Interior."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. LENROOT: Page 3, line 10, after the word "auction," insert the words "at not less than such appraised value."

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, that amendment is agreeable.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I believe the gentleman will notice that the word "and" should be incorporated, in view of the amendment just adopted.

Mr. LENROOT. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. By unanimous consent the word "and" will be added.

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. ROMJUE. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call the attention of the chairman of the committee to the amendment which was inserted a moment ago. I think there is a conflict between sections 2 and 3. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] a moment ago, in line 17, struck out the words "at the end of 90 days" and inserted "not later than six months." With that amendment it means that it must be offered for sale not later than six months. In conference with the chairman of the committee a moment ago, he thought that was cured in section 3, on page 3, but I would like to call his attention to the fact that that provision in section 3 provides that at the expiration of one year it can be readvertised. Therefore, that leaves six months of time in which there can be no sale of coal land. In other words, the amendment offered in section 2 makes the offer for sale to take place not later than the expiration of six months. Then you have no opportunity to resell it after the expiration of six months until after the expiration of one year. Thus six months intervenes at which no sale can take place.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I will say to the gentleman that it is the intention not to have the first two sales closer together than one year, preferably, as suggested by the Department of the Interior, in the fall of the year. It was the intention of the committee and of the Secretary that the second sale should not be made until 12 months after the first had been finished.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, I ask leave to make this correction: The amendment reads to be inserted after the word "auction" in line 10, page 3. My colleague's amendment comes in at the same place and has been adopted, and I ask that this be inserted immediately after the amendment suggested by him.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the proviso in the section. I want to call the attention of the chairman first to the fact that in any event the proviso should be amended even if it remains in, because now that the amendment has been adopted that it can not be sold at less than the appraised value I do not assume that the gentleman will wish the Secretary to have the discretion to reject bids that he may consider inadequate, if they are to the amount of the appraised value.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I have no objection to the Secretary having the power.

Mr. LENROOT. I thought the gentleman would.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I want him to have every power that he can to protect the sale of these lands.

Mr. LENROOT. It is not in harmony with section 2, because you do not give him any such authority in the first offer. Upon the merits of striking out this proviso, as this bill now reads, it offers a premium to all bidders to not bid the appraised value. It means just one thing, that the Indians will get less for these lands than they would if this proviso were not included in the bill.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. What is the gentleman going to do with the land that is not sold?

Mr. LENROOT. Come again to Congress at the end of 18 months, if they can not be sold.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. And take a great deal more of the valuable time of Congress perhaps when we could dispose of the thing now. Why make two bites at the cherry?

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, here are lands the very minimum value of which is $12,000,000. The gentleman talks about taking up the time of Congress in the matter of three or four million dollars to be paid to the Indians. I know and he knows we have occupied days and days here in Congress with relation to very much less amounts of money, involving the Creek, Choctaw, and Chickasaw Indians, and very properly so. He implies that the matter of a few million dollars where we are the guardians of the Indians should not be considered by us, because a year or two from now it might take a day's time of Congress. Is that the way to treat the Indians who are under our guardianship? But it is entirely plain that with this proviso these coal operators, these bidders, are not going to bid the appraised value, because in this very bill you will find a provision, and an invitation to them, that if they do not bid the appraised value, the Secretary of the Interior is compelled under the law to offer it to them later, and they will get it for less. Now, without this provision I frankly say I do not believe all of these lands will be sold in the near future, and from the standpoint of the Indian these lands ought not to be sold—445,000 acres—in bulk. If we sold 50,000 acres at a time the Indians would fare very much better than if you offer the entire tract of land. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] very properly called the attention of the committee to the fact that while there had been this failure to keep this solemn agreement upon the part of the United States with those Indians, nevertheless that failure to keep that agreement has resulted to the benefit of the Indians by 400 per cent increase in the amount of money they will get for these sales.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Four hundred per cent!

Mr. LENROOT. Yes; the gentleman said fourfold, at least, over what they would have received if they had then been sold.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Is fourfold 400 per cent?

Mr. LENROOT. Fourfold is 400 per cent. Where did the gentleman go to school?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Not in Wisconsin.

Mr. LENROOT. They must have a peculiar system of education in the gentleman's State if fourfold does not mean 400 per cent.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. The lands are not now worth 400 per cent more than they were then.

Mr. LENROOT. Are they worth any more?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I think so.

Mr. LENROOT. One hundred per cent more?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I would not say that, but they are worth more. They will probably bring 50 per cent more, perhaps 25 to 50 per cent more.

Mr. LENROOT. So, upon the lowest estimate we save the Choctaw and Chickasaw Indians, according to the gentleman's lowest estimate, $6,000,000?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. No; the gentleman again is wrong. I said 25 to 50 per cent.

Mr. LENROOT. The gentleman said 50 per cent a minute ago.

SEVERAL MEMBERS. He modified it.

Mr. LENROOT. Of course, $3,000,000 may be a bagatelle to the Choctaws and Chickasaws, but it would be something of an amount to most of us.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, the amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin, if adopted, would affect the carrying out of our pledge to these Indians, and I think the gentleman does not want further to delay——

Mr. LENROOT. Does the gentleman want this pledge carried out to his Indians at the cost to them of several million dollars?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I certainly do not, Mr. Chairman. Neither do I want these Indians to die while gentlemen stand here and talk and prevent our pledge from being carried out with them, having their property held up in community when it should be divided among them in accordance with our sacred pledge made to them. Now, the gentleman speaks of selling 50,000 acres per year. That would mean that it will take 2 years before this sale can be made, and that would mean 11 years' delay before the pledge made to those Indian tribes can be carried out. It would mean 11 years more of supervision of this tribal estate, necessitating paying funds out of the Treasury and out of the tribal funds, as has been described to you by Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Now, here is a chance where we have an opportunity to discharge a pledge to those two tribes of Indians and at the same time dispense with the supervision of what the gentleman says is $12,000,000 worth of property, which is to-day costing the United States a valuable sum of money.

Mr. LENROOT. Will the gentleman yield again?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Yes.

Mr. LENROOT. I merely wish again to correct Oklahoma arithmetic. The gentleman said 11 years. Nine times fifty is 450,000, and there are 445,000 acres.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I think that is some more Wisconsin arithmetic. This bill provides for an appraisement and lapse of one year before the first sale can be made, so the gentleman himself will stand corrected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Chairman, this is a very important bill, and no amendment of more consequence has been offered than the one up for consideration.

After the coal and asphalt deposits have been twice offered for sale the bill provides that the same shall be sold at the third sale, after the expiration of six months from the second offering, by the Secretary of the Interior "to the highest bidder at public auction upon such terms as he may prescribe and at such valuation, independent of the appraised value, that he may fix." The amendment to strike out this proviso should not prevail. These deposits should be sold at some time and this legislation should provide a complete scheme whereby they can be sold, and if they can not be sold after being offered for sale twice for not less than the appraised value, then the Secretary of the Interior should be clothed with authority to sell them at less than the appraised value.

If stricken out and the coal and asphalt deposits are not sold at the first and second sales, then there will be new legislation needed upon the subject and we shall be compelled to come back to Congress for relief.

The Choctaws and Chickasaws do not want to do this. They have been trying to dispose of their affairs for almost 25 years. Their first agreement was made on April 23, 1897, and ratified by an act of Congress dated June 28, 1898. By the terms of this agreement the coal and asphalt deposits were reserved as the common property of the tribe, and provision was made for leasing them for periods not longer than 30 years and for the renewal of leases theretofore made and in existence.

Being desirous of winding up their affairs and not holding any of their property in common, a supplemental agreement was made with the Choctaws and Chickasaws, which was ratified on July 1, 1902, providing that no further leases should be made, and that the coal and asphalt deposits should be sold within three years by a commission composed of three persons appointed by the President.

Without the consent of the Choctaws and Chickasaws Congress by the act of April 21, 1904, provided for the sale of the unleased lands by sealed bids and for the reservation of the leased lands from sale. The sales were to be made in tracts of 960 acres. None of the mineral deposits authorized to be sold under this act were in fact sold. The act of April 26, 1906, withdrew all these lands, both leased and unleased, from sale, and since that time the Choctaws and Chickasaws in Oklahoma through their representatives have been endeavoring to get legislation providing for the sale of these lands.

Leases were made under the original Atoka agreement to the number of 113, covering a period of 30 years. All these leases were made prior to July 1, 1902, and the last one expires in 1932. No lease covers more than 960 acres, and a few cover smaller fractional tracts. In the aggregate these 113 leases cover 100,080 acres of land. Including the leased and unleased lands reserved from sale there is a total of 445,000 acres of land in these deposits, out of which 100,080 acres have been leased.

Under existing law these leases provide for the payment of an advance royalty, whether the leases are operated or not. The royalty was authorized to be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior, and was placed by him at 8 cents per ton for coal taken out of the mines. There is enough coal mined to bring an annual revenue of about $250,000 to the tribes. The law provides that there shall be paid as advance royalty $100 for the first and second years, $200 for the second and third years, and $500 for each succeeding year thereafter, and when these mines are developed credit is given the lessees for the royalty advanced at the rate of 8 cents per ton of coal mined.

The value of these properties is variously estimated. I would hesitate to place any estimate upon them. In the first place, I am not an expert on the subject, and in the second place, I do not have sufficient information. Perhaps as reliable an estimate of the value as can be given was that placed by William Cameron, who made an appraisement of these lands for the Department of the Interior. He had 50 years' experience in the coal-mining business and spent 25 years in that field. He returned an appraisement of $12,238,189.

We have already provided for the sale of the surface of these lands, separate and apart from the coal and asphalt deposits. This was done by the act of February 19, 1912, and the act of August 24, 1912. Under these acts nearly all the surface has been sold. The last was offered for sale in October of this year. The remainder can be, and in all probability will be, offered for sale at an early date. It can now be sold regardless of the appraised value.

This property belongs to the Choctaws and Chickasaws, who are enrolled as members of the two tribes. There are 20,799 Choctaws and 6,304 Chickasaws, making a total of 27,103.

Everybody in Oklahoma, so far as I know, unqualifiedly indorses this bill. The Dawes Commission was sent to the Indian Territory by the act of March 3, 1893, almost 25 years ago. The affairs of the Five Civilized Tribes have not as yet been wound up. With this piece of legislation enacted, their affairs can all be wound up under existing law. Congress at one time provided that they should be wound up by March 4, 1906, but enacted additional legislation from time to time. The principal chief of the Choctaw Nation, the Choctaw tribal attorney, the governor of the Chickasaw Nation, and the Chickasaw tribal attorney heartily indorse this bill. It has the approval of the Department of the Interior. The lessees in Oklahoma, who operate mines under leases made in accordance with existing law, are united in asking that Congress enact this legislation. This bill was prepared by the Oklahoma delegation in conference with the representatives of the tribes, the coal lessees, and committees representing the Indians and citizens of Oklahoma. It has had very careful consideration and meets with the unanimous approval of every person in Oklahoma, including Indian and white, citizen and noncitizen. It meets with the approval of every member of the Oklahoma delegation. Extended hearings have been had by the Committee on Indian Affairs on this and similar bills, and all the information that could be secured has been obtained. The Indian Committee visited McAlester, Okla., in March, 1917, and took a great deal of testimony from leading people, both Indian and white, and all asked for the enactment of this legislation. There is no division of opinion. It should be enacted and enacted now.

The bill, in brief, provides for reappraisement under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior of these coal and asphalt deposits and for their being offered for sale within six months thereafter at not less than the appraised value. A payment of 20 per cent of the amount offered must be paid down, and the rest may be paid in four equal annual installments. The deferred payments bear interest at the rate of 5 per cent. Upon full payment being made patents are issued. After one year from the first sale the lands are readvertised and sold to the highest bidder at public auction at not less than the appraised value. The second sale will include all lands not previously sold and any tracts upon which forfeitures have been declared for the nonpayment of the purchase price. After six months from the date of the second sale all the remaining unsold lands are offered for sale under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior at public auction upon such terms as he may prescribe and at such valuation, independent of the appraised value, as the Secretary may fix.

Section 4 provides that the coal and asphalt deposits shall be sold subject to these leases, and the lessees are given the preferential right to purchase the lands by paying the highest price offered, providing same is not less than the appraised value. The lessees are there by law. They have invested a great deal of money in these leases. Their rights are protected by this bill. They have shown the value of this property, and it was thought that this was a fair recognition for the money they had expended under existing law in the development of these deposits.

A provision is also contained in the bill whereby the State may acquire certain lands upon which the penitentiary is located upon the same terms as the lessees.

Section 6 gives general authority to the Secretary of the Interior to make rules and regulations not inconsistent with the act to carry out the provisions of the bill. There is an appropriation of $50,000 carried in the bill to pay the expenses of appraisement and sale. This will expedite the work and at the same time will permit extensive advertising of these valuable deposits, so that the highest price may be obtained therefor.

As at first stated, this is an important piece of legislation. It should be enacted. It carries out the promises made to the Chickasaws and Choctaws in the supplemental agreement ratified on July 1, 1902, 15 years thereafter. I think this is a splendid time to offer these mineral deposits for sale. Coal is in great demand, and it is believed that they will now bring as much money as could possibly be gotten for them at any time.

One-third of the enrolled Indians are now dead, and the Government should keep its word to these Indians and sell these lands, closing up their affairs as rapidly as possible. This legislation is the last thing necessary to be done. I hope that it will be adopted and that the proposed amendment will not be accepted.

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, I expect the object of this bill is twofold, first, to do justice to the Indians; and, second, to furnish the country with a sufficient supply of coal. I will not talk about the first proposition, but on the second proposition I desire to call attention to the fact that in the State of Ohio, the State that I represent in part, during the past few days public utilities have had to close because of the lack of coal, and in some parts of the State people have actually died for the want of sufficient fuel.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. EMERSON. Yes.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Has that ever occurred before in the State of Ohio?

Mr. EMERSON. I do not know that it has.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The gentleman is in favor of the Government running the coal business of the country. It would be more effective than appealing to the members of the committee at this time.

Mr. EMERSON. We have appealed to the fuel administrator and he is doing the best he can, but I would like to say a few words to Congress on the subject. I feel that instead of taking time to discuss new fields for the production of coal this Congress should be taking its time in discussing a proposition of how to transport the coal we now have in this country. When people are freezing to death because of the lack of fuel I think the proper thing to do is to spend the time of Congress in providing some means for furnishing fuel instead of producing more fuel that can not be furnished to them even if it was produced.

I have here a statement from some of the coal producers in this country, and it says this:

> Consumers rightly wish to know whether the difficulty results from any failure of endeavor on the part of the mine operators.
> On this subject the official reports of the United States Geological Survey are conclusive. They show that in 1916 the bituminous coal operators produced 60,000,000 tons more than in 1915; that in 1917 up to December 1 they produced approximately as much as during the entire year of 1916, and that the total output for 1917 will be at least 40,000,000 tons greater than the record tonnage of 1916.
> Plainly, therefore, since the bituminous mine operators in two years have added a round 100,000,000 tons to their production, the shortage of fuel is not due to any slackening of effort on their part.

Then it takes up the question of transportation of coal, and says:

> Producer and consumer must depend upon the railroads to bring the coal from the mines to the points of consumption.
> The coal operator can only bring his coal to the mouth of the mine. Unless there are empty railroad cars standing beneath his tipple into which the mine wagons can be dumped the mines can not operate, but must stop altogether. Storage bins have never been constructed at the bituminous mines because there is no special advantage in storing coal at the mines. The place to store it is, of course, at the points where it will be consumed.

Now, I want to say to the Members that I feel that something should be done by this Congress toward producing more freight cars to handle this coal and handle the food supply of this country if the executive department in the fuel and food administration branch can not do it. If it requires some act of Congress, we should do it. I for one feel that we owe an obligation to the people of this country to see to it that the food and the fuel that are produced within the confines of the United States should be distributed to those parts of the country where the food and fuel are absolutely needed at this time. [Applause.]

Why, the mayor of one of the cities in my district was indicted by a Federal grand jury for trying to assist the people of his stricken city in getting a supply of coal necessary to prevent suffering and death. I refer to the city of Willoughby, Ohio (Mayor Carmichael). This Congress must do something to relieve this situation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro-forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I believe the amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin is a very important one. It is as important as the bill itself. If I understand the proposition, there are about 445,000 acres of land. They are producing from this land about 3,000,000 tons of coal per year. This land has been appraised by two sets of appraisers. One set of appraisers fixed the valuation at $12,000,000 and the other set of appraisers fixed the valuation at $100,000,000; and now there is a provision, contrary to every law of the United States and every law of every State in the Union that I know anything about in cases like this, which provides that the Secretary of the Interior, in case he is unable to sell the land at the appraisement, may sell it at any price he may fix and upon any terms that he may prescribe.

I do not know of a single State in the Union wherein its laws do not provide in case of the sale of property of the estates of deceased persons or of guardians where an appraisement is required, and in case of sale the property must be sold at not less than the appraised value or at not less than a certain percentage of the appraised value. If such appraisement is too high the property can be reappraised. We stand here, and the Secretary of the Interior stands, as the guardian of this property, and I for one am not willing to let down every barrier for the protection of that property. I for one am not willing that we shall say that this property shall be sold for $12,000,000 when a set of appraisers has fixed the valuation at $100,000,000.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that there is in effect an appraised value of the land, and it sets out that it shall be sold at such valuation as the Secretary may prescribe.

Mr. GOOD. Yes; but the proviso also provides that he may sell it at any price.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. No; I am reading from the proviso now.

Mr. GOOD. The proviso is, and I am reading from it:

The Secretary of the Interior may, in his discretion, reject any or all bids that he does not consider adequate, but at the expiration of six months thereafter the Secretary of the Interior may again offer the land at public sale to the highest bidder at public auction upon such terms as he may prescribe and at such valuation, independent of the appraised valuation, as he may fix.

That is a power that we ought not to give to any public official, whether it relates to the land of the Indians or the public lands of the United States.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. How can we place a value upon it if we do not give the power to appraise it to some official?

Mr. GOOD. The gentleman knows that a court in the case of an estate will order the property to be reappraised. So here we can direct a reappraisement. But to give to one man the power of appraisement and then the power to sell it upon any terms that he may prescribe and at any valuation he may fix is, I say, an unusual power, and in the best interest of these Indians it ought not to be granted to the Secretary of the Interior or to anybody.

Mr. HASTINGS. That is exactly what we do in the first section of the bill.

Mr. GOOD. But you kill it all in this proviso. If this delegation of Representatives from Oklahoma is not ready to protect these Indians, and as I happen to have an Indian reservation in my district, I ask that this proviso be stricken out in the interest of these Indians.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. That motion has already been made and exhausted.

Mr. FERRIS. Then I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I ask that all debate close on this paragraph in five minutes.

Mr. LENROOT. I would like to have five minutes in reply.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. The gentleman had five minutes on his amendment.

Mr. LENROOT. Yes; but the gentleman is asking unanimous consent now.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the debate on this paragraph close in 25 minutes.

Mr. MADDEN. I would like to have about five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER] asks unanimous consent that the debate on this paragraph close in 25 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, the debate in this House very often runs very far afield, but the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] has just made a speech here that does not do credit to himself or to the unusually good observation he generally makes. The gentleman from Iowa seeks to throw the House into a frenzy here over legislation that is not only well guarded, but doubly guarded.

In the first place, these lands will have been appraised three times before any sale is had. In the second place, this section 3 provides that the land shall be offered twice in pursuance to the appraisement and for a price not less than the appraisement. In the third place, the bill provides that the Secretary of the Interior may reject each and every bid made or offered; and in the fourth place, the provision that the gentleman from Iowa complains of provides that the land is to be sold at public auction under competitive bids, where each and every man can bid as much as he thinks the property is worth, and where every man has a fair chance, where the Indians have a fair chance.

It does more than that. On line 18, page 3, it is provided that it is to be sold on such terms as he may prescribe. The truth about it is, Mr. Chairman, that there ought to be an end to this thing some time. We go through two long tedious offerings, two long tedious sales, appraisals, public advertisements, public bidding, public sale, public valuation, public approval, first, and then we go through that entire performance again and see to it that no errors or mistakes are made. Then the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] would have this property taken up by appraisers and hangers-on and the public nuisances that attach themselves to every piece of legislation that goes on down there.

There are men in our State who would like to serve on boards of appraisement at $5 or $10 a day for 5, 10, or 15 years more. I suppose the contract of the Government with these Indians to sell these lands within three years means nothing to the gentleman from Iowa; and the gentleman, with great solemnity, gets up and says, "If the Oklahoma delegation will not protect the Indians, I will do it." He would not know an Indian from a shock of corn if he should meet one in the road, and he knows it and the House knows it and the Indians know it. [Laughter.] The idea of the gentleman coming in here and dragging his wings on the ground and saying, "If the Oklahoma delegation will not protect the Indians, I will protect them!" We protect the Indian by paying most of the taxes while he votes, sits on the juries, and holds office. We have put into Statuary Hall in the United States Capitol a statue of Sequoyah as one of our most distinguished men. We pay most of the taxes, while the Indian goes to our white schools. We elect him to Congress, we elect him to the Senate, we elect him governor, and we do ourselves proud in so doing. I pause and ask what has the gentleman done in his State or elsewhere for the Indian? And then the gentleman says he "will protect him if we do not protect him!" [Laughter.] In the name of High Heaven, it does no credit to a gentleman who has been in the House as long as he has to throw any slurs like that upon the delegation in this House from a State struggling beneath a load almost too heavy to carry. The gentleman ought to be helping us and not obstructing us.

Let me plead with the gentleman from Iowa and other gentlemen here not to set up their own judgment against everyone who has given attention to it. We are only trying to carry out our treaty stipulations, and everyone ought to be willing to help do that.

Mr. GOOD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FERRIS. I will, although I have only a moment.

Mr. GOOD. Does the gentleman think it is in the interest of good government and good administration to enact a law that will give the Secretary of the Interior or anyone the right to sell a part of the public domain——

Mr. FERRIS. This is not public domain. The gentleman discloses that he does not know anything about it. It has been 100 years since this was public domain.

Mr. GOOD. To sell the lands belonging to the Indians upon such terms as he may prescribe, at such price as he may prescribe, independent of any valuation that he may fix or that the appraisers may fix?

Mr. FERRIS. I know the gentleman does not want to make a whole speech in my five minutes.

Mr. GOOD. No; but I ask that question.

Mr. FERRIS. The gentleman is launching out on a thing he knows nothing about and obstructing and trying to interfere with the Oklahoma delegation and the Indians and the Interior Department, who have given long and careful study to this question. I call attention to the fact that every Indian in the State is pleading that this be done. Everybody, from the lowest Indian to their chiefs, wants this to be done.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FERRIS. I hope the gentleman will not occupy my time. I have but little remaining.

Mr. MADDEN. I will arrange to let the gentleman have a part of my time. I just want to ask the gentleman from Oklahoma whether he thinks it wise to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to make an appraisement, and then, if necessary, to set aside the appraisement which he has made?

Mr. FERRIS. After it has been offered twice, yes; because all that will be left will be some little remnants, odds and ends. The first two sales will dispose of all this property except some little odds and ends. I ask the gentleman in all seriousness, should 435 Members of this House and 96 Senators, engaged in legislating for the prosecution of a great war, and should the Interior Department be called upon to get into motion every day over some little Oklahoma matter? I assume that it is the wish and will of the House to dispose of Oklahoma's Indian matters and get through with them and finish them and turn their attention to something else; and if you will adopt this section as it stands it will make one bite of a cherry and finish it up and not let it drag along and come back for another bill. There are a lot of people who would like to have these jobs last forever. We have suffered from that for 19 years. Do not make us suffer for 19 years more. We have had enough of it and we want to get through with it.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, it is perfectly natural that the Oklahoma delegation should take the position that they take upon this matter. I do not blame them for one moment. In the attitude they take I am frank to say that I believe they represent the wishes both of the white people and the Indians in the State of Oklahoma; but that is no reason why we who are not from Oklahoma should follow them if they are wrong. Of course, these Indians down there would rather have $100 in cash to-day than $500 six months from now. I have Indians in my district. I know their nature, and I apprehend the Indians in Oklahoma are not unlike the Indians in other sections of the country. But that is no reason why we should not have a careful regard for the interests of the Indians. I understand very well why the white people of Oklahoma should favor the passage of this bill, even though it means depriving the Indians of 50 per cent of the value of their land. Anywhere from $12,000,000 to $100,000,000 going into circulation among the white people of the State of Oklahoma—I do not blame them for wanting it. But, Mr. Chairman, that is no reason why we should pass this bill in this form. Gentlemen talk about the propriety of authorizing the Secretary of the Interior, if the appraised value of the land can not be secured, to sell it for whatever he may see fit. Why, the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] is chairman of the Committee on the Public Lands. We have now before us in that committee a bill providing for the sale of coal lands at their appraised value. If such a provision as this in this bill should be brought before the House, it would be fought by the gentleman from Oklahoma, fought by myself, and would not receive 10 votes in this House. Shall we be less careful and tender of the rights of the Indians than we are of the public domain? That is all there is to this proposition, Mr. Chairman.

If they can not sell these lands at the end of two years at the appraised value, then let us direct the Secretary of the Interior to make a new appraisement, if necessary, and reoffer them upon those terms. But that is not the proposition. The language as it stands does not even require the Secretary of the Interior to fix any value upon it. The language as it stands in this bill is that he shall make an arbitrary valuation and reoffer them for sale, and if it is 50 per cent of what the land is worth, if this proviso remains in the bill, he must put such a value on the land as will result in the sale of the land. It means a combination of the coal purchasers not to bid on the first appraisal, not to bid on the second offering, but to wait until the offering comes under this proviso, knowing that they will get the land at perhaps 50 per cent of what they would be willing to pay if this proviso did not remain in the bill.

Mr. HASTINGS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes.

Mr. HASTINGS. That was not the experience of Oklahoma when the surface was offered for sale.

Mr. LENROOT. There is no comparison between selling agricultural lands, the surface of land, to men who want to farm and selling these coal lands to large combinations of capital where it requires, as has been stated, $500,000 to operate a coal mine.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. All the other minerals went with the surface.

Mr. LENROOT. The gentleman said he did not know of any oil; does he know of any other minerals in the land?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. There might be some chance of lead and zinc.

Mr. LENROOT. Does the gentleman think that had anything to do with the value of the surface lands?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I think some of them were sold with a view to mining.

Mr. LENROOT. How much?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I do not know.

Mr. LENROOT. Did they get any more for the land in view of the fact that there might be other minerals there?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I should think that perhaps they did.

Mr. LENROOT. But the gentleman does not know.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, my only objection to this section of the bill is as to the authority proposed to be given to the Secretary of the Interior. I do not think it wise to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to fix an appraised value on the land and then in the same breath authorize the Secretary of the Interior to set aside that value. It may be very well seen that if he is given that authority men who are interested in the purchase of these lands will refuse to bid on the first and second offers for sale, wait until the Secretary is compelled to set aside the valuation which he himself has made, and then come in with prices that are far below the real value, and in that way do a great injustice to the people who own the land.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Does not the gentleman think that the Indians are fully protected by the words "at such valuation as he may fix"?

Mr. MADDEN. No; he may fix any valuation.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. He makes the valuation at the start.

Mr. MADDEN. He is compelled to make an appraisal at the start, and then he is authorized to set it aside and sell the land at whatever price may be offered.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. He is authorized to make an appraisal of the value which the land must bring at the first and second sale. At the third sale he may sell them at such valuation as he may fix, which means a new appraisal.

Mr. MADDEN. No; he may sell the land at any price that may be offered. If I come in and offer a price far below the value, the Secretary of the Interior under this provision of the bill is authorized to fix the price that I make. The Secretary of the Interior is authorized to accept the price offered, and consequently he fixes the price of the bidder.

Mr. HASTINGS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. HASTINGS. What does the language mean when it says "upon such terms as he may prescribe and at such valuation," unless it means that he is to make an appraisement of it?

Mr. MADDEN. He is not authorized to make an appraisal in the third sale.

Mr. HASTINGS. In the first and second he is.

Mr. MADDEN. And then he may set it aside.

Mr. HASTINGS. The third time he is to sell at such valuation, and what is the difference between the word "valuation" and "appraisement"?

Mr. MADDEN. At such valuation as he may fix. I may be the man who is bidding on the land and I may fix such a price as I think the land is worth, and the Secretary may accept the price fixed, and therefore he fixes my valuation.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. And he may not accept it.

Mr. HASTINGS. What is the difference between appraisal and valuation by the same person?

Mr. MADDEN. It leaves the Secretary unlimited power to fix any valuation he sees fit.

Mr. HASTINGS. Could not he do it in the first place?

Mr. LENROOT. It does not contemplate any judgment on the part of the Secretary that he may exercise. He may sell it for the minimum amount arbitrarily fixed by him.

Mr. MADDEN. If there is any doubt about the language it ought to be rectified. It is our duty to make the language so clear that there should be no doubt about it. The Secretary of the Interior ought not to want authority to do anything about which there is any doubt as to the propriety of it.

Mr. HASTINGS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. HASTINGS. Probably the gentleman from Illinois has not been here during all the discussion in the House,

Mr. MADDEN. Yes; I have been present.

Mr. HASTINGS. This property has been appraised and a good deal of data collected, and it is contemplated that the Secretary will make the appraisement from the data that he already has in his office. That was stated in general debate on the bill. The Secretary is authorized to make an appraisement of the property in the first and second sales. Now, there is no difference between the word "valuation" and "appraisement" as used in the proviso.

Mr. MADDEN. Why put it in; why not give the Secretary the authority to sell at the third sale under an appraisal and not change it by other language?

Mr. HASTINGS. He is to offer it twice under an appraisement.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I do not understand how there can be any dispute on the point which has been raised here. In lines 7, 8, and 9 on the first page we find that before offering such coal and asphalt deposits for sale the Secretary of the Interior, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, shall cause the same to be appraised by a board of appraisers consisting of three members, to be appointed by the President.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Yes.

Mr. HASTINGS. That was stricken out. The gentleman was not in the House at the time. In lieu of that an amendment has been adopted that the appraisement is to be made by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Alone?

Mr. HASTINGS. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Without any board?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Under his direction he shall cause it to be made.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. What was the theory upon which that was stricken out? So as to make it possible for him to do what is contemplated evidently by the proviso on page 3:

Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior, in his discretion, may reject any or all bids which he does not consider adequate, but at the expiration of six months thereafter the Secretary of the Interior may again readvertise and offer the same for final sale to the highest bidder at public auction, upon such terms as he may prescribe and at such valuation, independent of the appraised value, as he may fix.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. It was done at the suggestion of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] in deference to his request. That was the reason the amendment was placed in the bill.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. But if that amendment remains in the bill and this proviso also is enacted into law, then we turn over the sale of all this enormously valuable land absolutely to the discretion of one man.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] moves to strike out the proviso, and that is the pending amendment.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The present Secretary, Mr. Lane, is a man of high character and of quite unusual ability. There is no doubt about that. And therefore, in saying what I am about to say, I do not wish it to be understood as applicable in the remotest degree to him. But there have been members of the Cabinets of former Presidents of the United States, not in recent years, but in years well remembered by the membership of the House, to whom we would not commit such extreme power as is proposed by this bill, and especially by the proviso. One Cabinet officer was impeached for gross corruption and driven from office. This ought to be a Government of laws and not of men, and property under our control and worth a hundred million dollars should not be turned over to be sold at the discretion of and at a price fixed by any executive officer, no matter how exalted his reputation. We ourselves are trustees of this great property and it is our duty to see that there is no possibility of fraud being perpetrated on these Indians, helpless in our hands.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, there was no intention upon the part of your Committee on Indian Affairs, the Secretary of the Interior, or anyone else to have these lands sold without the Secretary being permitted to fix a price for the last sale. Gentlemen have talked about these lands being offered for sale without appraisement as if they really were offered for sale without appraisement. Let me read the committee what the bill provides. Section 1 provides for an appraisement of the lands, as all gentlemen agree, and then provides that the sale of such deposits shall be thoroughly advertised and shall, at the end of 90 days from such appraisement, be offered for sale to the highest bidder at public auction, and so forth. That is sale No. 1. Section 3 provides that immediately after the expiration of one year, when asphalt deposits shall have been offered for sale, or forfeited for nonpayment under the terms of the sale, the Secretary of the Interior shall readvertise and cause to be sold to the highest bidder at public auction all coal and asphalt deposits remaining unsold, and so forth. An amendment has been adopted providing that they could not be sold for less than the appraised value. There are two sales completed, one of them 6 months after the appraisement and the other 18 months after the appraisement. Then comes the final cleaning up. If the history of the past can be used as a guide, all these minerals will be disposed of in the first two sales, except a few small tracts and perhaps some tracts that do not contain workable coal at this time. In order to take care of this, the following proviso is inserted:

Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior, in his discretion, may reject any or all bids which he does not consider adequate, but at the expiration of six months thereafter the Secretary of the Interior may again readvertise and offer the same for final sale to the highest bidder at public auction, upon such terms as he may prescribe and at such valuation, independent of the appraised value, as he may fix.

It seems to me clear that this means that the Secretary is to make a reappraisement of these lands for a third sale. Must we expect that he will stand up as the Secretary of the Interior and in haphazard manner say when a man makes an offer that those deposits he bids on are or are not worth that amount of money? The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] has paid the present Secretary of the Interior a very high compliment, and I agree with him, and I think that he and all other Members will agree that that is not the way the present Secretary of the Interior does business.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman accept an amendment requiring the Secretary to make a new appraisement?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I have not any objection to a new appraisement being made if the gentleman is going to insist upon it. I would not object to it, but I do not see any occasion for it, because he is given the right to make the appraisement, and some of my friends on the committee have objected to any appraisement whatever being made of lands, as the gentleman knows, and I have stood for the reappraisement and have stated on the floor that I did not think the Secretary felt like taking the responsibility of selling this valuable property without some kind of an appraisement. I think there is full protection given under the terms of the bill. I do not believe it necessary to amend it except that there ought to be an amendment, as suggested a few moments ago by the gentleman from Wisconsin, striking out the part of the language in the beginning of the amendment to make it conform to another amendment already adopted. If the gentleman is not too insistent upon it, I would prefer that we permit this bill to pass in the language that has already been approved by the Secretary of the Interior, which he evidently considers as giving full protection to all parties concerned.

Mr. LENROOT. I do not want to take up the gentleman's time——

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. LENROOT. I want to say to the gentleman that the whole discussion up to a few minutes ago has been upon the theory that the authority should not be upon the appraisement at all but the Secretary fix a bottom price irrespective of what he might consider its value.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I do not know to what the gentleman refers. I have certainly made no such contention.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I will ask for a vote.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, referring to the question——

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from New York may have one minute to ask his question.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, referring to the question which the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] has just put, how would you ever expect to get rid of the ends of this property which were left by simply having another appraisement, after having another appraisement and two sales by public letting? Would it not be the only possible way you could ever expect to get rid of the ends of this property by giving discretion to some one to sell at some price?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I think so.

Mr. SNYDER. It seems to me that is absolutely a business proposition and the only way it can ever be cleaned up; otherwise it will go on indefinitely year after year if we continue to have appraisals one following the other.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. And all costing the Indians money.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the proviso beginning in line 15, top of page 3, down to and including line 20.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced the noes appeared to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. LENROOT) there were—ayes 31, noes 42.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment; page 3, line 15, strike out, after the word "that," the following language, "the Secretary of the Interior, in his discretion, may reject any or all bids which he does not consider adequate, but." That makes it conform to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, line 15, after the word "that" strike out the following: "The Secretary of the Interior, in his discretion, may reject any or all bids which he does not consider adequate, but."

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I move an amendment to the amendment, to strike out lines 19 and 20 and insert a period after the word "prescribed."

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. That does not affect my amendment; let us dispose of that.

Mr. GOOD. I will withdraw the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to withdraw his amendment to the amendment. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out lines 19 and 20, on page 3.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GOOD: Page 3, line 19, strike out "and at such valuation, independent of the appraised value, as he may fix."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I offer a further amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GOOD: Page 3, line 16, after the word "again" add "cause the same to be reappraised and he may," and add a period after the word "prescribed," line 18, and strike out lines 19 and 20.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. Provided, That such deposits of coal or asphalt on the leased lands shall be sold subject to all rights of the lessee and that any person acquiring said deposits of coal or asphalt shall take the same subject to said rights and acquire the same under the express understanding and agreement that the Department of the Interior will cancel and withdraw all rules and regulations and relinquish all authority heretofore exercised over the operation of said mines by reason of the Indian ownership of said property and that said properties thereafter shall be operated under and in conformity with such laws as may be applicable thereto, and that advance royalty paid by any lessee and standing to the credit of said lessee shall be credited by said purchaser to the extent of the amount thereof, and that no royalties shall be paid by said lessee to said purchaser until the credit so given shall be exhausted at the rate of 8 cents per ton mine run, and that the royalty to be paid thereafter by said lessee to said purchaser shall be 8 cents per ton mine run of coal, and that any lessee may, at any time after completion of such sale, transfer or dispose of his leasehold interest without any restriction whatever; and that any lessee shall have the preferential right, provided the same is exercised within 90 days after the approval of the completion of the appraisement of the minerals as herein provided, to purchase at the appraised value any or all of the surface of the lands lying within such lease held by him and heretofore reserved by order of the Secretary of the Interior and upon the terms as above provided, and shall also have the preferential right to purchase the coal deposits embraced in any lease held by such lessee by taking same at the highest price offered by any responsible bidder at public auction; and if any lessee becomes the purchaser of any coal deposits on any undeveloped lease owned by him, then one-half of the advance royalties paid by any lessee on such lease shall be credited on the purchase price thereof, and the advance royalties heretofore paid by any lessee shall be credited to such lessee on account of any production of coal on any other lease which he may own and operate: And provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed as limiting or curtailing the rights of any lessee from acquiring additional surface lands for mining operations as provided by the act of Congress of February 19, 1912.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma: Page 5, line 10, after the word "lessee," insert the words "or owner of mineral deposits."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I wish the gentleman would take some time to explain his amendment before we vote upon it.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this amendment is to give to the purchaser of coal deposit the same right which the lessee now has. Under the act of February, 1912, under which the surface of this land was sold, the lessees were given the right to purchase a certain amount of the surface that might be necessary for the operation of the mines. Only about a hundred thousand acres of the land, as I have stated, is leased. There will be 335,000 acres which will be purchased which is not complicated by leases. The purchaser ought to have the same right as the lessee has of ingress and egress and to go upon the land and prospect for coal or make development. Now, this proposes to give the same right given to the lessee. It was unintentionally omitted in the first place.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I have another amendment which I wish to offer.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma offers another amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma: Page 5, line 1, after the word "auction," insert the following: "At not less than the appraised value."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, the language sought to be amended here provides that the lessees may have the preferential right of purchase. I do not think they should have that preferential right at less than the appraised value. As a protection to the Indians and a protection to the heirs we would like to have these words placed in, "at not less than the appraised value."

Mr. LENROOT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Yes.

Mr. LENROOT. Under the previous provisions of the section these lessees are given the right to purchase at the appraised value any of these lands.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. No; not any. They are given the right to purchase only those parts on which they may have a lease. It amounts now to about 50,000 acres.

Mr. LENROOT. I understand. But when they have that right why should they be given the additional right, if they do not see fit to exercise the right of purchasing them at the appraised value, and, after a bid has come in, go and take it away from the highest bidder by being willing to pay the same price.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. That does not refer specifically to this amendment. I am satisfied the gentleman is in favor of this amendment.

Mr. LENROOT. I am.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Suppose, then, we take a vote on it?

Mr. LENROOT. All right.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, on page 3, line 21, after the numeral "4," to strike out the word "Provided."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma: Page 3, line 21, after the numeral "4," strike out the word "Provided."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

I wish to inquire of the chairman of the committee whether the position of my colleague is correct that these lessees would have the preferential right to purchase any of the coal lands other than that to which the lease now pertains. As I read the bill, they would only have the preferential right to purchase at the appraised value the surface of all such lands as are now under lease, and they would have the additional right to purchase the coal deposits embraced in any lease held by them at the highest price offered by any responsible bidder. As I understand the bill, they have not the right to purchase additional deposits which are not covered by their lease at the price bid in at public auction?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. The gentleman is absolutely correct. The bill does not give the lessee the right to purchase any deposits except those on which he has a lease, and the existing law, which is continued here, does not give him the right to purchase any of the surface except that on which he has a lease.

Mr. ROBBINS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I desire to ask a question.

On page 5, lines 6 and 7, there is a provision which says that where a lessee of this property is the purchaser he shall have the right to have credited on account of the purchase money the amount that he has paid for the production of coal. Now, I want to ask the chairman of the committee if that means where the lessee has been operating this coal for 8 or 10 years and, say, has paid $10,000 in royalty, and he would buy any of these 940-acre blocks for $900,000, would he only pay that for it? The owner of the surface is the owner of the fee, and here you propose to sell the coal-mining rights and to credit the purchaser, if he is lessee, with the amount of royalties paid prior thereto on that lease.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I will read the gentleman the law about that, and that will explain it better than I can tell him. It says:

All lessees shall pay on each coal or asphalt claim at the rate of $100 per annum in advance for the first and second years, $200 per annum in advance for the third and fourth years, and $500 for each succeeding year thereafter. All such payments shall be treated as advanced royalty on the mine or claim on which they are made, and shall be a credit as royalty when each said mine is developed and operated.

Now, under their leases they pay 8 cents royalty. This provision of law is carried in somewhat modified language in their lease, the intention of which is that he shall pay $100, $200, and $500 advance royalty; that is, the lessee shall and will be credited with the royalty as he mines the coal.

Mr. ROBBINS. That is all right. That is advance payment on the royalty per annum.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I thought that was what the gentleman was discussing.

Mr. ROBBINS. I know, but I am discussing this feature of the bill, that he is allowed a credit on the purchase price if he is the lessee of the amount of royalty he has heretofore paid.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Why not? The royalty is not forfeited except on failure to mine the coal during the life of the lease. This advanced royalty is not a penalty. It is simply a deposit in good faith for the operation of the mines, for which the lessee is given credit at 8 cents per ton when he takes the coal out. When he purchases the coal he still has 15 years to carry out that contract, which would probably enable him to get credit for all these advanced royalties. The only thing they ask here is that this right be not interfered with, but that he be allowed to apply the royalty paid on the purchase price.

Mr. STAFFORD. Only one-half of the royalty.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Yes; one-half.

Mr. ROBBINS. If he buys one of these blocks of 940 acres, of which 100 acres has been mined, and he has extracted 4,000 tons to the acre, he has paid $320 for that much coal. Now, if he buys a 940-acre tract he pays $500, and you credit him with——

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. No; we credit him with advance royalty of $100, $200, and $500 per annum, which he has already paid for coal still in the ground.

Mr. ROBBINS. Why don't you sell the coal with the acreage of coal that remains at the time and leave the royalty out of the question?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Another purchaser may come in. He has no lease on the land, and he wants to bid on all the coal in the land. We want to make the chances for bidding as nearly uniform as possible.

Mr. LENROOT. I will ask for information on this question; I confess I do not fully understand. Is there not a double credit here in this language? First you give him credit on one-half of the royalty if he becomes a purchaser and then he is given full credit for both halves on any coal in the mines that he has never leased.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. No. Here is the situation: Under the lease as made by this lessee he is required to pay an advance royalty before the coal is mined. As the coal is produced he is permitted to apply advance royalty at 8 cents a ton only on the lease on which that advance royalty was paid. The intention of this provision is that we may close the matter up with him and end it. If he has paid $5,000 advance royalty on lease No. 1 and $2,500 on lease No. 2, and if he has operated on No. 2 and not on No. 1, we would give credit of $7,500 on the one lease instead of carrying it on as at the present time.

Mr. LENROOT. Suppose the purchaser becomes a purchaser of one tract of land. He is just given credit for $4,000 on his purchase price of that tract. Is that correct?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Yes.

Mr. LENROOT. If he has another lease on which he is producing coal he is given credit for $8,000 royalty on the coal?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. No; I do not think the gentleman caught what I intended to say.

Mr. LENROOT. I call the gentleman's attention to the language, and ask him whether it is not a credit of $12,000?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Let us read the language.

Mr. LENROOT. It is on page 5, beginning with line 2.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. The language is:

And if any lessee becomes the purchaser of any coal deposits on any undeveloped lease owned by him, then one-half of the advance royalties paid by any lessee on such lease shall be credited on the purchase price thereof.

Now, as a matter of fact, that lessee would be entitled to full credit for all the advance royalty he had paid, and he contended and claimed that, and fought for it for days. But the tribal attorney representing the Choctaws and Chickasaws would not agree to surrender more than one-half the value of that royalty. That disposed of that. The Indians make a distinct gain of 50 per cent of the advance royalty he has paid in. Now, what else? I read further:

And the advance royalties heretofore paid by any lessee shall be credited to such lessee on account of any production of coal on any other lease which he may own and operate.

What we intended to say there was that he might switch his royalty from one lease to another and close up.

Mr. LENROOT. Does not the gentleman agree with me that this language does not accomplish that thing? He gets credit for 50 per cent more than he has paid in on advance royalty if he happens to have a lease.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. You might add a proviso there at the end of that which would prevent that, I think.

Mr. STAFFORD. Why could you not accomplish the purpose by inserting, before the word "advance," the words "and any balance of advance royalties remaining to the credit of the lessee"?

Mr. LENROOT. I suggest that we pass over the section temporarily. I think we can prepare and agree upon an amendment there.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I think that would cure it.

Mr. LENROOT. In some cases there would be no balance at all, because he would not become a purchaser.

Mr. STAFFORD. There would still be a balance.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I think the word "balance" would cover it.

Mr. STAFFORD. There would still be a balance, because some of the advance royalty would be credited.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Let the gentleman offer his amendment.

Mr. STAFFORD. Strike out the word "the" in line 5, page 5, and insert "any residue of," and after the word "royalties" insert the words "belonging to the lessee."

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. No. Let it be "paid by the lessee." I would not make a statutory admission of the lessee's ownership claim, because that is contested by the authorities of the tribes.

Mr. STAFFORD. I leave out that last suggestion. Just strike out the word "the" and insert "any residue of."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. STAFFORD: Amend, page 5, line 5, after the word "on," by striking out the word "the."

Mr. ROBBINS. No; after the word "and." There is no word "on" there.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "and" strike out the word "the," and insert in lieu thereof the following: "any residue of."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 5. That the surface of any segregated coal and asphalt lands in the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations, in the State of Oklahoma, which may have been, or may be, condemned under the laws of the State of Oklahoma for State penal institutions, or for county or municipal purposes, as authorized by the Indian appropriation act approved March 3, 1909, shall be construed to include the entire estate, save the coal and asphalt reserved: Provided, That the State of Oklahoma shall have the preferential right of purchase, at the appraised value thereof, upon the same terms applying to other coal and asphalt deposit sales under this act, all coal and asphalt deposits underlying the surface heretofore purchased by the said State of Oklahoma, and more particularly described as follows: Southeast quarter and south half of the northeast quarter of section 33; south half of and northeast quarter and south half of northwest quarter, and northeast quarter of northwest quarter of section 34; all of section 35, and the southeast quarter of southwest quarter of section 26; and south half of southeast quarter of section 26; and south half of southwest quarter of section 25; and northwest quarter and west half of southwest quarter and west half of east half of southwest quarter and northeast quarter of northeast quarter of southwest quarter and west half of southeast quarter of northeast quarter of southwest quarter and west half of east half of southeast quarter of southwest quarter of section 36, township 6 north, range 14 east.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I wish to offer an amendment. It is merely grammatical. It is to strike out the word "applying," on page 5, line 24, and insert in lieu thereof the words "as applied."

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I have no objection to that, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. STAFFORD: Amend, page 5, line 24, by striking out the word "applying" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "as applied."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ROBBINS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, in line 21, page 5, after the word "asphalt," to add the words "with proper mining rights." I offer this amendment because——

Mr. STAFFORD. Let the amendment be reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ROBBINS: Page 5, line 21, after the word "asphalt" insert the words "with proper mining rights."

Mr. ROBBINS. I want to ask the chairman of the committee a question about this. This is a severance of the coal from the surface. Most of the Commonwealths—I do not know how it is with Oklahoma—follow the English rule, which is that the conveyance of the title to the coal does not pass with it the right to injure or damage the superincumbent surface. If that right is not conveyed, it is impossible to mine the mineral without subjecting the owner of the mineral to large damages from the owner of the superincumbent surface and the superior estate. I ask the chairman whether there is a provision for that in this bill.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. No; the present law, the act of February 19, 1912, provides fully and exhaustively for that. It defines the mining rights of the lessees and owners of the minerals, provides that they shall have ingress and egress, that they may enter upon the land and take possession of it for the purposes necessary to mining. I explained this the other day. It stipulates that whenever a dispute arises with reference to the price the question shall be submitted to two arbitrators, one to be appointed by the owner of the surface and one by the owner or lessee of the minerals; that a third appraiser may be appointed by the Federal judge of that district, and that their appraisement shall be final. In the meantime the owner of the coal deposit may enter upon the surface and use such part of it as is necessary during the pendency of the controversy.

Mr. ROBBINS. That is the statutory provision?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Yes.

Mr. ROBBINS. It does not depend on the common-law doctrine applicable to the rights of the owners of the surface and the overlying strata?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. No. That was very carefully scrutinized and gone over by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], and by the Solicitor of the Interior Department, and by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL], and several others at the time.

Mr. ROBBINS. That seems to be adequate for the mining of the coal, and in view of the explanation made by the gentleman from Oklahoma I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. HASTINGS. That provision of the statute is referred to and reenacted in line 12, page 5, of this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 6. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to prescribe such rules, regulations, terms, and conditions, not inconsistent with this act, as he may deem necessary to carry out its provisions and shall establish an office for such purpose at McAlester, Pittsburg County, Okla.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to line 20, page 6, to strike out the word "shall" and insert the word "may."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LENROOT: Page 6, line 20, strike out the word "shall" and insert in lieu thereof the word "may."

Mr. LENROOT. Is there any objection to that amendment?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I do not think that ought to be adopted.

Mr. LENROOT. I hoped the chairman of the committee would accept this amendment. If he had I would not have cared to discuss it. We have here a very peculiar provision, requiring the Secretary of the Interior to establish an office in a particular town for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this act, something entirely new to me in legislation. Certainly if the authority is granted, as it will be granted if my amendment is adopted, the Secretary will establish the office if he deems it necessary, and everything will be accomplished that ought to be accomplished. But I say Congress ought not to require the establishment of an office to carry out the provisions of this or any other law if the responsible party who is administering that law does not deem it necessary. It means only an additional expense, and if the Secretary of the Interior deems it unnecessary to establish an office in this place, or if he deems it necessary to establish it in some other place, surely it ought to be left to his discretion as to whether the office shall be established in a particular place or not.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, it has been left to the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, and, as the gentleman knows, the Secretary has agreed to that provision along with the balance of the bill, and has made no objection whatever to it. If the Secretary had really made any objection to it I should not insist upon it.

Mr. LENROOT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Yes.

Mr. LENROOT. The gentleman knows quite as well as I do that a Cabinet officer will not urge the placing of discretion upon him if Congress is willing to take the responsibility.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. On the contrary, in my experience with Cabinet officers I have always found that they are anxious to take responsibility, and always prefer discretion rather than arbitrary legislation commanding them to do a certain thing. Now, if the Secretary had asked for this amendment I would not object at all; but his subordinates agreed that the office should be established there. As I recall, the Secretary himself said nothing about it. McAlester is in the center of the coal fields. Every activity of the coal mining there is carried on from this town. It does not make a particle of difference to me politically, because practically all the lands are in the district which I represent anyway, and the office would have to be located in that district, with McAlester as the logical place.

Mr. LENROOT. Does not the gentleman think the Secretary would have a better judgment upon this question than this House now has?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I think so; and I think he expressed that judgment when he sent a letter to us, recommending that this bill pass and suggesting certain amendments, and not suggesting any change in this.

Mr. LENROOT. The gentleman knows that the Secretary would not call attention to a very minor matter like this.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I think it a matter of minor importance, because that is where the office would be located, anyway.

Mr. GILLETT. The gentleman says that the Secretary of the Interior acquiesces in this. Of course, when the chairman of a committee of the House of Representatives asks for a certain location, a little piece of patronage as it really is, to get it located in his district, the Secretary is not going to object to it. He is going to acquiesce. But it does not follow that it ought to be done. I agree most heartily with what the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] says. I think it is an outrage. I have never known it to be done before——

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Oh, the gentleman does not think it is an outrage, I know.

Mr. GILLETT. For the House of Representatives to fix it, on the pretense that the Secretary of the Interior does not object.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. The gentleman is taking up a good deal of my time. I have only five minutes.

Mr. GILLETT. The gentleman has all the time there is. There has been no effort to curtail the gentleman's time, and I think there will not be. But if the gentleman from Oklahoma thinks the Secretary really feels that way, why is he not willing to leave it to his discretion and not establish a precedent of this kind? I do not wish to debate this subject much, for I do not pretend to know much about it, but it seems to me that this is an innovation and a precedent which ought not to be established.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. It is practically the same language that was carried in the act for the sale of the surface. It is not an innovation. I am free to confess that it does not make a great deal of difference to me.

Mr. GILLETT. Then why not agree to the amendment?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. The Secretary of the Interior has agreed to the bill in this condition. Mr. Chairman, I think we ought not to waste our time—and if the gentleman wants that word in there it may go in, although I think any lawyer would agree that both words mean exactly the same thing. Let us vote on it, for I do not think we ought to take up time in discussing so unimportant a matter.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ROBBINS].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. GARRETT of Texas) there were 35 ayes and 40 noes.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment: Line 21, page 6, after the word "purpose," strike out the words "at McAlester, Pittsburg County," and insert in lieu thereof the words "in the State of."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 6, line 21, after the word "purpose," strike out the words "at McAlester, Pittsburg County," and in lieu thereof insert the words "in the State of."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, there is a question of principle involved in Congress designating a place where this office shall be established without any knowledge of the fact. The chairman says that the words "may" and "shall" are interchangeable. I grant that if the words remain as they are they would be interchangeable, but the Secretary of the Interior should have the authority to determine the location, regardless of what any members of the committee may say as to there being only one place where it should be located. If the gentleman is correct that there is only one place, and that is McAlester, they should have no objection to the amendment proposed. If we provide that there must be an office established in Oklahoma, certainly they should be willing to leave it to the judgment of the Secretary of the Interior to locate it, especially if he must necessarily locate it at McAlester. Certainly we ought not in this legislation to designate a place without having any formal report from the Secretary of the Interior. I have no objection to a local office being established, but it should be left to the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. SNYDER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. SNYDER. A few moments ago the gentleman was very much agitated about letting the Secretary of the Interior have some discretion, and now he wants to give him full authority.

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, the gentleman misconstrues the position of those who opposed the provision in the bill which permitted the local mining capitalists to refuse to bid on the first and second sales and hold back so that they could get the property at any price they pleased. It was vital to the interests of the Indians that we should strike out the proviso. But no; you would not allow the Secretary to make a new appraisal, but you give these men a chance to hold back from the purchase at its appraised value and wait until the 18 months expired and then get the property at the lower price.

But, going back to the original proposition, we do not object to the office being established, but say it should be left to the Secretary to determine rather than have Congress determine the location. The Secretary has not recommended that the bill be adopted in this phraseology. The Secretary of the Interior did not send up a report saying that the bill in this phraseology should be passed. I took it on myself, in view of the fact that we had no report last week, to call up the Assistant Secretary of the Interior and ask him whether the bill met the approval of the Secretary. That is the reason why the Secretary has been prompted to send a letter indorsing the bill which has been read here. He indorses the principle of the bill, but he did not have the temerity to object to the principal city in the district of the gentleman who is sponsor for the bill. If the gentleman from Oklahoma says that McAlester is the only place suitable for the establishment of this office, he should have no objection to leaving it to the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior and let him exercise it.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. This is the same provision carried in the act for the sale of the surface. The gentleman says that the Secretary of the Interior has not indorsed this bill. Here is a letter which has been read two or three times, and still gentlemen persist in saying that the Secretary does not indorse the bill. What the basis is upon which they make that statement is beyond me. The gentleman from Wisconsin is usually very careful, and yet he makes the statement. The Secretary says: "If the bill is amended as herein suggested I recommend that it receive favorable consideration of Congress."

Mr. LENROOT. What amendments does he propose?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. He presents first an amendment that after the word "sale" the words "at public auction to the highest bidder" be included, which we have done. Then, after the word "appraisement," in line 15, page 2, the following be inserted: "Provided, That said appraisement shall not be effective until approved by the Secretary of the Interior."

Both of these amendments have been adopted. The date of the letter is December 11, 1917. Every line of this bill was submitted to him, and he says that after careful consideration of the matter he recommends that it be passed.

I just mentioned the fact that the surface act locates the office at McAlester. McAlester is in the immediate district where these lands are. The office would be placed there, anyway. There is no doubt about that. About all that could be accomplished by such an amendment as this would be to discredit me with some of my friends back at home by showing that after the Secretary had recommended this location and the Committee on Indian Affairs had reported favorably, I was unable to retain the item in the bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, it is furthest from my mind to humiliate my good friend before anyone, and if it will humiliate him at all, even though a principle is involved, I shall ask unanimous consent to withdraw my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be withdrawn.

There was no objection.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, I want to say just a word with reference to the care and scrutiny given this bill by the Interior Department. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER] has just read the report of the Secretary of the Interior, and I am not reflecting upon the Secretary, but I do want to say this: The gentleman suggests that the Secretary of the Interior, whom he would now have the House believe is so infallible, if there had been anything in this bill which he desired corrected, would have indicated it in his report. I call the attention of the House to this fact. The bill as reported by the committee and as now favorably recommended by the Secretary of the Interior provided that upon the second offering of these lands they need not be sold at their appraised value; yet the gentleman himself, the chairman of the committee, offered an amendment correcting that, although it was not suggested by the Secretary.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Yes; and I do not think the amendment was really necessary, but it was offered in deference to the suggestion made by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. LENROOT. I made that suggestion and I am glad I did, because it resulted in the protection of this second sale.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. The gentleman and I differ about that.

Mr. LENROOT. There is one other matter that the gentleman will not differ with me about. As the bill was reported from the committee and favorably recommended by the Secretary of the Interior, it expressly provided that the lessee should have a preferential right to purchase the tract of land in which he had a leasehold interest at the price bid by the highest bidder, without any reference to the appraised value, and the gentleman himself, irrespective and regardless of the fact that the Secretary of the Interior had not suggested an amendment, offered an amendment providing that that preferential right to purchase could not be exercised at less than the appraised value, very much improving the bill. I only call attention to this to show that this House would make a most serious mistake if it would assume that it has no duties to perform in the examination of legislation because some department official has not recommended an amendment, and that therefore the House ought not to propose an amendment.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I could read from the RECORD of a few days ago where the gentleman from Wisconsin not only wanted to have a bill reported upon favorably by the department before it was acted upon here but where he took up the bill and said every amendment ought to be acted upon by the department, and now the gentleman comes in here and says it is not necessary for us to have a report from the department.

Mr. LENROOT. I did not, and the gentleman knows I did not, make any such statement.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I understood the gentleman to say that,

Mr. LENROOT. Certainly not. This House is entitled to a report upon every bill, having the best judgment of every department that has jurisdiction of the bill, but this House, I hope, is not bound by the report and is free to make any changes in reference to any bill that it sees fit.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. The gentleman and I agree perfectly about that, but I do not agree with him, even though this is an administration of the party to which I belong, that it is necessary, after a bill has been reported upon by a department of this Government, for this Congress to submit every amendment that every Member of the House or any member of the committee proposes to a bill to the head of some department.

Mr. LENROOT. No committee of this House, as this gentleman's committee did on this bill, should then mislead this House by stating in a report that it had been acted upon by the department when it had not.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. The gentleman did not make that statement the other day. What our committee report said was that a bill similar in text and substance was submitted to the Secretary of the Interior, and it was.

Mr. LENROOT. That is not the fact.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. It was.

Mr. LENROOT. It was not.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. The bill came back, and we offered amendments to it, which the gentleman himself will agree simply provided for a definition of the rights that existed between the lessee and the man who might purchase the land in the future, most of which probably would have been taken care of by operation of law, but which it was thought, after conference taken with all those interested, should be reiterated in order that there might not be any misconstruction, and that is the way the bill was amended.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill as amended, with the recommendation that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. POU, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 195, and had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendations that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded upon any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them in gross. [After a pause.] The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Speaker, I move to recommit the bill.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New York to recommit the bill.

The motion was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the passage of the bill.

The bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE TO EXTEND REMARKS.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I ask that all Members who have spoken on this bill be given the right to extend their remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent that all Members who have spoken on this bill have the right to extend their remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

FUNDS TO MAINTAIN ROADS, ETC., WITHIN INDIAN RESERVATIONS.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will proceed with the call.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I am authorized by the Committee on Indian Affairs to call up the bill H. R. 269, Calendar No. 66 on the Union Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The House automatically resolves itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] in the chair.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. FOSTER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 269) to authorize the advancement of funds to survey, construct, and maintain roads, trails, and bridges within Indian reservations.

Be it enacted, etc., That not more than the amount of the reimbursable appropriations made from time to time for such purposes may be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, for the survey, construction, improvement, and maintenance of roads, trails, and bridges within Indian reservations in the United States, when necessary for the use and development of the resources of such reservations and the advancement in civilization of the Indians residing thereon: Provided, That when, in the opinion of the Secretary of the Interior, the construction or improvement of any proposed road or bridge within or across any Indian reservation will not be chiefly for the benefit of the Indians of such reservation, the said Secretary is hereby authorized to enter into a cooperative agreement, conditioned upon its approval by Congress, with the State or county wherein such reservation or some part thereof is located for the survey, construction, improvement, or maintenance of such road or bridge upon a basis equitable to both the State or county and the Indians: Provided further, That the aggregate expenditures of the United States within any Indian reservation shall not exceed 25 per cent of the value, as determined by the Secretary of the Interior, of the timber, mining, forage, and other resources which are or will be available for income from the unallotted lands within the reservations wherein the roads, trails, or bridges will be constructed or improved, and the Secretary of the Interior shall make annual report to Congress of the amounts expended under authority of this act: And provided further, That no reimbursable appropriation shall be made under authority of this act which conflicts with existing treaties or agreements with Indians: And provided, however, That whenever practicable preference shall be given to Indians when labor is employed on any work done under authority of this act.

SEC. 2. That whenever expenditures are made under authority of this act within any Indian reservation not less than 10 nor more than 20 per cent of the money thereafter received from the sale of timber, from grazing permits, from mining leases, from the sale of unallotted lands, or from the disposal of any other resources of the unallotted lands within such Indian reservation shall be paid annually into the Treasury until the United States is reimbursed for the total amount of expenditures made under authority of this act for the construction, improvement, and maintenance of roads, trails, and bridges within such reservation.

SEC. 3. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to prepare and submit to Congress plans for the construction or improvement of roads, trails, and bridges which in his opinion are necessary for the use and development of the resources of any or all of the Indian reservations in the United States and the advancement in civilization of the Indians residing thereon, together with estimates of the cost of constructing or improving said roads, trails, and bridges; and the said Secretary shall also submit an estimate of the value of the timber, mining, forage, and other resources that are or will be available for income from the unallotted lands within each Indian reservation.

SEC. 4. That tribal or trust funds may be appropriated by Congress to carry out the purposes of this act whenever the same may be used without violating existing treaties or agreements with the Indians.

The committee amendment was read, as follows:

Page 3, line 3, after the word "than," strike out the word "ten" and insert the word "five."

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, in view of the agreement that has been reached I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. FOSTER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration the bill H. R. 269, had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, may I ask unanimous consent that on Friday, following the speech of Mr. MILLER of Washington, Mr. FREAR of Wisconsin be allowed to speak for 40 minutes on the President's message relative to the consolidation of appropriations in the hands of one committee, not to interfere with privileged business?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that on Friday next, at the conclusion of the remarks of the gentleman from Washington [Mr. MILLER] the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR] shall be permitted to proceed not to exceed 40 minutes in discussing the suggestion in the President's message that all appropriations ought to be consolidated in the hands of one committee. Is there objection?

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I understand that is subject to the provision that it is not to interfere with the appropriation bills and privileged matters.

Mr. GILLETT. Certainly; not to interfere with privileged business.

The SPEAKER. Not to interfere with privileged matter. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

FUNDS TO MAINTAIN ROADS, ETC., WITHIN INDIAN RESERVATIONS.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the bills now on the calendar which are in order on Calendar Wednesday are disposed of that the bill which we have just a moment ago considered in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union—H. R. 269—be in order on Calendar Wednesday.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] asks unanimous consent that when all the bills that are now in order on Calendar Wednesday are disposed of that the bill which has just been called up—H. R. 269—shall be in order on Calendar Wednesday. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Help us to turn back to Thee for Thy guidance and Thy blessing, that all things may be done according to Thy will, and that speedily we may come again to the glory of God on earth, that brings peace and good will to men. For Christ's sake. Amen.

WAR AGAINST AUSTRIA—PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I wish to make a statement at this time. I do not think there will be any objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the Senator from Iowa will proceed.

Mr. KENYON. At the time of the vote on the joint resolution declaring war on Austria I was unable to be present for reasons over which I had no control. Had I been present I should have voted for that resolution. I also want to say that I was not in a position where I could send any message asking to have my position announced. I merely put this statement in the RECORD as no one announced how my vote would be on the joint resolution. I had started from over the sea in plenty of time to reach Washington by the date the vote was taken. Our boat was nearly five days delayed in crossing the ocean, so I failed to reach here in time, which I much regret. No wireless messages were sent from the boat, so I could not wire to have my position announced.

SHORTAGE OF COAL.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, I have a communication in the nature of a memorial bearing upon the coal situation. I understand that the Committee on Manufactures are conducting an investigation into that subject, and if the Chair will indulge me, I merely desire to say that in the observations which I made last August, I think, when the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] had the matter up, I warned the Senate that we were trifling with a situation that was fraught with great danger to the American people, particularly in the North and Northwest, and that when winter came we would find ourselves in a very serious situation.

I wish to say this morning that that situation confronts us now; that people in the State of Michigan are suffering from lack of coal; that the ordinary avenues of distribution have been dried up through some officialism that I do not quite understand, and instead of making use of these avenues of distribution which it has taken years to build up and perfect they have actually been tied up and their facilities not used to distribute coal intelligently and systematically to the people who are in dire need of it.

I think the situation in the Northwest is positively pathetic, indeed; it is criminal to think that Congress has taken no forward practical step in attempting to avoid a difficulty so serious and so far-reaching as that.

It is perfectly idle to carry on an investigation in midwinter, with the thermometer standing at zero, and to undertake to warm the people by good intentions.

I want again to assert what I said last August, that that situation demanded then the attention of the American Congress and of the American Government. To put entire strangers in control of a great commodity like coal, and to undertake to acquaint them with the vast details and make them familiar with the ordinary avenues of distribution is one of the causes that has brought about a situation so pathetic and criminal.

I desire to protest against the governmental laxity and the failure of our officers to comprehend the situation which now confronts us. I know of communities where children have recently died from cold and exposure. It is a shame and a disgrace to think that Congress, though all-powerful, should not have asserted itself in some manner that would give to the people this very necessary article to warm them and comfort them and feed them at a time when the need was so great.

Mr. President, I voice a general indignation among the people of my own State and of other States in the Northwest who are to-day unprepared to meet the cold and the danger that hovers over them.

I do not know what good this statement will do—probably none—but if heeded it would have done good last August. Men who have built up great coal facilities for 30 years and know the ordinary avenues of distribution and possess the facilities of distribution are ignored by a theoretical coal dictator in his vain attempt to create new agencies. I protest against it.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator fron Massachusetts?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. WEEKS. I should like to call the attention of the Senator from Michigan to the fact that these matters were brought to the attention of the department of the Government as long ago as last August, repeatedly so by New England Senators and Representatives, and they were informed that there would be a certainty of a shortage of the coal supply unless methods were adopted to prevent it. Those methods evidently have not been adopted, if the statement which the Senator from Michigan makes is correct, and I have no doubt that it is, because the same general statement would apply to the New England situation as well.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I know the interest the Senator from Massachusetts took in the matter at that time, and I am well aware of the zeal, the commendable zeal, shown by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE]. But of what avail.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Certainly.

Mr. PITTMAN. I am informed that the shortage of coal is due more largely to faulty distribution than production, although that is immaterial, the hardship being the same in either case. But I assume that if there is a failure of transportation the Senator from Michigan would go as far as any Senator on the floor to remedy that fault of transportation.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Yes; but if the Senator from Nevada will pardon me, if there is going to be no more system nor any better results obtained from taking charge of the transportation interest of the country, and taking the railroads out of the hands of experienced men who have devoted their lives to that service, then I look with great fear upon any proposition which will governmentalize the railroad systems of the country.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. If the Senator will pardon me a moment, there is no high-grade inspection of coal to-day. Slate that is noncombustible is sold to people for coal. All ordinary regulations have fallen down. Fifteen per cent of the coal now being sold is noncombustible and will do no one good. The governor of a great State, Gov. Cox, of Ohio, brought the matter acutely before the country only a day or two ago; and when Gov. Cox seizes the shipments passing through the great State of Ohio, who is to say that the people farther north are not to be deprived of those shipments? There is a lack of system and orderly procedure. Men unfamiliar with the business are directing it. I think it reflects no credit upon our Government. It is a despicable shame to think that the ordinary avenues of distribution should be dried up and official anesthetics administered to horses and men, paralyzing their usefulness to the country when they are needed most.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President——

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I feel, Mr. President, that Congress has neglected its duty. I warned the Senate last summer what the situation would be. Here we are in the midst of this distress, where people are dying for want of coal to heat their homes, and no remedy.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Yes. I have no right to occupy the Senate floor. I do it only by the indulgence of the Chair, and I little thought that I would drift so far into this subject, but advices from my State this morning touch my heart to its very depth. Whilst scientists and literary men and mathematicians are figuring out how our people can be saved, they are suffering. Great captains of distribution are being supplanted by experimentalists; these practical men, expert in their vocations, are not wanted; their usefulness is impaired. I think they are just as patriotic as the men who are directing the situation to-day. I know one institution that for 40 years has been conducted in the Middle West that supplies 50,000 regular customers with coal every year, and its horses and its vehicles are unused now in midwinter, waiting, waiting, waiting, for a board, created by governmental decree, which has shown itself to be utterly incompetent to grapple with this situation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Certainly.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I must say that the condition which the Senator describes is deplorable; but the question is as to a remedy. I want to suggest to the Senator that a remedy which seems to me is very apparent could be enacted by the Congress of the United States. We have, for instance, in the State of Colorado 371,000,000,000 tons of coal that can not be touched. We have in the State of Wyoming 449,000,000,000 tons of coal.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Where is it—in the Government reserves?

Mr. SHAFROTH. It is in the Government reserves. There is now on the calendar and pending before the Senate a bill on the subject which we hope to get up as soon as the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] finishes the water-power bill in his charge. We believe that the passage of that bill will afford the solution of the problem. There is enough coal in Government lands in the State of Wyoming to supply the world for 450 years, and there is enough in Colorado to supply the world for 371 years.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Well, Mr. President, I am more concerned about supplying the world with coal now, during this winter.

Mr. SHAFROTH. If we permit these lands to be taken up and the coal to be mined—and I hope the Senator will cooperate with us in the movement for the passage of the bill for that purpose which we hope to bring before the Senate—I am satisfied it will do more to ameliorate the condition of the shortage of coal than the passage of any other one measure which we might enact.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The other day I passed through Ohio and I saw at Toledo and other cities through Ohio the sidings were literally clogged with cars loaded with coal which, if distributed, would have warmed the people and would have saved human life. Why was it there undelivered to the consumer? Not because our railroad facilities were lacking, but because those in charge of the distribution of coal had not yet made up their minds to whom that coal should be consigned. That is the plain unvarnished truth about it.

Mr. President, I rose this morning only to express the indignation of my heart that this situation should be permitted to exist in the dead of winter with the thermometer hovering around zero. No relief can be given to great communities of the West, which are so dependent upon the fuel supply.

If I had my way about it, I would have early exempted every man who worked in a coal mine from military service; I would have assured ample labor at the mines; then, by orderly procedure, through the customary avenues of distribution, so well known in every community, distributed the coal to the homes of the poor and the rich alike, thus saving human life and reflecting some credit upon a Government that is and should be solicitous for the welfare of its people.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, if there is one family in the State of Michigan that is without a sufficient supply of coal, it is one family too many.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. It is.

Mr. POMERENE. The conditions which the Senator from Michigan has described somewhat surprise me, for this reason: In the latter part of November it was stated in the public prints in Ohio that the total amount of coal for consumption in the Northwest which should be moved by lake traffic would amount to about 26,000,000 tons, and that at the time these statements were made it was said 23,000,000 tons had already been transported to the Northwest. If that is not true, then I am very much disappointed. While this movement of the coal was going to the Northwest the people in Ohio were largely without coal. Even my city of Canton, which has coal all around it and even under a part of it, was without coal.

Where does the fault lie? I wish I could tell exactly. I know where it in part lies. I am satisfied that I am right when I say that in the first instance there was a conspiracy between some of the coal operators to make the supply scarce for the purpose of advancing the price and making the Government administration break down. In fact, my information on that subject comes from a friend who talked with one of the operators who was present at a coal operators' convention.

Again, I know that some of these operators, even after the Government had fixed the prices of coal, were refusing to deliver coal unless they got a price in advance of that which was fixed by the Government. That of itself was a violation of the law recently passed.

The Senator from Michigan says the railroad tracks in Ohio are crowded with loaded coal cars that are not being moved. He underdescribes rather than overdescribes the situation. I was told only yesterday that the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad had more than one-half of its cars on different sidings, and perhaps on the main tracks, loaded with coal, and they were not moving. It was claimed that it was because of the lack of motive power. On yesterday, I believe, the governor of Ohio commandeered a lot of this coal. He perhaps had no authority to do it, but he did it. Yesterday morning the president of the Ohio State University, Dr. W. O. Thompson, one of the great university presidents of the country, wired me that they were out of coal, or substantially out of coal, and that unless they received additional coal the university would have to close on Monday. They have more than 5,000 students there, and 250 or 300 aviation students are taking their preliminary training on the college campus. Their quarters were cold. I am glad to say that I took this matter up with the authorities here, and last night I received another telegram from Dr. Thompson stating that 10 cars of coal had been ordered to the university. That is only one instance of many that I might give.

I think the railroads are somewhat to blame for this condition; the operators also are somewhat to blame for it; and some time ago it was charged that some of the miners in southeastern Ohio were in part to blame for it; but it is a burning shame that in a great State like Ohio, with our coal deposits there, our people should be freezing because of the lack of coal. I hope, if the committee can discover the secret of the failure to meet the demand for coal they will make it known.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, the railroad locomotives are unable to get their required steam power from much of the coal that they are obliged to use, and our ships at sea and our battleships and cruisers are unable to make the time which they would ordinarily make because of the quality of the fuel with which they are being supplied. I quote from the Detroit Free Press of this morning, as follows:

> Suffering was intense throughout the city all yesterday and last night. Frantic householders called vainly on a police department utterly powerless to find coal for all who were without or to find means of delivering it were the coal available.
> FUEL OFFICES CLOSE; MERCURY DROPS.
> Fuel dealers simply closed up shop. They had no coal, and human nerves are not equipped to bear up indefinitely under the pleas of mothers and fathers desperately seeking means to shield their little ones from the biting cold.

These avenues of distribution should not have been dried up; that is my complaint. Taking the business out of the hands of the men who are familiar with it and who know their respective communities was not a wise thing. Whoever is responsible for doing that has a tremendous responsibility upon his conscience and must answer for much of the suffering that our people are enduring to-day.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I wanted to ask the Senator some questions while he was proceeding, but I always hesitate to interrupt a long-distance communication. I would have preferred to have the Senator suggest some remedy. He has had this matter under consideration since last August. Last August he warned this body, so he states, of these very conditions; and yet since last August we have waited in vain for legislation of a constructive character to be suggested by the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, as the Senator knows, the Government took this matter into its own hands through its executive departments, but if I had been permitted to do anything about it at all I would have kept open the ordinary avenues of distribution. That is the true solution, from my point of view, of much of the individual suffering of householders throughout my State.

Mr. PITTMAN. I am glad that the Senator has suggested that; in fact, I thought that his extensive investigation last August would give him some information on this subject. I am pleased to know that he advises us that he is under the impression that these conditions are due to improper distribution. While the suffering people are entitled to the sympathy of everyone, and have it, I think it is unfortunate that this sympathy should be coupled with a constant expression of sympathy for the captains of industry. I feel that possibly the Senator's remarks would have more bearing if his attack upon somebody were not constantly coupled with a defense of the captains of industry.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The Senator could not have gathered any such impression from anything I said.

Mr. PITTMAN. I understood the Senator to say that the Government had been taking away from these business men—"these great captains of industry" were the words he used——

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I did not say that—wait a moment.

Mr. PITTMAN. The control over matters they understood.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. If the Senator will be fair about it, I did not say that; I spoke of the distributing sources in the various States. They are not captains of industry; most of them are men of very moderate means, and all they have is tied up in their yards, their vehicles, their horses, and the coal they buy for distribution in the winter. That is the type of people that I would have utilized not in making the price but in the distribution of coal.

Mr. PITTMAN. I think the RECORD will bear me out, and I leave it to the RECORD, and those may read it who have any doubt on the subject, that in criticizing the Government the Senator used the words "captains of industry" time and again; that he charged that the Government was taking business out of the hands of men who understand business; that it was taking out of the hands of the great captains of industry the business that they understand.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, does the Senator admit that the Government has taken it out of their hands?

Mr. PITTMAN. No; they have not taken it out of their hands; but if the Congress will stand back of the Government, instead of criticizing the Government, they will take it out of the hands of the inefficient managers of the railroads, who are responsible for the very crimes that are now being committed against the people of this country.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The Senator from Nevada is usually a fair man and knows that from the time this war started I have never criticized the Government here nor in any other place, and I do not criticize the Government now, except where it has utterly failed. I have supported the President without hesitation in all that he has asked. I accord to him the highest motives, the most transcendent ability, and the greatest patriotism; and the Senator from Nevada, even though he and I differ in politics, has no higher respect for or more confidence in the President of the United States than I have; but I say that something is wrong with the coal administration. Does not the Senator admit it?

Mr. PITTMAN. Absolutely; and I think that I——
